The daily newspaper deals with the world of realities—and its trade and merchandising are very much realities. Just as the newspaper presents the "spot news" of the world, so it presents the "spot news" of the stores and of products and commodities. When a product is advertised in a newspaper the reader not only considers the selling argument presented, but he learns just where, in his own city, the product may be purchased. Magazines and periodicals of general circulation cannot render either to the manufacturer or to the consumer this vital part of advertising service. They cannot link the local dealer with the national advertising. The newspapers can and do, thus giving the advertising in their columns that immediate service-value to readers which accounts for its superior effectiveness.

Most of the periodicals and magazines of large circulation deal, in their contents, with the world of unrealities—with the puppet folks of the novelists and the poets. The cultural side of magazine and periodical literature is not under debate. But when it is urged that the appeal of advertising, presented in conjunction with literary material, is on a par with the appeal of advertising when it is presented in conjunction with—actually as a part of—the news of the day, the contention is wholly unsound.

If we take that fellow this line of magazine logic as to the longer "life" of advertisements, then the ideal advertising medium would be a publication issued annually!

THE British Institute of Journalists has asked the associations of newspaper proprietors to grant to them a minimum wage double that prevailing before the war. They believe that such an increase would account for the difference between the purchasing power of money then and now. The British journalists are undertaking negotiations with publishers and hope to come to an amicable agreement. There is no mention made of any recourse to compulsory measures. This is quite in line with the new spirit which is finding only too infrequent expression among organized workers. It exists, however, and will grow.

JOHN SULLIVAN, whose weekly page of A N A. News and Views was resumed in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER, emphasizes anew the fact that buyers of advertising are growing more and more competent for that task. He quotes President McDermid as saying to a group of special representatives recently that salesmen for newspaper advertising space should have something more to offer than "that bromidic parkage, the circulation."

DISPOSITION LANDS ARMSTRONG BACK ON COAST

DISPOSITION, medium" is tucked away somewhere in a big book of facts that contains the name of C. L. Armstrong, advertising man of varied experience, and that may explain why he has been placed in charge of the department of plans and merchandise of the Izzard Company, of Seattle—not the statement but the disposition.

C. L. Armstrong

His disposition is backed by blue eyes and curly hair and he is married. Mr. Armstrong's work has called him from coast to coast and to defend his principles he went overseas. For a time he was connected with the Bates Advertising Agency, at Boston; afterward he free lanced in Montreal and Toronto; then, with R. A. Hutchison, he founded the Hutcharm Company, of Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle and Calgary—it was afterwards Hntcharm, Ltd. He had charge of all copy, plans and merchandising for that organization.

From 1915 to 1917, Mr. Armstrong was with a Scottish Unit of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, joining as a private and winning a commission. He was invalidated out of the service with a pension as a result of disabilities incurred during the first Battle of the Somme in 1917. Upon his return from "over there" he was made publicity commissioner for the city of Victoria, and resigned to join the copy department of Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago. Before leaving to acquire an interest in the Izzard Company he was associate copy director.

He is aged 34, back on "the coast" and happy.

COUNTRY NEWSPAPERS ARE LOSERS BY CONCEALING OWN VALUES

Adoption of Standard Rate Card Would Enable Agencies to Include Many More in National Campaigns, Says Secretary of A. A. A. A.

THE Navy's paid- advertising campaign for recruits which is now under way—the biggest newspaper campaign, in scope, in history—is going to be the means of a better understanding between the country newspapers of the United States and the advertising agencies.

This is the belief of James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, which, as "The Advertising Agencies Corporation," is conducting the campaign for the Navy.

"Papers Themselves Are to Blame"

"If country newspapers don't get all the advertising that is coming to them hereafter, it is their own fault," said Mr. O'Shaughnessy. "We receive a good many complaints at the main office of the A. A. A. A. from small-town papers that believe they are being neglected when a big campaign is put on, but the real explanation of this usually is that such papers have kept their existence a secret.

"There are thousands of dollars at A. A. A. A. headquarters right now that would be invested in country newspapers if only they would enable this office to get acquainted with them.

"What I mean is that in order to include them in a campaign, we should first have certain data and facts regarding them and so far, they have been remiss in not supplying this.

Hard to Convince Them

"Why don't all the small-town newspapers adopt the standard rate eard and so enable all the agencies to sell their space for them, intelligently? It is a difficult task to get them to do this obviously practical thing. Recently, I circularized all of them, and spent seven cents to tell each one all about the standard rate card, but most of them were not interesta.

"One letter I got recently was from the editor of a Texas weekly, asking why he never got any advertising from members of our association. He enclosed a rate card on which there were just three pieces of information—the name of his paper, the name of the town where it was printed, and his transient advertising rate.

"I wrote back that this information was not enough to enable an advertising agency to make intelligent use of his columns, and I told him what additional data was needed. This letter must have offended him for he hasn't answered it."

The Navy Campaign

Mr. O'Shaughnessy said the Navy's campaign is progressing favorably and there are many indications that it will be a big success. It started September 24 and will continue until the latter part of November.

The number of daily papers being used is 2,166, and the number of country weekly papers, 5,240. This includes every local daily and weekly paper over 1,000 circulation, printed in the English language in the United States. The total circulation of all publications used in the campaign is more than 35,000,000. Forty-one tons of electrotypes were supplied these papers. Never before have so many newspapers been used in a single schedule.

PLANS AERO DELIVERY

Express Service to Distribute in Neighboring Countries Proposed

Government subsidies for fast airplane mail service to neighboring countries for the purpose of enabling German newspaper publishers to land their morning papers in the principal cities and towns of Holland, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Hungary and the Scandinavian countries on the day of publication is a form of propaganda strongly recommended by a writer in the Berlin Vossiche Zeitung of July 12.

He takes Holland as an example of the need of this service, and points out that the Dutch are well supplied with English and French papers, frequently forwarded by airplane. Some German publishers are making an attempt to eomnete in quick deliveries by using their own planes, but the writer insists that they cannot keep this up and that the only remedy is a speeial airplane newspaper mail servioe at low rates.

Error Costs Paper $250 Damages

MONTREAL, Oct. 12.—P. Girardin has been awarded $250 damages and costs in a libel action against La Patrie Publishing Company. A Modern King Canute

The people who lived in the good days of the wise King Canute thought he had the power to make the ocean recede at a mere word of command. Today the Bell Telephone Company finds itself in a position not unlike that of the ancient king. Its mere word will not hold back an ocean of expense.

Rigid economy and the most modern methods of operation have made it possible for the Bell Company to keep its rates at a far lower level than that of the commodities which it must use in construction and upkeep. But it has felt the rising tide of eosts just as certainly as has every business and every family.

The one source of revenue of the Bell Company is the price you pay for servicе. If this price fails to cover fair wages and necessary materials, then both you and your telephone company must suffer.

For one year the Bell Company was under Government control. The Government analyzed methods and costs; and established the present rates as just. All the Bell Company asks is a rate sufficient to provide satisfactory service to every subscriber.

WESTERN OFFICE FOR A. N. P. A. AD BUREAU

Immediate Opening Authorized by Committee in Charge—Meeting and Conference with A. A. A. A. in Boston

BOSTON, Oct. 15.—Today's meeting of the committee in charge of the A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising was well attended. W. F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, chairman, presided. There were present: William Findlay, Toronto Globe; John B. Woodward, Chicago Daily News; David B. Plum, Troy Record; Louis Wiley, New York Times; M. D. Hunton, New York; Col. G. Edward Buxton, Providence Journal; Frank P. Glass, of the Birmingham News, president A. N. P. A.; L. B. Palmer, general manager of the A. N. P. A.; William A. Thomson, director of the Bureau, and his associate, Thomas H. Moore.

The present financial condition of the Bureau was a cause for rejoicing. It was unanimously voted to open a Chicago office of the Bureau and Director Thomson was authorized to secure a good location and appoint a Western representative.

The questions of standard rate card and order blank, agency commission and other vital subjects, were very freely discussed.

PUBLISHERS ARE HOSTS TO AGENCY MEN of success, in order that the Government may soon become the greatest advertiser in the country.

Lieut.-Commander L. E. Denfeldt, of the Navy Recruiting Service here, said that the Navy's condition is critical for lack of men and that advertising is vital because so few men know the Navy's advantages. He urged the active interest and co-operation of all publishers in making it plain to the people that the Navy is a big vocational school, that an able ambitious young man may learn a good trade in short time while seeing the world. "The Navy needs young men to man your battleships and destroyers," he said, and he made it clear that the eyes of official Washington are on this campaign.

Col. G. Edward Buxton, Jr., treasurer of the Providence Journal and Bulletin, who served in the 82nd Division during the war, said that there are now few requests received by his paper for "thinly disguised advertising masquerading as news." Printing such matter, he said, injures the prestige of a newspaper, and once prestige and public confidence are gone a newspaper is about as valuable as a dodger thrown over the back fence.

Buxton Tells of Heroes

All publishers, he said, prefer standardization in the interest of efficiency, good will and greater profit. The acid test of a newspaper, he said, is service and value.

Col. Buxton told, at the request of the toastmaster, of the unconquerable spirit of American boys in the battles of the Argonne and of the exploits of Sergeant York and other heroes of his division. It was a thrilling and inspiring talk. It was announced by the toastmaster that the Colonel has just completed a history of the 82nd Division.

Harry Dwight Smith was the last speaker. He stressed the commercial value of the real "get together" spirit and bespoke a better understanding for the good of advertising.

The famous menu was as follows:

Cape Cod Oysters
Cocktail Bonze
Boston Clam Chowder
Mixed Sea Grill
New England Succotash a la Creole
Toasted Johnny Cake
Old Fashioned Pumpkin Pie
Coffee

Among those present were:

H. E. Ayres, H. W. Allen, Otis H. Adams, Chas. K. H. Bunting, J. Wesley Barber, Harold P. Barber, John D. Bogart, James Wright Brown, George F. Booth, W. A. Brownell, G. Edward Buxton, Jr., W. O. Bryan, O. H. Blackman, Frank B. Baldwin, Russell Bacon.

NEW DAILY FOR NORFOLK

News, Democratic, Will Soon Appear in Morning Field

NORFOLK, VA., Oct. 13.—This city is to have a new morning paper as soon as an application for a charter, which has been made by the Norfolk News Publishing Corporation, has been granted by the state corporation commission. The paper, it is understood, is to be Democratic. It will enter the morning field now occupied by the Virginia-Pilot, which is also Democratic.

In the application for charter, W. R. Wilson, formerly associated with the New York Times, is named as president; H. M. Huppell, of Norfolk, who was head of the Red Cross work there during the war, is vice-president, and B. Gray Tunstall, the city treasurer, is secretary and treasurer. Minimum capital is $100,000; maximum, $500,000.

S. N. P. A. Meeting on October 21

Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 15.—A meeting of the executive committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association has been called to meet at the Hermitage Hotel, in Nashville, on October 21. The legislative committee, as well as the newsprint committee and the advertising committee, will probably meet at the same time. A number of matters of importance will be up for consideration.

Van Burne and Tims Promoted

New Orleans, Oct. 15.—J. A. Van Burne has been appointed business manager of the Times-Picayune, succeeding John L. Ebaugh, resigned, and John F. Tims, Jr., becomes advertising manager in Mr. VanBurne's place.

ILLINOIS

CORPUS CHRISTI PAPER BACK IN FORM

Part of the Caller's Plant Was Wrecked, But It Only Missed Two Issues—Hedges City Editor

While the first floor of its new building was practically wrecked and the large press was under water for ten hours during the tropical storm that swept the Texas Gulf coast in September, the Corpus Christi Caller only missed two issues. However, for the first few days after the storm the paper appeared only as a one sheet broadside.

The broadsides carried all the latest news and lists of the storm casualties and were read eagerly by the Caller's many subscribers. The only days on which the Caller missed were September 15, the day immediately following the storm, and Sunday, September 21.

The business office of the Caller was wrecked by the storm and the loss in furniture, files, records and white paper was very large. Owing to the fact that the city plants were practically destroyed, the Caller was without light, gas and power for two weeks.

On September 22, publication of the Caller as four-page daily began in the plant of the Record at Kingsville, forty miles from Corpus Christi and continued until September 30, when publication was resumed in the home plant. More than six hundred lives were lost in the storm at Corpus Christi and the property loss is reported to have been in excess of $20,000,000.

The Caller, now back to its old form of service, reports the following changes in its staff since the storm: Frank H. Hedges, formerly with the Miami (Okla.) Record has been appointed city editor, and Walter F. Doney has been appointed classified advertising manager, succeeding Frank H. Scott, resigned.

TO FIND ADVERTISING JOBS

S. DeWitt Clough Will Aid Discharged Soldiers and Sailors

CHICAGO, Oct. 14—The Advertising Post of the American Legion has appointed an employment committee, of which S. DeWitt Clough, 4757 Kenwood avenue, is chairman. The object of this committee is to fill, so far as possible, vacancies in advertising jobs, with service men, having the proper qualifications and experience to fill these positions. The Government Employment Bureau for Returned Soldiers and Sailors has had few openings for high class advertising men. There is a need for a clearing house in Chicago, which will bring together employers and advertising men seeking positions, and the employment committee of the American Legion will try to fill it.

Col. W. D. Mann 80 Years Old

HAGUE, N. Y., Oct. 12.—Col. William D'Alton Mann, who has had been in editorial work since 1867 and owner and editor of Town Topics since 1801, has just celebrated his eightieth birthday anniversary at Sauterer's Rest, his summer home here, following his return from Detroit where he attended the annual reunion of the Custer Cavalry Brigade.

"Western Reserve" Has Ad Course

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 15.—The Western Reserve University opened an advertising course September 24. The course is conducted by the Cleveland Advertising Club, the faculty including Charles W. Meara, C. H. Handerson, and L. E. Honeywell. Mr. Meara is president of the club and advertising manager for the "Winton Six." University students taking this course will receive credit toward degrees. Classes meet Mondays and Wednesday evenings in the quarters of the Cleveland Ad Club, Hotel Statler. Men and women are eligible.

Helped Capture Bandits

ST. PAUL, MINN., Oct. 15.—Vincent O. Law, a reporter for the Pioneer Press, accompanied a squad of detectives in their pursuit of bandits who had just robbed two banks, and took part in the gun fight which resulted in the capture of the criminals. Mr. Law wrote a spirited account of the battle for his paper, saying it reminded him of the occasions when he faced the Germans in France.

Will Teach Journalism

The College of the City of New York has established a course in journalism at the Brooklyn branch of the college, in charge of Herbert L. Bridgeman, business manager of the Brooklyn Standard-Union, H. V. Kaltenborn, assistant managing editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, and Dr. Frederick B. Robinson, dean of the recently organized School of Business and Civic Administration.

Show Service in Ads

St. Louis, Oct. 4.—The Star of this city and the Chicago Evening American have been running large daily advertisements, emphasizing advertising as a time-saving service to readers. "Without advertising, you would have to visit a score of places, weighing and choosing, and then not being sure you had made the right selection at the most economical price," says the Star in a piece of current copy.

Ad Clubs Among Students

DES MOINES, IA., Oct. 13.—The Advertising Club is investigating the possibility of establishing Junior Ad Clubs in the local high schools. A committee consisting of Ed. Hopkins, of Successful Farming; E. F. Schwartz, of the Register and Tribune, and Paul M. Talbot, of Corn Belt Farming, has been appointed to look into the matter.

Paper Has Tractor Show

DECATUR, ILL., Oct. 15.—The Herald scored a big success recently with a farm power show it staged near this city, more than 2,000 farmers being present.

Besides exhibits of other farm machinery, there was a demonstration of plowing by eight makes of tractors.

NEWSPAPERS PROVE NOTE SELLERS

An Electric Railway & Light Company Finds Easiest Way of Selling $2,850,000 Notes to Public.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 15—The Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Company has sold $2,850,000 worth of notes by means of newspaper advertising.

The advertising cost $51,525.62 and office and other expenses amounted to $22,246.11, making the total cost $73,-771.83. The company hitherto has marketed its securities through banks.

A desire to have the public take a financial interest in the company, so as to diminish the hostility that is the common lot of public utility concerns, was the principal reason for selling through the newspapers.

The experiment was such a success, it is held by financial experts here, that it may be undertaken by public utilities in other cities—especially if enterprising newspaper advertising managers call the attention of officials of companies to the possibilities of the method.

The total amount of the note issue was $3,600,000. The other $750,000 worth was sold early in the campaign by means of a small field force, by circulars and by the sale of $400,000 worth to a Milwaukee bank.

There were 5,458 buyers, of whom 3,600 were residents of Milwaukee, 1,608 residents of other places in Wisconsin and 160 residents of other states. The number of women buyers was 1,394. The notes will mature in five years, and bear 7 per cent interest.

HELPING ADVERTISERS

South Bend Publishers Issue Special Information Paper for Them

SOUTH BEND, IND., Oct. 15—The News-Times, Jr., a monthly publication issued by the advertising department of the News-Times for the benefit of advertisers, has made its appearance. The News-Times, Jr., is a small four-page paper, printed on heavy book paper and will be mailed regularly without charge to all business houses in the city which use newspaper advertising space, whether it be large or small.

It is the plan of the publishers of this small newspaper to co-operate with the advertiser in every way possible for the purpose of making his advertising space just as profitable as possible.

The paper will contain helpful data of all kinds.

The Newswriters' Equity Association is planning a dance.

IN POLITICAL QUANDARY

Publisher Must Stand for or Against Sun in Montrose Campaign

SCRANTON, PA., Oct. 14—An interesting situation has developed in Montrose, Pa., where the Independent Republican was recently purchased by Dr E. R. Gardner. In the last political campaign Dr. Gardner's son, who ran for a county office, was beaten for the Republican nomination, yet was a victor on the Democratic side. As a result Dr. Gardner's newspaper, always a steadfast supporter of Republican candidates in the future, now faces a problem of opposing the candidacy of its owner's son, or withholding its support from the regular Republican nominee.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 12—The Mid-West News Bureau, covering the territory in and surrounding St. Louis, is a new organization launched by a group of local newspaper men. The concern will have offices in a downtown office building and will announce its plans and organization details within the next few weeks.

Editors in Libel Suit

Ferruccio Corradetti, of New York City, publisher of the official bulletin of the Italian Musical League, has been arrested in connection with a civil action for $25,000, brought by Alfredo Salmaggi, editor of Music and Musicians, who charged libel. The publisher was released on bail.

Georgia Soldiers Have Monthly

ATLANTA, GA., Oct. 12.—Application has been made for a charter for a monthly magazine to be printed here, known as the Georgia Ex-Serviceman. It will be the official organ of the American Legion in this state. The first issue will appear sometime this month.

Oldshue in Hungary

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 14.—Valentine J. Oldshue, former city editor of the Gazette-Times, who has been engaged in war activities overseas since 1915, is now at the head of the first Red Cross relief expedition that has entered Hungary. His charge consists of thirty-five cars filled with food and clothing for a new central Red Cross base.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Oct. 12.—A draft for $1,399.52 was mailed by the Kansas City Star to the trustees of the William Fitch Tanner children fund in Chicago. This represents the amount contributed to the children through the Star.

Look Ahead! Ask yourself this question:

Will factories in the future bring gas and coal and basic materials hundreds of miles and then distribute, or will they build their manufacturing plants near the mines and the sources of power in West Virginia?

People like to live where they can get steady work and earn a little more than they have to spend for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That they are already coming to West Virginia is shown by the multiplying industries of chemicals, glass, paper, pottery, etc.

Are you advertising in the newspapers in West Virginia and establishing yourself here in good time to PROFIT by the future as well as the present? Do it NOW!

LOVING CUP FROM A. A. A. A. TO WALTER BRYAN

ATLANTA, Oct. 10.—On the eve of Walter G. Bryan's leaving for New York, he was again surprised by token of appreciation from the Southern Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, represented in Atlanta by the Massengale Advertising Agency and the Johnson-Dallis Company.

W. R. Massengale and Ernest E. Dallis called at the Georgian office and presented Mr. Bryan with a handsome loving cup, suitably engraved, as an appreciation by the advertising agencies of his and the Georgian's work for better advertising and the co-operation given them during his four years in Atlanta. The members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association had previously presented Mr. Bryan with a silver service.

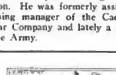
Publicity Is Now Blamed for Industrial Unrest

Agitators Used It and Industry Fails to Counter, Sphinx Club Is Told

The Sphinx Club of New York resumed activities for the 1919-20 season by holding its 163d dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday evening. Sherman Rogers, lumberman, and Bainbridge Colby of the U. S. Shipping Board were the principal speakers, the subject of discussion being "Industrial Unrest."

Lack of counteracting publicity to meet agitators' propaganda was declared by Mr. Rogers to be greatly to blame for present conditions. One point he made was:

"Because there was no counter publicity campaign to counteract the campaign of lies the Bolsheviats, the I. W. W.'s and the radicals grew bolder in Seattle and told the shipbuilders their employers were making $100 a day on each man's labor. This was believed. Right here in New York there are fifty publications doing the same work and accomplishing the same results as were accomplished in the West. You can see it on every side, yet there is not a move made to combat this influence."



Mr. Colby urged a firm stand in connection with present industrial unrest and declared that among the accepted axioms of other days which must be relegated to the scrap heap was that of labor's unqualified right to strike.

BOOKBINDERS SIGN UP FOR $6 INCREASE

Dry Goods Economist Comes Out in Mimeograph — Literary Digest Photographs Typewriting and Prints from Plates

The first hope of an early settlement of the printing trade labor disagreement, which has tied up the industry in New York since October 1, came Wednesday when Bookbinders Unions Nos. 1, 11, 22 and 119 signed new contracts with employers providing for a $6 weekly increase in pay for a 48-hour week; 44-hour week to become effective on May 1, 1921; and an advance of 17 per cent. in overtime piece work. These are among the unions that have been holding out, along with the compositors and pressmen, for $14 increase in pay and a 44-hour week immediately.

It was also announced by President Gootenson of the Hebrew Typographical Union No. 83 that the members had received from the Hebrew owners of job printing plants a $6 a week raise for a 44-hour week, to go into effect at once.

The members of Typographical Union No. 7, comprising the German compositors, had been granted a bonus by the German Herold so that their wage scale now practically equals that of the English compositors.

An appeal to President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor has been made by the international officers of the pressmen's, typographers, and stereotypers' and electrotypers' unions asking that the Central Federated Union of New York be compelled to rescind its resolutions of sympathy with the seceding unions of New York passed at a meeting last Friday, and that upon failure to do so its charter be revoked.

"Big 6" Will Arbitrate Wages

At a meeting of "Big 6" members, Sunday, the officers were instructed to arbitrate the $14 wage increase demand, but to "hold out" on the 44-hour week. It was also voted to return to the members the $100,000 strike fund that has been collected since October 1.

"Big 6" members are not on strike, but many who have not been laid off because of the shutting down of plants, due to the lockout of pressmen, are on "vacation," despite orders from their international union officers to stay at work.

The present attitude of the employers toward "Big 6" members was expressed by F. A. Silcox, representing the labor committee of the Printers' League, as follows: "As soon as the typographers make a request for a conference, we shall be ready to meet them."

Won't Recognize Pressmen

Regarding the pressmen, the Printers' League declares: "The employing printers have decided they will not hold any conferences or make contracts with any union not in good standing with its international and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. They intend to see this issue clear through to the finish. In this they have the backing and indorsement of the international unions of the American Federation of Labor. The situation is all a part of the general fight all over the country to determine whether agreements are to mean what they say and are to be kept in good faith or are to be mere scraps of paper.

"Members of the League have always operated union shops and they desire to deal with responsible unions, but have grown sick and tired of trying to do business under constant threat that if this or that is not immediately done there will be a walkout, strike or 'vacation.' There can be no compromise on the issue of keeping contracts or secession."

The most novel move since the printers' trouble began has been made by the Literary Digest, the October 18th number of which has been printed from photo-engravings of typewriting.

The Dry Goods Economist has been issued in mimeograph form, keeping up its record of 73 years without missing an issue.

MAINE PAPERS MUST ADVANCE PRICES

Warning of "Fatal Business Error" Sounded at Portland Convention —Don Seitz Tells of Newspaper Service

PORTLAND, ME., Oct. 11.—The annual meeting of the Maine Press Association, features of which were addresses by John C. Koons, first Assistant Postmaster General; Carter B. Keene, director of the Postal Savings System; and Don C. Seitz, business manager of the New York World, was held here Thursday and Friday.

Charles H. Fogg, publisher of the Aroostook Times, at Houlton, was elected president to succeed Charles F. Flynt, business manager of the Augusta Journal, who declined a re-election. Roland T. Patten, business manager of the Independent-Reporter, Skowhegan, was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

President Flynt in his opening address said the purpose of the meeting was to discuss business and make plans for the betterment of the advertising and printing business.

"Today we are passing through one of the greatest periods of labor and social unrest the world has ever witnessed," he said. "The newspapers particularly have been very hard hit with sharp advances in all materials and labor entering into the making of the newspaper. The Maine publishers cannot long continue in business at the old rates, either on subscriptions or advertising.

"This is a time when nearly all publishers outside of the State are advancing their subscriptions and advertising rates, and the Maine publisher who does not advance his rates, commensurate with his increased costs, will make a fatal business error."

Mr. Flynt then recommended that a legislative committee be appointed to go to the Legislature and look after the interests of the printers.

Seitz Makes Able Address

The names of Anson M. Goddard of Augusta, A. L. T. Cummings of Orono, Percy Whiting of Augusta and Walter A. Smith of Bucksport were accepted for membership in the association. Francis M. Joseph of Waterville spoke on "A Standard Price List for the Maine Jobbers" and his address was followed by discussion.

The out-of-town members were guests of the three local daily newspapers, the Daily Eastern Argus, Portland Press and the Express-Advertiser, at the banquet served Thursday evening at the Elks' Club.

Don C. Seitz, business manager of the New York World, who started his career in a humble capacity in the office of the Norway Advertiser, a Maine weekly paper, spoke on "The Newspaper and the Community."

Mr. Seitz said that in his soul he believed that the war between the states in this country was largely fostered by the newspapers of the North and South. "If they had told the facts," he said, "each of its own section and concerning the other section and had left out the fire eating and the shouting and evil ideas, I feel sure the country would not have had the Civil War."

Mr. Seitz's subject gave him a wide scope and he entered into an address which he appeared to enjoy equally as well as his audience. He told how the first newspaper was started in England and how at that time it was in the form of a written news letter in which the general doings of the city of London were detailed and passed about for those who desired to read. It was the idea of a woman which brought to the fore the printed newspaper. At first, and for a full 100 years there was only a weekly newspaper. Then came the daily, very small at first, but growing gradually up to the present big metropolitan sheet.

The newspaper for many years performed its proper function, that of a news and facts distributor, but in an evil day, he said, it became the organ of a cause and the agent of some political party or some political person. "Then," said Mr. Seitz, "it ceased to be a newspaper and became a partisan organ, a mere lobbyist and a bringer on of strife." It was at this point that the speaker made the remark that he believed the newspapers of the North and South were responsible for the Civil War.

Pulitzer Revived Ideals

"It was not until Joseph Pulitzer came into prominence in the newspaper field in 1878," said Mr. Seitz, "that the old ideas began to come back. Mr. Pulitzer brought back to life the idea that a newspaper was the servant of the community, that the press is or ought to be free, not in the sense of the word freedom for license, but in the sense that a newspaper ought to be free to tell all the public is entitled to know and the public is entitled to know everything."

Mr. Seitz then remarked that in some respects the papers of today are carrying this idea too far; they are telling too much. They have usurped the old-time stump speaker in the political field. The speaker gave a short account of the newspapers of half a century ago, and finally spoke of the local paper, stating that it had a field all its own. He told how to build up a newspaper by utilizing its full space for value either of news or of advertising that pays. "The trouble with editors," said Mr. Seitz, "is that they deal with men and not with objects."

Interesting talks on the postal service were given by First Assistant Postmaster General Koons and Carter B. Keene, director of postal savings and a native of Maine.

The greater part of the final session on Friday morning was taken up by an open discussion of the methods of running a country newspaper. The discussion was opened by Charles H. Fogg of Houlton, the newly elected president, who gave an interesting account of the financial methods of one country newspaper which he suffered to the members as a "horrible example" of inefficient business methods.

"Horrible" Business

At the end of the reading of his paper, it was not quite clear to those present whether this publisher whose methods were described had made a profit of a few dollars for his year's work or was owing money to himself.

Leon A. Gray gave an interesting account of his experiences the past six months in the publishing of a country weekly, the Lincoln County News at Damariscotta. He told his methods frankly and said he believed he had solved a problem which similar publishers had considered a bugbear.

President Fogg appointed an executive committee, consisting of Frank B. Nichols, of Bath, who also will be chaieman of the daily newspaper division, Fred B. Merrill, of Bethel, to be chairman of the country newspaper division, and Francis M. Joseph of Waterville, to be chairman of the job printing section, and the vice-presidents.

Association of Dailies Meets

PORTLAND, ME., Oct. 14—In order that the members might attend the annual meeting of the Maine Press Association here, the quarterly meeting of the Maine Daily Newspaper Association was held in this city Wednesday night.

The members of the association, which consists of the publishers and business managers of the daily newspapers of this State, were the guests of William H. Dow, business manager and treasurer of the Evening Express Publishing Company. They were entertained at the Elks' Club where the banquet and business meeting were held.

A shop-talk of some two hours was indulged in with mutual benefit, the dry edge being taken off the business discussions by the telling now and then of an amusing incident in the experience of the gentleman telling it. One of these was related by Colonel Charles H. Prescott, publisher of the Biddeford Journal.

Colonel Prescott told a story of a $30,000 dinner which he paid for in Brazil some four or five years ago while making a tour of South America. There were three persons in the party beside himself. He paid the price named for the dinner for the four and said he had eaten a good many better dinners. The amazement of his hearers became less, however, when he said that the $36,000 in Brazilian money equalled only about $6 in Uncle Sam's good money.

Connecticut Convention October 18

HARTFORD, CONN., Oct. 13—The Connecticut Editorial Association will hold its fourth quarterly meeting at Derby, Conn., on Saturday, October 18. Governor M. H. Halcomb will be the guest of honor, and the members will inspect the plant of the Connecticut Light and Power Co., at Stevenson, during the day.

CIRCULATORS CHANGE THEIR POSITIONS

Annenberg Goes to Philadelphia Press and Hasenack to New York Sun—New Posts for Barry and O'Connor

Several important circulation management interchanges became effective this week.

J. M. Annenberg resigns as circulation manager of the Albany Knickerbocker Press to take charge of circulation for the Philadelphia Press. He succeeds James Hasenack, who becomes circulation manager of the New York daily and Sunday Sun, relieving Edward Barry, who will hereafter be in full charge of the Evening Sun's circulation.

John W. O'Connor, who was Mr. Annenberg's assistant, becomes circulation manager of the Albany Knickerbocker Press.

CHICAGO BANK ADVERTISERS

Copy Handled From News Stand Point, With Striking Effect

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Dow, Jones & Co., the corporation which operates the Wall Street Journal and the News Bulletin Service in New York, has become active in the Chicago financial advertising field by handling the account of the new Great Lakes Trust Company. The work is in charge of Glenn Griswold, who for six years was financial editor of the American and the Tribune and left the latter institution July 1 to enter the advertising field.

Although not the first to embrace the theory, Mr. Griswold believes that bank advertising is bank news and that every advertisement is a story. The opening of the bank was widely advertised purely on its news merits.

MAKING NEWSPAPER STUDY

Several Publications Co-operating in Plan for Better Understanding

The Committee for Newspaper Research, formed by the Brooklyn Eagle, Minneapolis Journal, Des Moines Capital, Sacramento Bee, Milwaukee Journal and Omaha World-Herald—whose special representatives in New York are O'Mara & Ormsbee, Inc.—is engaged in the work of preparing, for publication in two parts, a study of newspaper advertising. The purpose of this research work is to serve as a sales argument for the newspapers concerned, but to promote a better understanding of the possibilities and costs of newspaper advertising in general, to throw light on dealer and consumer problems and to promote the improvement of typographical effects in newspaper advertising copy by showing examples of possibilities in this direction.

The preparation of the work is in direct charge of Merrill Rogers, secretary of the committee, with offices at 225 Fifth avenue, who will welcome the cooperation of those interested in adding to accumulated advertising knowledge.

Chinese Student Wins Bennett Prize

The James Gordon Bennett prize at Yale has been awarded for the year 1918-19 to Ch'en Chun, of Krashing, China, for his essay on "The Railway and the Government." The prize, which consists of the income from a fund of $1,000, was established in 1893 by the late James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald. It is given for the best essay upon a subject of contemporaneous interest in the domestic or foreign policy of the United States Government.

Wide-Awake Houston Man Uses Opportunity

Once-in-a-Century Date Combination "9-9-1919" Makes Hit for Houston House

HOUSTON, TEX., Oct. 14.—Commemorating that one period of a century when but two figures express the number of the month, the day and the year, viz.: 9-19-1919 a local dry goods firm made a decided hit with a display advertisement in the Houston newspapers on September 19. J. B. Westover, advertising manager, evolved the idea, which proved a success.

In the text it was stated that the last time a similar combination of figures could be made was August 18, 1818, and the next occasion such a combination can be used will be February 20, 2020. The sale which this advertisement heralded was unusual in the manner in which the prices were featured, as for example: 119 silk dresses in 1919 styles offered for $19.19.

Throughout the advertisement the combination of nine was thus used.

JULES VERNE OUTDONE

Strange Story Told Concerning Wealthy Reporter

"It is also alleged," says a story in the Rochester Post Express, "that $60 was stolen from the desk of a newspaper office here where Hazzard was employed as porter. The money represented the life savings of a news writer." It is also, we conjecture, alleged.

One envisages the Post Express office as that story was written. The reporter, in a prankish moment, added the last sentence; and the copy-reader didn't have the heart to eat it out.

But our City Ed. says it was the Post Express proofroom that erred. "Probably," he says, "it was $6."—F. P. A., in the New York Tribune "Conning Tower."

PLAIN DEALER STARTS NEW BUILDING

Plans to Double Size of Present Home, Which Has Been Outgrown in Ten Years—Hurrying for New Presses

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Oct. 13.—The Cleveland Plain Dealer will double the size of its present home, which was erected about ten years ago. Work was started last week in tearing down old buildings on the west side of the present Plain Dealer home, which is on the northwest corner of Superior avenue and East 6th street.

The new building will be a duplicate of the present structure in exterior appearance, but plans for the interior have not yet been completed. Work on the foundation and basement will be rushed so that new presses, now badly needed, may be installed as soon as possible.

SULLIVAN IN PORTLAND

A. N. A. Secretary Speaks Before the Kiwanis Club on "Advertising"

PORTLAND, ME., Oct. 11.—Members of the Kiwanis Club listened with much interest to an address by John Sullivan, secretary-treasurer of the National Association of Advertisers, on commercialism through advertising. Many of the phases of industrial business of all lines were presented by Mr. Sullivan in a clear-cut and definite manner. He declared that business concerns are learning that the fundamental success of their business is through advertising and that each concern or company must specialize and make a study of its business and articles advertised.

Many failures have been due, he said, to advertising when the heads of the company spent their monies without a study of market conditions.

AGENCY USES AIRPLANE

Takes Photographs from Sky of Real Estate for Advertisements

SEATTLE, OCT. 12.—The Strang & Prosser Advertising Agency here is making use of an airplane to take photographs from the sky of real estate offered for sale in newspaper advertisements by their clients. These photographs are reproduced in the ads.

Carrying the first shipment of any consequence of newspapers ever sent by airplane in the Southwest, a machine engaged by the Tulsa Democrat Printing Company arrived in Oklahoma City on September 30, with a thousand copies of the Democrat. It was the first day of the strike called by the typographical union. Leaving Tulsa soon right after the city edition was off the press the plant arrived at the state fair grounds and was met by Mayor Walton and other officials and citizens who expressed their appreciation of being given a chance to scan the world news during the period of their own newspapers' suspension.

"Ask us anything; we know."—So thoroughly has the information bureau of the Seattle Times been organized, with a resultant excellent service to the community, that it is an unusually important one in the newspaper. Every day questions pour in, ranging from a query as to the name of the prince who presides over the Native State of Hyderabad in India to the time of day. The daily mail brings dozens of letters from all parts of the Pacific Northwest.

The Houston (Tex.) Post employes' library has been opened by Roy C. Watson, president and publisher, to every paid-in-advance subscriber to the Post.

The St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch has started a contest on the question, "What Has America Meant to You?" Letters relating personal experiences are called for. A prize of $2 is offered for each letter deemed worthy of publication, and at the end $10 will be paid for the best one of the lot.

"Who's Who in Oil" is the head of a paragraph appearing daily in the Houston Chronicle giving a sketch of the life and accomplishments, along oil and other business lines of Houston men, accompanied by a picture of the subject.

The Houston Chronicle's Sunday picture-gravure section is printing the winning pictures entered in its recent photograph contest, which resulted in 400 pictures being submitted from all over the state. Fourteen prizes of $10 each were offered, seven going to professionals and seven to amateurs—$1 is to be paid each artist meriting honorable mention.

John A. Quaid of Bedford has been made a traveling representative of the Manchester (N. H.) Union-Leader.

The Houston Chronicle used two airplanes to distribute baseball extras between Houston and towns 150 miles away during the world's series.

Philippines May Supply Newsprint

Seattle, Oct. 12.—The Philippines are in a position to supply newsprint for export in large quantities, according to a report received by the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club. The director of the Bureau of Forestry of the Islands says the raw materials available, such as the bamboo and two kinds of grasses, the cogon and the talahib, are of such good quality and can be so cheaply secured that if this industry is given careful study the Islands will not need to import annually $2,000,000 worth of paper as heretofore but will be exporting about that quantity.

A Distinctive Feature

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin carries every day an amazing volume of "In Memoriam" advertisements, ranging from three to four columns. These are in addition to the usual death notices. The "human interest" element in advertising, as illustrated in these daily tributes by kin and friends, takes on a new significance. Obviously only a newspaper close to the hearts of the people could command such a volume of this class of advertising. The Bulletin makes no solicitation for this business.

Old Egypt in New York

The S. Anargyros Branch of The American Tobacco Company recently produced a new brand of cigarettes, "Old Egypt."

In marketing these cigarettes The American Tobacco Company, following a system, introduced them first in New York State.

They announced them through the daily newspapers of New York, and a sale was immediately created.

A cigarette smoker, seeing the advertisement, asked for them in a store, and was pleased with them.

A few days later he was in Washington, and asked for "Old Egypt" cigarettes and found that they had not been placed on sale in that city.

Here is the answer—in more ways than one.

The American Tobacco Company knows, of course, that New York State is the greatest market on earth. They know that men from all parts of the country are in New York State every day. There are enough important cities in New York State with a sufficiently varied industries to attract men from everywhere to New York. So, first there is the market already there; then there is the transient population. And these transients, returning to their homes, ask for the brand they found in New York, thus advertising the goods by word of mouth, everywhere.

It is as simple as A. B. C. and, to many it seems to be the one logical merchandising scheme.

Anyway, it is followed by people who have spent millions of dollars learning how to advertise.

These New York State newspapers are at your service with circulation and rates that make them particularly attractive, and they back distribution that adds to their value vastly.

FRAZIER HUNT

Who Got the Peace Treaty For the Senate

Will Cable World News

Frazier Hunt's stories to THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE from the Archangel front aroused American sentiment to demand the recall of our soldiers from Russia.

Frazier Hunt as a CHICAGO TRIBUNE correspondent was the first American to enter bolshevik Russia, interview Lenine and Trotsky, and write first hand reports of conditions.

Frazier Hunt achieved one of the greatest scoops of history by bringing the peace treaty to the TRIBUNE in Chicago and later presenting it to The Senate of the United States.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE is now sending Frazier Hunt around the world, via Japan, Siberia, China, Philippines, India, etc., with a commission to find live news about the world as remade by war, and to CABLE at least two stories a week.

A wonderful field is opened to this enterprising reporter.

Cables will be sent regardless of expense.

Hunt may be depended upon to find great stories and write them, as he has done on every assignment covered in the past.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania is proverbal for producing prodigious profits.

Pennsylvania people have been famous, for years, as people who grow rich rapidly.

The kind of fortunes made in Pennsylvania are, for the most part, the kind that are produced by labor.

The textile business, the iron industries, the steel industries, the coal mines and the great farms that make Pennsylvania so great are all propositions requiring great amount of labor.

This means that there are a tremendous number of people in Pennsylvania who work to produce the great wealth of the state.

They, in turn, are perhaps the best paid lot of workers in the country. This argues that they have ample means to gratify their desires for the good things of life, which in turn, means that Pennsylvania is a whale of a market for merchandise of all kinds.

Pennsylvania daily newspapers are producers. They are awake to their possibilities, and are constantly "on the job," ready, willing and able to cooperate with national advertisers in making themselves valuable in a business way.

These daily newspapers will produce handsome results for the money you spend with them in advertising.

EDITOR HENRY J. ALLEN HAD GOVERNORSHIP "THRUST UPON HIM" BY HOME FOLKS

Owner of Wichita Beacon Worked Hard to Win His Spurs as a Newspaperman, But Political Honors Came to Him Unsought—Built First Kansas Skyscraper as Home of His Newspaper

BY ELMER T. PETERSON

(EDITORIAL NOTE: Elmer T. Peterson, the brilliant young editor of the Wichita Beacon, who won for that paper the gold medal awarded by EDITOR & PUBLISHER for the best editorial on the Fourth Liberty Loan, has written—after much persuasion from this office—a simple narrative of the dramatic career of Governor Henry J. Allen, of Kansas. Mr. Peterson has felt that his close personal and professional relations with the Governor stood upon him a policy of studied moderation in estimating Mr. Allen's genius. Governor Allen is, at this moment, on outstanding figure in our national life, logically in line for the highest political honors. Yet he is of heart, by training and temperament, a newspaperman and would probably be happier in guiding the destinies of his newspaper than in a post of greater prominence but of less power. EDITOR.)

A YOUNG reporter crouched in the loft of an auditorium in a Kansas town, peering through a small ventilator shaft and listening intently to what was going on down below. In the arena down there was a state gathering of the Farmers' Allianee—that remarkable organization which gripped some of the plains states in the eighties and nineties.

It was a secret meeting, as were all the Alliance meetings in those days. Pass-words and secret "work" were employed with almost religious fervor, as in regulation "lodge" meetings. It was a heinous offense to give away the secrets, and representatives of the hated Republican party especially were anathema.

Why He Was in a Hurry

The next day, to the horror of the delegates, the Salina Journal, a Republican newspaper, came out with a complete account of the Alliance meeting. The young reporter had been unable to get the open covenants openly arrived at in the usual way, and so he went and opened the covenants himself, in his own way, by the expedient of secreting himself in the loft. Henry J. Allen had scored his first big "beat."

Skipping a few scenes in the play, let the curtain rise at Somsedieue, France, a few days after the signing of the armistice.

A divisional Y. M. C. A. director, with Argonne mud still on his uniform, is talking earnestly with Major General Traub of the 35th Division.

"I've got to go home right away, General."

"Why all this hurry?"

"Well, the people of Kansas have just elected me governor."

"The —— they have. How did they come to do that?"

Again Henry J. Allen had scored. He had been elected governor of Kansas by the biggest majority ever given a gubernatorial candidate, while he was in France with the Red Cross and the Red Triangle. He had been elected without having made a single political speech or written a single political letter or spent a single penny. All the work had been done by his friends. Again the versatile American system of government was functioning in its highly original way.

About ten or eleven years ago, after Henry J. Allen had been publishing the Wichita Beacon for two or three years, he looked at a livery stable on Main street. Hay was sticking out of the door of the mow. The rear end of the barn faced the Federal building, to the infinite disgust of the post-office employes. This monstrosity was only half a block from the busiest corner of the city, which was then a thriving place of 50,000 population.

First Skyscraper in Kansas

"There ought to be a ten-story building there," said Allen.

In the whole state of Kansas there was no building higher than five stories at that time. People haw-hawed and pooh-poohed. "What does a newspaper man know about business?" they scoffed. "And where will the money come from?"

He went ahead and organized the Beacon Building Company, and, sure enough, there was a ten-story building, the first "sky-scraper" in Kansas, on the site of the old livery barn. The offices were snapped up in a hurry and the company has prospered. In this building is found the office of his newspaper, said to be one of the most complete and best appointed of its size in the United States.

HON. HENRY J. ALLEN
Governor of Kansas, a Life-long Newspaper Man.

Vision Good and Practical

Now there are three other buildings in Wichita the same size as the Beacon building. And office space is still a scarce commodity. Allen's vision was good and it was eminently practical.

The dramatic rise of Henry J. Allen from the estate of a poor chore-boy on a Kansas farm and a cub reporter on a small town daily to that of governor of one of the great states of the Union and big business man is typically American. His story, like that of all successful men who have battled their way to the top, is full of dramatic interest and it is likewise full of hard work and heavy, jolting knocks. Through it all he has preserved the youthful outlook and the adventurous spirit that is reminiscent of Roosevelt. William Allen White's book, "The Martial Adventures of Henry and Me," relating the lighter features of the first trip to France taken by Allen and White, is illuminating in this connection.

"Just Go Ahead," His Advice

Not one man in ten thousand would leave a large business enterprise in the hands of young assistants, cutting himself off beyond the vague, submarine-troubled mists of the Atlantic and burying himself in the wild Vosges or Argonne, on such a mission as that which called Allen to France in 1917. A newspaper is no ordinary enterprise. The path of the publisher is full of storms and maelstroms. A few false turns of the helm might wreck the ship.

I shall never forget the remarkable interview I had with him the day he left for France.

"Is there anything you have to suggest about our course or policy?" I asked.

"No, just go ahead," he replied.

Afterward it dawned upon me that this power to delegate responsibility to others is the rare quality that distinguishes the most successful administrator, and I understood why his instructions were so simple.

I asked him about his political prospects. He said a few perfunctory words about general political affairs, but within two minutes was back on his favorite and all-absorbing subject—the war. It was literally and exactly true that he had cast aside all thoughts of politics and business success and cared only for the great cause in which he was to have a part. A new and astonishing phase of human nature had revealed itself to me.

He was off to the war, and the first thing he did was to establish the Home Communication Service for the Red Cross—the bureau which kept the soldiers in touch with the home folks, whether they were sick, in trouble or in enemy prison camps. He cut red tape right and left and soon had the bureau going. This activity fully organized, he returned and turned his restless energy to the Y. M. C. A. service for the 35th Division—the home boys from Kansas and Missouri who were just then crossing the Atlantic.

"Was Going Toward the Front"

He went with them to the Vosges, and there he did a lot of the hewing of wood and drawing of water that is necessary in such service. He became ill and nearly died with diphtheria while there. Recovering, he went with the division to the Argonne. As to his service there, he would never affirm or deny, but a light was thrown on the subject last winter when Major Salisbury, a Democrat, by the way, spoke to a public body and was publicly hostile to Allen. Taking it for granted that because of politics Salisbury would give Allen a little the worst of it, they asked him about the governor's service in the Argonne.

"Which way was he going when you saw him?" they asked, and settled themselves for a laugh.

"He was going toward the front when I saw him last," was the solid reply. "I saw him under fire a great many times, and he performed fine service for the soldiers."

A sodden silence fell upon the group, and the subject was changed.

Henry J. Allen became interested in newspaper work and politics when a reporter on the Salina Journal, where he went upon the completion of his college course. Restlessly seeking an outlet for his boundless energy and ambition, he acquired interest in or complete ownership of several papers in succession, among them being the Manhattan Nationalist, where he invested his own savings, the Ottawa Herald, the Parsons Sun and the Garden City Telegram. Selling the Ottawa Herald, he went to Wichita and bought the Beacon in 1906. It was a struggling newspaper of about 6,000 circulation, published in an out-of-the-way second floor location. Now it has more than 40,000.

Always a Fighter

Shortly after he landed in Wichita, he got into the municipal hurly-burly and came out against the open saloons that were then running in open defiance of the Kansas prohibitory law.

His opponents snarled and jeered, "If Allen has his way the grass will be growing in the streets of Wichita within two years."

With that unanswerable and unquenchable humor that is familiar to all who know him, Allen wrote editorials advocating the purchase of a lot of municipal mowing machines and the establishment of a municipal haymarket.

He was once summoned as a witness in a vital liquor case. The attorney for the liquor interests, a local politician of great bulk, stood close to Allen, thrust his face at him and shouted, "State your name to the court."

"Pardon me," was the soft answer. "Would you mind repeating the question?" There was a titter in the court room.

"State your name," howled the attorney, with his face almost against Allen's.

With an innocent smile, the witness turned to the judge. "I am hard of hearing," he said. "If it please the court, I would like to have the question repeated."

Drove Out Saloons

The judge, jury and crowd all burst into a loud guffaw. The liquor attorney forgot his other questions and sat down.

The saloons finally were driven out, and Wichita prospered greatly.

He began a campaign for the commission form of government, and the movement became popular. Becoming interested in the city manager plan as an improvement over commission government, he led the fight for that form, and now Wichita is one of the American cities employing this efficient method of government. The city made a saving of ten times the manager's salary on a single contract, due to the wrecking of the old system.

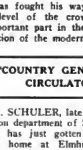
Henry J. Allen and Theodore Roosevelt had many points of contact and many traits in common. They were always together practically and had similar in views and aspirations. In the Progressive national convention of 1912 he was selected as Roosevelt floor leader and interpreter in the mass of the convention in a speech which attracted national attention.

Like Roosevelt, Allen has courage and refuses to truckle to expediency or local prejudices. While a prospective candidate for governor he took the breath of the Kansas cattlemen away when he told them in their annual convention that the new plan to limit herds and get bigger prices thereby, advocated by one of their leading speakers, was unpatriotic and selfish. This was in addition to his answer to their state association in Wichita.

His Remedy for Bolshevism

Only a short time ago he gave an address of welcome to the Kansas department of the American Legion. In his introductory remarks he said he had been warned repeatedly not to touch on the bonus question, as it was a ticklish one for a politician to handle. He then proceeded to take the lid off, and frankly told the soldiers to "let it alone" and not ask for bonuses. It would have been fatal career but interested glittering generalities, but he faced the issue squarely.

He spoke at Lindsborg, Kansas, where the great majority of the population are of Swedish descent or birth, to a national gathering of Swedish Lutheran church officials. His subject was Americanism, and he told his audience frankly that they should do away with the Swedish language in their church meetings as quickly as possible and use the American language. The conservatives were astounded at his point-blank statements, but before the meeting was over he had won his audience to his point of view.



Governor Allen's hobby is "Plant the Farmer in the Soil." He is trying to encourage home-owning. In France he saw the insidious tides of German socialistic propaganda rush three times against the French population, only to fall back, defeated of their object, because nearly 90 per cent of the French farmers owned the soil they tilled. He believes that the surest preventive and cure of the Bolshevist spirit is home ownership. The Kansas constitution needs bringing up to date. Its limitations as to taxation classification are narrow and unjust. It does not allow the state to encourage farm ownership through farm loans. Therefore two amendments recommended by Governor Allen are to be voted upon this year—one to permit a change in tax laws and the other to permit the state to loan money out of the school fund to tenants who wish to own farms. These amendments, together with a vigorous publicity campaign and a movement for better rural schools constitute his program for adding new strength to the agricultural population.

Farm tenantry and absentee landlordism has increased alarmingly in Kansas because of the defects in the organic law. He wants to see his state a state of home owners, in the city as well as in the country. He is going at the fundamentals of economic and industrial unrest.

Courage, business acumen, a statesmanship that unhesitatingly looks far across oceans to the problems beyond, the saving American grace of humor and a genius for planning for a great America and a greater Kansas characterize the Henry J. Allen of today. Practical and successful business men with broad vision are needed in the days of reconstruction, and this man, who has fought his way up from the dead level of the crowd, is playing an important part in the rapidly shifting action of the modern world drama.

A "COUNTRY GENTLEMAN" CIRCULATOR

J. W. SCHULER, late of the circulation department of Scranton (Pa.) Times, has just gotten nicely settled in his home at Elmhurst nearby—a home that put him in the class frequently referred to as "country gentlemen", when Walter E. Clark, former governor of Alaska and present owner of the Charleston (W. Va.) Mail, heard about his work and decided that the people of the Mountain State needed him

J. W. SCHULER

Mr. Schuler heard former Gov. Clark's call and bundled immediately as he is still young, industrious and ambitious and has spent about twenty years preparing to become a circulation manager who knows "how." That job is now his on the Mail and the new field of his activities includes a city of 40,000 with a rich and populous suburban territory.

Scranton has always been home to Mr. Schuler, but he says that he is going to like Charleston because he likes his start. He began work on the old Scranton Tribune about 20 years ago. His first job was carrier boy. Shortly afterward he joined the Times and remained with them until a few weeks ago. He held practically every position in the circulation department of that paper and during the war was in charge.

ORGANIZATION WORK GOES FORWARD

President Stokes Finds Michigan Editors, Detroit News Writers and Journalism Teachers Interested in "St. Louis Plan"

Richard L. Stokes, president of the St. Louis Association of Journalists and provisional President of the newly organized American Journalism Association, informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the prospects are bright indeed for the quick growth of the national body through the formation of local chapters under the St. Louis Plan.

At the meeting of Michigan editors and teachers of journalism at Ann Arbor last week Mr. Stokes delivered an impressive address, outlining in detail the critical economic conditions among St. Louis news writers during the past year, and the spirit of unrest which was taking hold of the men. He told how this led to many conferences as to plans of organization, and of the gradual development of the principles which are embodied in the rules and regulations as finally adopted.

The Michigan editors, and the 200 journalism teachers, Mr. Stokes says, were deeply interested in the movement and active co-operation was promised. One of the most enthusiastic supporters of the new organization is George A. Stevenson, editor of the Saginaw Morning News, and son of former Governor Chase S. Osborne. Mr. Osborne has consented to serve as one of the two national officers for Michigan. It is expected that a Detroit man will be chosen as the other Michigan representative.

Mr. Stokes addressed two meetings of Detroit news writers, representing the four daily papers of that city, and found them deeply interested in the plan. At one of these meetings Harold Callender, editorial writer on the News, was chosen chairman. The work of forming Detroit chapters is going forward, meetings having already been held for the purpose of inaugurating the work.

"The thanks of all newspaper men of the country," says Mr. Stokes, "should be extended to EDITOR & PUBLISHER for the alertness with which it grasped the possibility of a national organization of their profession, far ahead of any other publication, and for the energy and generosity with which it has expressed the spirit. If the idea succeeds it will be due in large part to the fervent championship and widespread publicity which EDITOR & PUBLISHER has given it without the least solicitation, to the movement."

$16-$20 DEMAND IN ROCHESTER

Employers' Offer of $6 Refused by Printers

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 26.—Union printers here today, by a vote of 130 to 0, rejected the employers' counter-proposal, in answer to their recent demand of $44 a week for day workers and $48 for night workers. The employing printers offered $34 for day work and $37 for night work.

No arbitration is provided for in the agreement with the employers, which is operative until November 1, when agreement favors a strike. The employing printers have thirty days' grace in which to meet the printers' demands or negotiate a new contract. The present scale is $28 a week.

The contracts of newspapers and job and commercial shops expire on November 1 and they are alike affected by the printers' demands. The publishers believe the entire proposition will go to arbitration.

WELFARE OF WHOLE FIELD OF ADVERTISING IS PRIME REASON FOR A. A. A. A.

Harry Dwight Smith, New President, Seeks and Welcomes Earnest Co-operation of Newspaper Publishers in Special Statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER on Taking Office—Announces National Chairmen

BY J. H. WEBB

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Oct. 24

HARRY DWIGHT SMITH of the advertising agency of Fuller & Smith, occupying nearly all of the fifteenth floor of the big Guardian Building, this city, today outlined to the EDITOR & PUBLISHER his idea of the duties of the president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

Mr. Smith returned from Boston, where he was elected president of the association, full of "pep, vim and vigor," and buckled down to work in his usual modest way.

Small in build, quick and keen of perception, modest as a school boy, appreciative of real service, he is no advocate of "personal publicity."

Name Is a Personal Trade Mark

"I have but one real hobby, if I may call it such, in a personal way in connection with my advertising agency business," he said, when he declined to be "mugged" for a newspaper picture. "I always sign my full name—Harry Dwight Smith—whether I am signing letters, checks or even receipts for express packages.

"This name is my personal trademark. You know, there are quite a number of Smiths in this country and their initials are varied—so I do not use my initials—but sign 'Harry Dwight Smith.'

"The day of the flannel-mouthed advertising man is gone. Service and results are what do the trick now. Personal publicity-seekers are not in favor with the rank and file of members of our association. I, for one, am opposed to personal publicity and do not seek it."

In discussing his duties as president of the association Mr. Smith said:

Realizes Responsibilities

"In accepting the election to the presidency of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, I fully realize the grave responsibilities laid upon me. To follow through on the splendid administration of William H. Johns is no small task, but I am planning to give unstintingly of my time and effort, and I know I can rely upon the whole-hearted and unanimous support of the one hundred and seventeen agencies represented in our association.

"The unity of purpose and the unselfish team work of the constituent members and of the executive board and standing committees, throughout the first two years of our existence, will continue to be the association's greatest strength, and can be taken by readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER as the best indication that the association will show commendable progress for years to come—no matter who may head the organization as president.

"In all of the association's deliberations and activities our prime motive has been to consider the welfare of the whole field of advertising. We recognize fully the law of business that, whatever is "right and best for the entire advertising industry will be right and best for each factor within the industry.

"Our judgments must be based on this sound principle. It can never be simply a question of what is good for agencies or for newspapers, or for any other group of advertising interests, but rather what is good for the whole course of constructive advertising and for its permanent benefit.

"When reviewing the work of the past, this broad motive is clearly indicated, and I can assure you that it is so deeply imbedded in the minds of those who guide the association's work that it will prevail throughout all future activities.

"We seek and welcome the earnest co-operation of newspaper publishers in whom we see a ready acceptance of this same motive.

"I bespeak on behalf of the association the fullest co-operation from publishers with the work of our standing committee on newspapers, now headed by A. W. Erickson of the Erickson Company, New York, as national chairman, and with our standing committee on circulation, of which Paul V. Troup of Lord & Thomas, of Chicago, is national chairman.

"The Association contact with newspaper publishers will be mainly through these two committees, which represent but two of the twelve standing committees of the association. The diversity of these twelve committees indicates the scope and all-embracing character of our work, a list of which, with the national chairmen for the current year, follows:

Committee Chairmen for 1920

AGENCY SERVICE: Mac Martin, Mac Martin Advertising Agency, Security Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

PREPAREDNESS

BY JOSEPH P. BARRY
OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THREE years ago the American people were participating in huge parades and other demonstrations signifying their fervor for war-preparedness. It would not be out of place now if similar demonstrations were held, urging upon the people preparedness for the readjustments which will inevitably take place in the next few years, as an aftermath of the war.

The publishing industry is enjoying an era of extraordinary prosperity, despite the high cost of labor and material. Nevertheless, now is the time for the publisher of vision to think clearly of the future, and to realize that the present prosperity is hectic, and cannot, and will not endure.

The sooner he realizes that the rainy day will follow as inevitably as day follows night, the better prepared will he be to weather the storm when it comes.

Recent volumes of advertising are being reported from all over the country, until it almost becomes monotonous; circulations at higher-prices have been maintained, and in many cases, increased. While there is every reason to believe that this prosperity will continue for at least another year, is it not a safe and sane policy for every publisher to "dig in" now while the "digging" is good, so that a few years hence—it may be 10 years hence—when the pendulum swings the other way, he will be so entrenched that he can hold his own without any undue strain?

Of course circulation increased during the war; occasional newspaper readers became steady readers, and many people who took one newspaper daily, now take two; the point is, will they continue to do so when the news is less sensational? It is my belief that publishers can hold their circulations only by making greater efforts than ever to publish good newspapers, and by using the best service that money can buy to their readers.

It is easy to understand that during the war a man would walk several blocks to buy a newspaper who in normal times would rather go without it than make such an effort. There is still room for tremendous improvement in the service given by most publishers, and those who increase their appropriation for service now will reap big dividends when the lean years come.

This is the psychological time for each publisher to work as he never did before to marshal his forces for the coming fight.

Prosperity is the deadly foe of efficiency. Do not allow it to undermine the efficiency of your organization

WHOLE WORLD LOOKS TO AMERICA

So Declare Dr. F. H. Stead and Frederick W. Wile, English Writers, Now Visiting Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Oct. 24.—Two representative Englishmen—one a newspaper man and the other a brother of one of England's most noted journalists, were in Philadelphia this week. Both talked of the situation that has developed in Europe since the war.

Frederick W. Wile, American newspaper man, who has spent twenty years in Europe as a correspondent of English and American newspapers, pleaded for a correction of the "American misunderstanding."

Misunderstanding Hurts

"I urge American business men," he said, "that until Germany as a nation shall unmistakably show her repentance, you consider it as a felony for any man, woman or child to buy one dollar's worth of German-made goods."

In speaking of the "American misunderstanding" of the English, he urged that the children of America be informed that George III was a German and never learned to read or write English. He also suggested that the school child be taught that the acts of oppression which led to the Revolution were not approved by the English people and that the British public today deplores the unwise English policy which resulted in the revolt against the home government.

Mr. Wile insisted that the solution of the Irish question lies mainly in the formulation of a definite, constructive program which all Ireland will approve.

America's Position Unique

Dr. Francis Herbert Stead, brother of the late W. T. Stead, who went down on the Titanic, declared that if America does not take its place as the "leader of the world, there will follow another war even greater than the one we have just passed through."

"This war, if it should come, would strike America and England a terrific blow," said Dr. T. Stead, "America's position is unique and it requires that this country be the salvation of the world—humanely speaking. The entire world is looking to America for leadership and to take the part in present-day history has assigned to it."

AUGUSTA CHRONICLE SOLD

T. A. Hamilton Buys Control From Thomas W. Loyless

(By Telegraph)

Augusta, Ga., Oct. 28.—Thomas W. Loyless, president and editor of the Augusta Chronicle, yesterday sold his controlling stock of 850 shares in the Augusta Chronicle Publishing Company to Thomas A. Hamilton, formerly managing editor of the Augusta Herald. Mr. Hamilton will take charge as editor and manager on November 1. R. S. Carver recently sold his interest in the Chronicle and purchased the Wilmington (N. C.) Dispatch.

Mr. Loyless, with R. H. Cabiniss, former business manager of the Atlanta Journal, bought the Chronicle in 1903. Upon Mr. Cabiniss' retirement in 1908 Mr. Loyless became editor and manager. Since 1916 he has been associated with R. L. McKinney of the Macon News in the ownership of the Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer-Sun.

Mr. Loyless has not made any definite plans for the future, but states that he will probably re-enter the newspaper business later on.

HOLDERNESS ELECTED

Creel and Hawes Speak Before St. Louis Ad Club

(By Telegraph)

St. Louis, Oct. 28.—Marvin E. Holderness, vice-president of the First National Bank, today was elected president of the Advertising Club. He headed the "Winners' Ticket," which carried all officers but one—Charles R. Eschbam, advertising manager of the Semi-Weekly Republic, being made secretary. The other officers are: First vice-president, Arthur Siegel; second vice-president, Edward Mead; third vice-president, Frank W. Swann; treasurer, D. R. Ruebel.

George Creel, former chairman of the Committee on Public Information, was the principal speaker at the dinner that followed. Richard S. Hawes of St. Louis, president of the American Bankers' Association, pledged the support of the association to the vigilance work conducted by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world.

FAR EAST VIEWS ON SCREEN

Schols Will Describe Tour at Dinner in His Honor

Stereoptican views of the Orient, with short descriptions bearing on business and financial, as well as scenic, aspects, will be shown by Emil M. Scholz, former publisher of the New York Evening Post, at a dinner to be given him by his intimate friends at the New York Advertising Club on November 3. Harry Ahern, advertising director of the Evening Journal, will be toastmaster, and among the speakers will be David Lawrence, head of the Bureau of Research, Washington, D. C.; Oswald Garrison Villard, formerly editor of the Evening Post, and James Wright Brown, publisher of the Wall Street Journal.

About sixty of Mr. Scholz's intimate friends in the New York newspaper field will be at the tables, and other guests will include John B. Woodward, advertising manager of the Chicago Daily News; R. L. McLean, of the Philadelphia Bulletin; Truman A. DeWeese, advertising director of the Shredded Wheat Company, Buffalo, and Robert Adamson, head of the Guardian Advertising Agency, New York.

NEW YORK AD MANAGERS SHIFT

Caruthers Promoted on Tribune When Alexander Joins Sun

F. Porter Caruthers has been appointed advertising manager of the New York Tribune, succeeding Edgar M. Alexander, who has gone to the Evening Sun as advertising manager. The Evening Sun post has been vacant since the death of Frank McLaughlin in July.

Mrs. Ogden Mills Reid continues as director of advertising of the Tribune. Mr. Caruthers' successor in charge of the Tribune's rotogravure advertising has not been announced.

Progress on New Pacific Cable

Clarence H. Mackay, head of the Postal Telegraph and Commercial Cable Company, on arrival home from Europe on October 22d, said: "The principal object of my trip," he continued, "had to do with a new cable under the Pacific to Japan and I have every reason to hope that it will be finished in two years from now. All we are waiting for now is the designation by the Japanese Government of landing points in Japan." Mr. Mackay added that the cost of laying cable had increased 100 per cent. since 1914.

Another Class for Blanchard

A class in advertising has been opened in the Brooklyn Central Y. M. C. A., under the direction of Frank L. Blanchard, who is secretary of the New York Advertising Club and conducts a similar course at the 23d street Y. M. C. A. in New York.

Sixty Periodicals to Resume Publication

New York Printers League Helps Publishers to Produce Papers Outside of City

Sixty New York periodicals have arranged to resume publication, printing outside of New York, some of them permanently and others until the local printing labor situation is straightened out. The Literary Digest has also secured several additional converts to its method of printing from plates photographed from original typewritten sheets, among them the Scientific American, American Machinist, Independent, Musical Courier, Nugents' Bulletin, Dress Essentials, American Art News, New Success, Paper Mill, and Magneto Bulletin. The Dry Goods Economist and several other trade papers are being mimeographed.

This out-of-town printing work is being done with the consent and assistance of the Printers' League, which helped the publishers to make the necessary connections in many shops east of the Mississippi River. The cities helping out are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Newark, San Francisco, Dayton, Yonkers, Albany, Jamestown, N. Y.; Stamford, Conn.; Worcester, Taunton, Pa.; Scranton, Baltimore, Schenectady, Springfield, Ohio; Paterson, Scarsdale, N. Y.; Hartford and Poughkeepsie.

While the situation is still tangled, it was announced by the Printers League late this week that several shops had reopened with union compositors and pressmen. Efforts are still being made by the Pressroom Executives' Association, composed of pressmen foremen, to compose the differences between the International and local unions of the pressmen, but it was not intended that any negotiations up to the time Editor & Publisher went to press.

Strike benefits were paid this week by Typographical Union No. 6 to its members who are enjoying "vacations." The 10 per cent. assessment which was laid on all members of "Big Six" is enabling the union to pay a benefit of $25 a week to the members. The Book & Job Men's Relief Association, which the union organized among its vacationing members.

Boston Pressmen Censor Life

Boston, Oct. 28.—Pressmen of the Chapple Publishing Company, who were working on Life, discovered a cartoon, which they considered a reflection on organized labor, and refused to continue on the edition until the cartoon was eliminated.

Harry C. Rook Dead

(By Telegraph)

Pittsburgh, Oct. 28.—Harry Coffey Rook, secretary of the Dispatch Publishing Company and manager of the Philadelphia branch office of the Dispatch, died at Philadelphia this morning, aged 49 years. He was the youngest son of the late Alexander W. Rook, one of the founders of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, and a brother of C. A. Rook, who is now president and editor of the Dispatch.

Barton Goes to Europe

Robert Barton, assistant manager of the American Express Company, New York, has gone to Europe to fill the position of advertising manager there for the company, with offices at 11 Rue Scribe, Paris. Leslie W. Rowland has been appointed assistant advertising manager to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Barton's appointment.

AD AGENCY COPY MEN COMING INTO THEIR OWN

F. R. FELAND, who has been elected a director of the George Batten Company, New York, hails from old Kentucky and gained his first experience in newspaper lore in that state, which he still has cherished recollections of, though he has lived East for some years.

Mr. Feland started his career on a country weekly, for which he gathered local items and then came back to the office and set type. At the age of twenty-one he went to work for Elbert Hubbard in East Aurora, N. Y., as a compositor, and here also, he studied advertising under the celebrated Felix Shay.

F. R. Feland

In 1909, he decided to try his fortune in New York, and to this city he came, serving for six months with the Federal Advertising Agency, from which he tells with a touch of humor that he was fired. "Then, I came to the George Batten Company, and I have been here ever since," said Mr. Feland. Continuing he said: "It is interesting to note that there is a general trend in all agencies at the present time to promote the writers and preparers of the copy. Formerly, honors went to advertising solicitors, but at last the copy man is coming into his own."

Mr. Feland is the head of the copy department of the George Batten Company.

A. N. P. A. MAY CALL FOR WAR RESTRICTIONS TO AVERT PAPER DISASTER

Paper Committee and Directors, Finding Increased Supply Impossible, See Modified War Industries Board Regulations and End of All Waste as Only Method of Keeping Demand Within Amount Available

IMMEDIATE voluntary reapplication of the war restriction measures of 918, as the only adequate means of meeting the present newsprint shortage risis, may be urged upon members of the merican Newspaper Publishers' Asso- iation as the result of a meeting of the aper committee and board of directors f the A. N. P. A., held in New York on Tuesday.

The officials sat in executive session f an entire day, listening to reports f shortage conditions from all parts of he country, and considered ways and means to meet them. At the close, it was stated to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by one of those who took part that readoption of the War Industries Board regulations of 1918, modified somewhat perhaps to meet peace conditions, seemed to offer the only feasible source of possible relief.

Conceding that there is no possible means of increasing the paper supply so that it can even approximately meet the demand caused by the unexpected and unheard of advertising now being placed in the daily papers, the A. N. P. A. leaders determined to make the paper now available go as far as possible by the absolute elimination of print paper waste in all departments of a newspaper—editorial, advertising, circulation and mechanical.

A bulletin will be sent out at once from New York headquarters of the A. N. P. A. calling attention to the gravity of the situation, urging publishers to keep out of the market in order to stabilize at a lower level the price of what little paper there is on the "spot market" and to again put in force in their plants the rules promulgated last summer by the War Industries Board, or the elimination of wasteful practices in circulation and of all editorial matter except that which is absolutely necessary.

"We are faced with the problem of making two suits where there is cloth or only one." Lincoln B. Palmer, general manager of the A. N. P. A., told EDITOR & PUBLISHER after the meeting. 'We can get no more paper than we now have and it is likely that the demand will continue to exceed the supply. Elimination of all uses of paper not essential is the only way out."

The regulations enforced during the regime of the War Industries Board were as follows:

Wasteful Circulation Practices

Discontinue the acceptance of the return of unsold copies.

Exceptions—Employees of newspapers who are employed directly at the home office by a newspaper, as wholesale distributors to newsboys, news agents and news stands, may return unsold copies, provided such unsold copies have not been in the possession of news boys, newsstands or retail dealers. Such employees cannot take back, under any consideration, papers which have already been distributed for sale.

2. Discontinue sending paper after date of expiration of subscription, unless the subscription is renewed and paid or.

3. Discontinue the use of all samples or free promotion copies.

4. Discontinue giving copies to anybody except for office-working copies or where required by statute law in the case of official advertising.

Exceptions—Copies may be given free to employes of newspapers if such is the present practice of the office.

Copies may be sent to the library of Congress and to state or other public libraries which will agree to bind or otherwise preserve the files of the paper; also to Government departmental libraries.

Copies may be given free in return for actual service rendered.

Copies may be sent free to clipping bureaus which render an equivalent service to the newspaper.

Copies for service purposes only may be sent free to newspaper correspondents and press bureaus.

5. Discontinue giving free copies to advertisers, except not more than one copy each for checking purposes.

Exceptions—Trade and advertiser who customarily places advertisements with the newspaper in at least four issues each week and advertising agencies from whom the publisher receives advertising regularly may be put on the regular mailing list to facilitate handling in the mailing room.

Copies must not be sent as a means of advertising the newspaper itself to advertisers or advertising agencies from which the publisher does not receive business regularly.

6. Discontinue selling advertising with a guarantee of circulation requiring a rebate if circulation falls below guaranteed amount.

7. Discontinue the arbitrary forcing of copies on news dealers (i.e., compelling them to buy more copies than they can legitimately sell in order to hold certain territory).

8. Discontinue the buying bark of papers at either wholesale or retail selling prices from dealers or agents in order to secure preferential representation.

9. Discontinue the paying of salaries or commissions to agents, news dealers or newsboys for the purpose of securing the equivalent of the return privilege.

10. Discontinue all cash discounts or bonuses to wholesale or retail dealers.

11. Discontinue all free exchanges.

12. Reading matter consists of all matter printed, except paid advertisements and the following schedules are based upon a standard column of 300 agate lines.

Weekday Editions

13. Reduce reading matter up to 50 columns 5 per cent.

14. Reduce on additional space over 50 columns and not over 70 columns 15 per cent.

15. Reduce on additional space over 70 and not over 90 columns 15 per cent.

16. Reduce on all additional space over 90 columns 50 per cent.

Sunday Editions

17. Reduce reading matter up to 150 columns 10 per cent.

18. Reduce on additional space over 150 columns and up to 200 columns 20 per cent.

19. Reduce on additional space over 200 columns and up to 250 columns 30 per cent.

20. Reduce on additional space over 250 columns up to 300 columns 40 per cent.

21. Reduce on additional space over 300 columns up to 350 columns 50 per cent.

22. Reduce on all additional space over 350 columns 60 per cent.

SCRIPPS EDITOR HONORED

Frank Rostock Is Decorated by King Albert

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 29—One American editor lost his level-headed poise for a couple of minutes during the visit of King Albert of the Belgians. His name is Frank Rostock and his paper is the Cincinnati Post.

THE ALBERT MEDAL

It happened when one of his reporters called him on the telephone and told him that the King wanted to see him at once up at the Music Hall. The reporter was called upon to do some fine explaining before Mr. Rostock made the journey—and he did it.

King Albert shook hands and then decorated Editor Rostock with "The

FRANK ROSTOCK

Albert Medal," remarking at the same time to the assemblage:

"Mr. Rostock, I give you this as a token of the appreciation of the people of Belgium of the fearless attitude of the Cincinnati Post during the war as to our enemies."

Rostock thanked him, was introduced to the Queen and others—and then found an open door leading to an alley.

MUST FIX SIZES AND STICK TO THEM

Vice-President Foster of S. N. P. A. Tells of News Print Conditions in South—He Is Saving 10 Per Cent.

Marcellus E. Foster, president of the Houston Chronicle Publishing Company, Houston, Texas, is in New York, following a meeting of members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association in Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Foster is vice-president of the latter organization and reports that the executive committee of the Southern publishers, met primarily to take steps to put in effect drastic economies in the matter of using news print. The proceedings of this meeting were told fully in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week.

"I think every publisher in the South realizes the seriousness of the present situation," said Mr. Foster. "They have all determined to conserve on paper and they realize that the only way to conserve it to conserve.

The South's Position

"The South is experiencing great prosperity and we have the same demand for big papers to accommodate advertisers as have the larger publishers in the East. The Southern newspapers, however, do not consume more than 25 per cent of the tonnage and a curtailment in that section without similar drastic economies being put in effect in other sections, will be of comparatively little avail.

"To my mind the main trouble is that each publisher is afraid to fix on a definite size of his paper and stick to it.

"In the case of the Houston Chronicle I have issued positive instructions that we must not print more than eighteen eight columns each. Sunday the limit has been placed at sixty pages.

"This means that we will save on the Chronicle at least 10 per cent of our quota of paper and we are going to do it simply by accepting advertising only to a certain amount each day and then refusing all other space offered. We will average not less than 60 per cent of advertising on each issue of sixteen pages or more.

Fair Profit Necessary

"For example, in a twenty-two page paper we carry eight columns of advertising and 66 columns of reading matter. We could easily print a twenty-eight page paper on Fridays with 150 columns of advertising, which means that on each Friday we will probably refuse 40 columns of good advertising space.

"But why worry about it? We can make a fair profit on a twenty-two page paper and can save some news print that is today in many cases worth more than the advertising itself.

"I find on my visit to New York that some publishers have recently paid as high as 7½ cents for a few rars of

CLYDE STEEN ACTIVE SOUTH AND WEST

International Editorial Association, an Organization for Newspaper Men, Suddenly Decides to Move

(Special Correspondence)

BEDFORD, VA., Oct. 28.—This town believed that it was going to be boast of having the home of the International Editorial Association, believed it absolutely on the word of Clyde P. Steen, the managing director, until a few weeks ago. Now hope is gone—not for the town but for possession of the much touted benefits that would result from such a honor.

The Bedford Bulletin, in its issue of October 16, had the following to say regarding the "coming" and the "going" of the "great" welfare project:

"The International Editorial Association, whose representatives have been in Bedford for the past three or four months ostensibly making preparation for the remodeling and occupancy of the old Jeter building as a national home for that organization, has at the last moment decided not to purchase here, having made a deal for a building in Waynesboro, Va., the past week.

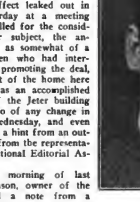
A Surprise for Bedford

"News to this effect leaked out in Bedford last Saturday at a meeting of business men called for the consideration of another subject, the announcement coming as somewhat of a surprise to the men who had interested themselves in promoting the deal, as the establishment of the home here had been accepted as an accomplished fact, the owners of the Jeter building having no intimation of any change in plans until last Wednesday, and even then it came only as a hint from an outside party and not from the representatives of the International Editorial Association.

"On Wednesday morning of last week M. T. Harrison, owner of the Democrat, received a note from a friend in Roanoke asking if it was known here that Clyde P. Steen, who has been in Bedford several months representing the editors' organization, was in Waynesboro, Va., negotiating for a building there. Mr. Harrison at once called on Wingfield Brothers who have the Jeter building in charge, and they were as much surprised as he was at the news.

Tries to Reach Steen

"It was supposed that Mr. Steen was in Lynchburg and G. D. Wingfield made an effort to get him on the long distance phone, but without success. However, about noon of that day Messrs. Wingfield received a telegram from Mr. Steen at Lynchburg, saying he had been to Birmingham and was then on his way to Washington to get the money for payment on the Jeter building and would surely be here to close up the deal and take over the property on the 10th, which was the day on which the option expired. He did not show up, however, and later Messrs. Wingfield received a letter from him saying that the proposition would have to be abandoned, as it was too big for them to handle.



"The first intimation that Bedford people had that there was such an organization as the International Editorial Association was last June when Clyde P. Steen, C. A. Berger and Miss Carol Bird came to Bedford looking for a home for the organization, having heard of the Jeter building through the industrial department of the Norfolk & Western Railway.

"During the first week in July Mr. Steen and Miss Bird returned to Bedford, announced that they would take the Jeter building at $15,000, and secured an option good until October 10th. Since that time Mr. Steen has spent most of his time in Bedford, having his office in the Jeter building, from which he directed the work of organization and other matters pertaining to the location of the home here.

Bedfordites Subscribe

"One of the first moves made after announcing they would locate in Bedford was to take in as honorary members such of our citizens as were willing to donate $25 each for the privilege, and about seventy of Bedford's business and professional men joined under that head, the total of their subscriptions amounting to approximately $1,800.

"Bedford's business men are not easily played for suckers, however, and it was stipulated that this amount be turned over to S. S. Lambeth, Jr., as trustee, the same to be paid over to the officers of the Editor's Association when the deal for the Jeter building had been finally closed.

"A week or two after this fund was placed in Mr. Lambeth's hands he was approached by Mr. Steen with a request for $200, the statement being made that that amount was needed for "incidental expenses," but the trustee, holding that the fund could not be used for such purpose, declined the request.

Still a Balance

"However, the matter was brought to the attention of some of the individual contributors and eight of them agreed to allow their portion of the money to be paid over, which was done, and Mr. Lambeth still has in his keeping the balance of the fund and this doubtless will be distributed among the ex-honorary members contributing.

"Mr. Steen, in his letter to Messrs. Wingfield notifying them that the deal was off, stated that a check covering the $200 he secured from the trustee, as well as other indebtedness incurred in Bedford during his stay here, amounting to approximately $300 more, would be here by Monday, October 18th, but to date, Mr. Steen has not been heard from again.

"At intervals since Mr. Steen located here he has given to the press news of the progress of the work of his organization, all of which led the public to believe that there would be no hitch in regard to locating the home here.

"A Lynchburg architect was employed to draw plans for remodeling the building to meet the needs and requirements of the association, and only a few weeks ago Mr. Steen gave out a notice that the work would be commenced on October 1st, and that by January 1st everything would be in readiness for the opening of the home, a big celebration being planned for this event.

"No public statement has been made by Mr. Steen or the other officers of the association as to the reason for their sudden change of plans and decision to locate elsewhere, and some of our citizens are inclined to be a little indignant about the matter, though they of course recognize the right of the men handling the organization's affairs to go elsewhere if they so desired."

Boost for Waynesboro?

The Bedford Bulletin quotes the following from the Lexington (Va.) Gazette: "Brandon Institute at Waynesboro, Va., is the national home and headquarters of the International Editors Association, an organization with already 4,000 members which will include all newspapermen in the nation over. Clyde P. Steen, national organizer for the association, so announces.

"The National Newspaper Home Corporation, a holding company for the association, purchased the Brandon Institute from E. T. Hildebrand, E. U. Hoenshel, W. H. Gardner and Dr. R. S. Griffin, for something over $40,000. Mr. Steen is president of this corporation, G. H. Brananman, vice-president and H. M. Magie, secretary-treasurer.

"The action of Brandon by the editors is a big boost for Waynesboro-Basic, since they scoured the country for months, seeking the right location."

According to the Bulletin, the Gazette story would indicate that Mr. Steen was carrying on his Waynesboro negotiations at the time he sent his telegram from Lynchburg to Bedford in which he said he was on his way to Washington to secure the money to pay for the Jeter building.

Deed to Be Transferred to Steen and Associates in December

(By Telegraph)

WAYNESBORO, VA., Oct. 27.—The International Editorial Association has bought the Brandon Hotel property in Basic, adjoining here. The first payment has been made, it is stated, and the deed to the property will be transferred early in December, according to present plans.

Clyde P. Steen, managing director of the association, took possession of the home on October 18. No representatives of the association are here now. Clare Berger, the president, and other members are expected here this week.

The membership of the association, it is said, is mostly in Virginia cities, including a few here. A prominent banker will act as trustee of the association funds, it is said.

STEEN IN CHICAGO

Is Accompanied by James George Kemp in Interest of I. E. A.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.—Clyde P. Steen, formerly of Bedford, Va., and Lima (Ohio) News and now president of the recently-organized International Editorial Association, together with James George Kemp, reputed to be a former Chicago Tribune news man, but now Wisconsin field secretary for the I. E. A., with headquarters at 385 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis., spent last week in Chicago "on general organization work for the International Editorial Association"

Headquarters of the organization, they assert, have been established at Bedford, Va., "where a home for indigent old-timers of the newspaper profession has been established. According to the stated plans of the I. E. A. this will be utilized as a haven for those who have no other home and several already are on their way there. It is understood that they will occupy their time by forming the working nucleus of a newspaper clipping bureau which eventually will be in a position to render service all over the country."

Two Milwaukee Court Officials Buy on Pity Plea

(Special Correspondence)

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 28.—Local newspaper men are behind a new approach of the methods being used to force sales of stock here in a home for incapacitated newspaper men, which the International Editorial Association claims to own in Virginia.

Public officials and prominent men have been solicited. The stock is being offered at $20 a share and among those who have already subscribed are John Woller, clerk of the Municipal and District Courts, and Municipal Judge August C. Backus.

Milwaukee newspaper men do not look with favor on the methods used in collecting donations—it is generally accepted that the selling of stock really amounts to that. For one thing it is said that men approached are told that their subscription will help So-and-so, a newspaper man whom they know well.

James G. Kemp, a representative of the I. E. A. is in charge of the work here.

New York District Attorney Stopped Anti-Bolshevik Fund Collection

Clyde P. Steen, managing director of the International Editorial Association, is not unknown to readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. His activities during the past two years have included presidency of the late National Association of City Editors, publication of a magazine called "The City Editor" and the launching of a campaign to raise a fund of $1,000,000 "to be used to combat Bolshevism."

The latter was dropped last spring at the order of Assistant District Attorney Kilroe of New York, following an investigation and "interview" with Mr. Steen. According to Mr. Kilroe, at the time, Mr. Steen expressed a willingness to "quit New York" and return to his home at Lima, Ohio. Steen was then the president of the National Association of City Editors.

Mr. Steen has been employed on Ohio and Michigan newspapers. His last newspaper work, so far as known by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, was as city editor of the Lima (Ohio) Daily News.

A man calling himself Davy O'Connor was recently in New York trying to raise $500 subscriptions for life membership in the International Editorial Association and its Bedford home project.

Many inquiries have been received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER regarding Mr. Steen and the I. E. A., especially during the past week.

THE ART OF MAKING LITTLE ADS PAY BIG

This Is the First of a Series of Articles Dealing With Classified Advertising and Its Development to Be Published Weekly in Editor & Publisher

BY C. L. PERKINS

AN EXPERIENCED advertising man—one who had bought national display space and sold magazine advertising—recently spent a couple of hours in the classified department of a large newspaper. This was the first time that classified had ever had his attention and after being shown the machinery of the department, he said: "Yes, but I still don't understand how to secure the hundreds of small ads that appear in your classified columns daily. Where do they come from?" Many publishers, business managers, classified managers, and years of experience are unable to answer the question of where classified ads come from and how to secure them.

Some publishers, having a large volume of classified business do not know exactly how they secured it, nor how to increase it. Many of them have never made it return a profit. Others, having a small volume of classified or their papers are still unable to answer the question of how to build classified although they have spent thousands of dollars in the effort.

No one has ever developed a definite formula which would build classified advertising for a newspaper. And no one ever will. The development of classified is not a problem—it is a combination of many problems

The late Tom Williams was publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, at the time it became a large classified medium. On being asked what one thing developed this business for the Examiner he replied:

"No one thing produced this business: It was the combined result of many things which we did persistently."

To help solve some of the many classified problems that present themselves to newspaper executives; to tell of methods that have been useful in developing classified volume, increasing classified profit and increasing the efficiency in handling the vast detail created by classified, to offer a channel through which those interested in classified can discuss the many phases of their business, is the purpose of this department of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Publishers and classified managers desiring to have some particular subject discussive to Want Ads, to present some problems and those seeking an answer to some specific question pertaining to classified are requested to notify the editor of this page.

Such requests will be filled by securing opinions and answers from publishers and classified managers who by experience are best fitted to correct questions and answers, and the answers and remedies will be printed here from week-to-week

Story of the Trials of a Three-line Ad.

Here is the story of a little three-line Want Ad that tried to get an invitation to remain in the column of some newspaper for more than one day.

Publishers, business managers, classified managers, counter managers and ad clerks know many times sincerely believe that their organizations are making the proper sales effort to secure from voluntary advertisers more than one insertion of their ads. The writer always thought that the persons receiving ads under his jurisdiction were quite efficient until he made a test one day. He discovered that real intelligent sales effort was rarely made.

Since making this test and in the last year, I have placed the same three-line Want Ad in the offices of forty-two newspapers in twenty cities—from the Atlantic to the Pacific and in only one case was any real salesmanship displayed by the person behind the counter.

The first office visited was that of a well known six day evening paper. A neat and intelligent appearing woman took the copy, placed the classification mark in the proper place and marked it for one insertion in the issue of the following day. He did this without saying one word and dismissed me by saying, "Pay the cashier."

On a certain Friday afternoon, I rode the same ad to the office of a leading daily and Sunday newspaper —a recognized classified medium. An attractive looking young lady took the copy and after reading it said:

"Saturday or Sunday?" The reply was Saturday, so she marked the copy for that date and after giving me my change said, "Thank you."

At another office the same ad was offered to a gruff individual who said: "You ought to use large type."

When asked why his only remark was, "Because."

But this ad did not want to be displayed, it was merely seeking an invitation to stay in the same paper for more than one day.

Our next experience was in the office of a newspaper printed in a town of 10,000 population Here a very pleasant lady came to the counter and while reading the ad commented on the weather Having exhausted this subject she remarked that the ad would appear tomorrow evening and that the cost was eighteen cents.

The largest classified medium in one of our largest cities had the next opportunity to increase this one-time three-line ad either to two, three or ten or twenty-one lines, but like the others it failed for lack of effort. Here the copy was received by an office boy with dirty hands and face. He did not know just what to do with the copy, so he went to the other end of the counter and asked one of two older clerks, who were discussing the merits of the Reds and White Sox. He returned and said:

"You just want this ad in tomorrow, don't you?"

Answer, yes. "Ninety cents, then."

The amount was paid and I would gladly have made it $2.50 had the lad's question been in the proper form.

And with no greater success, I carried this ad to thirty-six other newspaper offices—all offices of representative classified mediums. In each case the experience was practically the same —no effort made to secure additional insertions and the number of insertions always taken, without question, as one.

In just one office did the little ad find a welcome. Here an alert young man told me that I should run the ad for a week. He not only explained that this would include the Sunday paper with a large circulation and other advantages which were carefully enumerated but that it would earn for me a reduced rate. He also explained clearly and briefly that the market for the article advertised for sale was limited just at that time and that the very person who wanted the thing advertised might not see the ad on any one day, for many reasons, but that he could hardly miss it, when published for a week. This was salesmanship and was rewarded with an order to run the ad seven times.

This matter of selling the advertiser several insertions is more than a method of increasing classified volume and revenue. It is also a benefit to the advertiser, since he is much more apt to get results from an advertisement appearing several times, than from one appearing only one time.

If the advertisement appears one time and he fails to get results, he blames the paper of classified advertising in general, and a customer is lost. If it runs several times and he gets the desired results, and the chances are that he will, he soon forgets the additional cost of the extra insertions but remembers the efficiency of the ad and becomes a classified booster and a life long friend of the paper.

Some classified managers have said that this selling of additional insertions, increases the number of kill orders received and thus makes a lot of additional work.

True, many of the one time ads which are sold for seven times will accomplish their purpose after the second, third, fourth or fifth insertion. However they produced results for the advertiser and some additional space and revenue for the publisher which they would not have done if the sales effort had not been made.

Is this customer satisfaction and added volume worth the sales effort and work required to handle the increased kill orders?

An Ad That Failed and One That Won

Read a column of classified advertising in any newspaper. You'll find very few advertisements that are real selling power in them. The average classified advertiser does not know how to write result-producing copy. Therefore he writes poor copy and does not get as many replies as he should or perhaps none—for which he blames the paper. Poor copy is one of the chief reasons why many people do not believe in classified and why it is not used more.

The following classified advertisement appeared some time ago in a paper which was a recognized classified medium in its community:

"FOR SALE—Pure English Bloodhound puppies, sired by Lodgecroft, Jr., dam by Jake. successful man trailers also prize winners 1141 E. 28th St."

Nothing came from this advertisement—not even an inquiry, with the result that Mr. Smith decided that classified advertising was not the proper medium for selling puppies.

Mr. Smith told a friend that he had some fine puppies, but he couldn't sell them.

"Why don't you advertise them?" said the friend.

"I did," said Mr. Smith, "but it didn't do any good."

"Let's see your ad," said the friend, an advertising man. When he read it, he said, "Of course, it didn't sell anything. Let me write you an advertisement." So he wrote one.

"It's too long," said Mr. Smith.

"No ad is too long, if it sells," said his friend. "You run this ad and if it doesn't bring results, I'll pay for it out of my own."

So Mr. Smith ran the ad. This is the way it read:

"FOR SALE—Pure English bloodhound puppies. Finest pedigree in the country for the bloodhound system." Keen scent and acute hearing enables them to detect the slightest intrusion. Their gentle loving disposition toward the family makes them invaluable pets. Their intelligent faces and long ears make a handsome adjunct to your automobile. Also affords the best protection offered by Lodgecroft, Jr., dam by Jake's Home. They naturally will be expert man trailers when their lungs, wrinkles, dewlaps will make them invincible prize winners. Apply 1141 E. 28th St."

This ad appeared on Sunday. By Monday evening the puppies were all sold. Mr. Smith now believes in the power of classified advertising

The newspapers that educate their classified advertisers to write good copy will not only render a service to their customers, but will build up a reputation for result-producing that will pay large dividends.

With the Classified Men

L. J. Boughner, classified advertising manager of the Chicago Daily News, spent the month of September fishing in the lakes of northern Wisconsin.

Hamilton Rogers, in charge of the classified advertising of the Louisville Courier Journal and Times, was a recent visitor to Indianapolis and Chicago, inspecting the classified departments of the papers in those cities

"MY CONFIDENCE NEVER VIOLATED BY A MEMBER OF THE PRESS"—SEN. JOHNSON

HIGH regard for the newspapermen of the United States was expressed by Senator Hiram Johnson of California in a recent address before the Portland (Ore.) Press Club, when the members were hosts to the Senator at a reception during his tour in opposition to the League of Nations.

"I have a very high opinion of the men who comprise the personnel of the newspapers of this country," said Senator Johnson. "In my travels from Maine to California it has been my pleasure to know intimately many of the newspaper men and I can say that without exception I have never made a mistake when I placed my confidence in a member of the press.

"The fact that violation of confidence by a reporter is a thing almost unheard of speaks very highly for the ethics of the profession."

A. N. A. NEWS AND VIEWS

A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

A. N. A. AND PRINTERS' STRIKE

Executive Committee Recommends Support to N. Y. Publications

The following resolution, a copy of which has been sent to every A. N. A. member, was adopted at the last meeting of the Executive Committee:

1. As national advertisers we have common cause with national publishers in maintaining the sanctity of printing contracts.

2. Much of our advertising is placed for twelve months ahead and requires a reasonable stability of advertising costs.

3. Advertising costs cannot be estimated in advance unless there is a reasonable stability of printing costs.

4. We are aware that the existing strike of certain printers in New York involves no inherent question of wages or hours, but primarily and essentially the question of contracts.

5. We understand that the contracts of advertisers with publishers are rendered unfulfillable through the breaking of contracts with the publishers by certain labor unions in the printing trade. We believe that, at whatever cost, contracts should be more than scraps of paper, and we therefore deprecate the action of any organization of printers which not only disregards its contracts to maintain mutually agreed schedules, but also refuses to submit its alleged grievances to arbitration.

6. Consequently, we, the executive committee of the Association of National Advertisers, without expression on the subject of the right of collective bargaining on the part either of employers or employes, and with the best wishes for the welfare of labor and the importance of a good standing in public estimation, hereby desire to assure the New York publishers of our moral and practical support in this crisis.

7. We, therefore, recommend to the members of the association that they pledge to publishers the extension of their contracts to cover the amount of advertising already arranged, and, to that end, that they adjust their advertising schedules to the publishers' convenience.

JOHN SULLIVAN, Secretary-Treasurer.

THE CLEARING HOUSE IDEA

W. A. McDERMID and John Sullivan, respectively President and Secretary-Treasurer of the A. N. A., acted as delegates to the Association at the International Trade Conference at Atlantic City last week. The matter of foreign trade is one with which the A. N. A. has for a long time past kept in close touch, and, therefore, had an intimate interest in the purpose of the International Trade Conference.

One of the most illuminating addresses was that of Mr. Dwight W. Morrow, of J. P. Morgan & Company. Unfortunately the address was not reported in the newspapers; the papers printed only the address that Mr. Morrow had prepared, and which he tossed aside, as to speak, and for which he substituted a speech that was plumb full of simple, straightforward, basic common sense. It was not the speech of a banker, but of a real marketing man—a salesman.

Mr. Morrow brought out a point that was very interesting to an A. N. A. man: He described the fundamental role of the banker as the man who brought together the individual who wanted something and the individual who possessed that thing.

That is just one of the functions of the A. N. A. office, and a very important one. Daily—many times daily—the office is asked by members to obtain information. These members, as a rule, do not know what other members have this information. The headquarters office does know, and it goes to these other members, and brings into touch those who want and those who have.

The fact that this operation is not more extensive than it is—for apart from the A. N. A. it is not carried on in an organized way—is one proof that our national marketing sense has still a long way to go in its development.

The financial operation has been so many times repeated that to use it has become perfectly obvious in business promotion. When it is a matter of finance, it is understood that no firm, wishing to promote its business on borrowed money, can live and act upon and by itself. But it is not yet a matter of almost unconscious or subconscious understanding that a firm, wishing to promote its business on borrowed advertising and selling knowledge, cannot live and act upon and by itself without probably spending money in wasteful and unnecessary experimentation.

The bankers, at any rate, have nothing on the A. N. A., and the A. N. A. could teach the bankers a whole lot about promoting their own business—with the exception, possibly, of Mr. Dwight W. Morrow.

SATURATED SOLUTIONS

SOME months ago mention was made in this page to the need that had arisen for the reconsideration of matters of advertising technique because so there has come about reconsideration of advertising's primer facts.

These matters belong to the primer stage of advertising, and, in the practice of experienced men, are as unconsciously automatic as that of the alphabet. But, even as every mighty disturbance—physical or mental or moral—drives human beings back to first principles, of advertising's primer facts.

In the mind of the advertiser there is no questioning of the correctness of these facts. He is reconsidering them not because he is in any doubt, but because he sees some publishers, in this their advertising millenium, apparently regardless of the future of their publications.

A chemically saturated solution exists when water has taken up as much as it will: there is a limit to the amount of solid matter that can be dissolved.

And there is a limit to the amount of advertising in a publication that the reader can appreciate, or assimilate or absorb, or digest—whatever it is that the reader does with advertising. It is an axiom among men conducting national advertising that as the number of advertising pages increases, the attention value of any one advertisement decreases. It is to be doubted if any degree of ingenuity in make-up can offset that effect of an advertisement-crowded publication. Whether the trouble lies with the "solid matter" in the publication or the "solid matter" in the brain of the reader, the advertiser pays out good money for less return.

It is a wise publisher who does not permit his newspaper to become saturated with advertising matter. Inflation decreases value in both monetary and advertising connections.

PHILADELPHIA CHAPTER OF A. N. A.

A meeting of this chapter was held in the rooms of the Poor Richard Club in Philadelphia, on the evening of October 7th. The vice-president, Mont H. Wright, presided. Mr. Wright introduced as the first subject of the evening, "Rising Costs of Space, Electrotyping, Ink, Work, etc., and How to Meet Them." This matter was considered from all angles in short talks from many of the members, and some very valuable information and useful ideas were developed.

The meeting then considered the question, "How Are We Going to Meet the Rising Cost of Space and the Crowded Condition of National Publications?" The meeting decided that further information was necessary, and the matter will probably be dealt with at the next meeting.

Other subjects considered were, "Salaries of Clerical Workers and Assistants;" "Time to be Devoted to Visits of Salesmen;" "How to Distribute the Advertising Costs of Different Brands."

THE following firms have been elected to membership in the Association: Sexton Manufacturing Company, Fairfield, Ill., Wesley R. Warren, advertising manager; American Hard Rubber Company, 11 Mercer street, New York City, O. B. Carson, advertising manager; Diamond State Fibre Company, W. A. Adams, Jr., advertising manager, Bridgeport, Pa.

CHINESE AWAKENING TO AMERICAN WAYS IN PUBLISHING AND ADVERTISING

E. M. Scholz Sees New Era of Development in Big Eastern Republic, Opening Vast Markets for American Products---Cites Some Common Errors in Judgment on Part of Our Advertisers.

BY EMIL M. SCHOLZ

[NOTE: This is the second and concluding chapter of Mr. Scholz' interesting analysis of present-day conditions in the Far East. He notes the dawn of American ideas applying to trade, to the press and to advertising, in the giant Oriental republic and points out the course which thru forward movement must take.—Editor.]

[PART TWO.]

THE news print paper situation in Japan is just as acute as it has been in the United States. Paper during the war in fairly large quantities sold for as high as seven cents a pound.

The imports of paper were practically shut off and the Japanese newspapers depended chiefly on the mills and pulp from Hokaido, one of the northern islands. Japanese capital is looking with covetous eyes on the timber resources of Siberia and, when the situation clears up in Siberia, there ought to be opportunity for the establishment of some large pulp mills in Vladivostok, or in the interior on the Amur River, which is open to navigation for a certain period each year, with excellent facilities for ocean shipping.

Labor Costs

The great growth of the newspapers in China will result in a big increased demand annually from that country and with China denuded of so much of her timber there ought to be a very promising field there as a market for newsprint.

Japan, with her low labor costs, is not the field for American markets. The Japanese will manufacture anything that they can possibly find a market for, and the American manufacturer who goes to great expense in developing a market in Japan will ultimately find his entire market eut under in the establishment of a similar enterprise with the lower paid Japanese labor.

China Our Big Eastern Market

The American high tariff experts had nothing on the Japanese of today. They have a duty of 275 per cent on tobacco, cigarettes and cigars, absolutely shutting out everything from the outside. Tobacco is a government monopoly and the Japanese grown tobacco, while vile tasting to the foreigner, is apparently relished by the Japanese. A nation that will insist on growing its own tobacco, and raising everything that can be substituted for foreign-made goods, blocking, damaging and delaying the shipments from outside sources through her territory, and violating copyrights, patents and trade marks with impunity, through failure to regulate thoroughly the smaller manufacturers, who do not scruple to stoop to many of the praetices banned in Americe thirty years or more ago is no promising field for Americans.

The big field for America is now China and also later on Siberia. China, with its teeming millions, is in the process of awakening from its centuries of lethargy. Its people are turning to the Americans as their proved friends.

They are erying for education and every progressive Chinese urges universal compulsory instruction. Yet with nearly 90 per cent illiteracy prevailing in China, the 10 per cent educated population comprises over forty million people, or a number almost as great as the total population of Japan and about six times the population of the Philippines.

Once the people are thoroughly awakened to read, the newspapers in China, instead of rarely attaining a circulation in excess of thirty thousand as at present, will attain a circle of readers twenty times that number. What a great field it will be for the advertiser who wants to reach densely populated districts! I have seen demonstrations of the responsiveness of the Chinese to newspaper advertising in a limited way in Shanghai, where a popular dollar American watch was advertised in a Chinese newspaper through the medium of advertisements prepared in Chinese and illustrated in Chinese style.

Chinese Dailies Not Rich

The newspaper had a circulation of less than 30,000 daily and the volume of results was greater than an advertiser could expect from any American publication with ten times that circulation. The Chinese have great faith in the printed word. I am told that the sale of pills in China is immense because if a Chinaman takes a remedy and it helps him he sticks to it for the rest of his life. The sale of cigarettes in China has assumed proportions far beyond the wildest dreams of the enterprising American Tobacco people, who created the market for themselves. Cigarette advertising in the Chinese dailies is one of their big sources of advertising revenue.

The Chinese dailies have not reached the degree of opulence attained by the Japanese.

In addition to the facilities of the government controlled news agencies in Japan some of the Japanese newspapers send their own correspondents to the Peace Conference and also maintain sales, through the holding of the men stationed in London and New York and spend money freely for cable tolls. The Chinese newspapers have not yet attained the commercial success to be able to afford this. They even find it difficult to gather the news from the various parts of the Chinese empire.

American newspaper men are organizing news bureaus in Shanghai and Pekin to furnish news to the Chinese press and to transmit to them such news as they can obtain from the outside. But without the full cooperation of the American news gathering agencies they will find it difficult to succeed. Reuters agency has been firmly intrenched, and the Associated Press through some unfortunate arrangement has tied its hands for the dissemination of news in China.

Every encouragement extended to the Chinese in the upbuilding of a free press will result in permanent good to America and in strengthening the republican institutions in China that at present are struggling to exist.

Many of our American editors look at the Japanese and Chinese questions as one peculiarly affecting the Pacific coast. Yet the greatest penetration into the trade of the Orient is being made by manufacturers and others located in the central west and the Atlantic seaboard. Powerful banking institutions in the east are establishing branch banks and expanding their facilities throughout the Orient.

They are meeting the severe competition of the British banks and the thorough methods of the Japanese branch banks, and they are succeeding because the Americans are working along original lines, and do not assume the false dignity that affects other nationals, except the Japanese, in dealing direct with the Chinese business man instead of through a compradore, as the middleman is known in China.

Many American business houses are making a mistake in accepting the services of representatives to handle their goods in the Orient without adequate protection against smothering their sales through the holding of the agency merely to protect the product of another manufacturer of the same nationality as the representative.

In various newspapers in Hongkong I have seen no better illustration than the selling price of automobiles. The Hudson Supersix is sold for $4,500, the Overland "Model 90" is advertised at $2,000 and the Chandler at $4,250. If the American manufacturers want to compete with the European manufacturers they must control the retail selling price. You can buy a Corona typewriter (worth $50 in the United States) in Manila for 110 pesos, which is about the equivalent of $55. The same machine is sold in Hongkong for $80.

Poor Judgment in Advertising

There is no duty to pay into either plaee. If a manufacturer has a product to sell he had better send over some reliable man to make a survey of the field, or tie up to one of the many reliable export houses, preferably of entire American origin.

The advertising copy and the selection of mediums made by Americans at times is also laughable. A manufacturer of a fountain pen, whose product is known all over the United States, uses (almost to the exclusion of everything else) advertising in a directory that rests on the counter of most of the hotels in the Orient and is used only in a hurry and at that never perused except by the bell-boy perhaps. This advertising advice was given to the manufacturer by an agent who perhaps never say the inside of an American agency.

In Manila the advertising of a prominent American manufacturer of toilet preparations was prepared by a local selling agent, who used most of the page or half pages for his own name in big letters, making his own business rather than the product that paid for the space. When the American manufacturer spends his money in the Orient in fashion like this, it is small wonder that he gets meagre results.

Selection of Ad Media

I traveled with a young American salesman through a number of cities. He represented a large American manufacturer of paints and floor preparations. The Oriental advertising was placed through an American Agency, and it was appearing in the newspapers published in the English language in all the large cities of the Orient.

The amount of space used was conservative and the copy rather good. But the selection of mediums was decidedly amateurish.

Bear in mind that the white populations of Asia is about one-tenth of one per cent of the total; and that the native, whether he is a Japanese, Chinese or Filipino reads preferably the newspapers printed in the English language would be about the same as advertising in the daily paper printed in the French language in New York City to reach the entire population. Would you not think a French manufacturer rather short-sighted to adopt such a policy to reach New Yorkers?

ROBIN DAMON URGES BIG-CITY DAILIES TO CUT TWO PAGES EACH ISSUE

Salem Publisher Thinks Reduction Possible Without Serious Impairment and That It Would Quickly Stabilize Newsprint Market

BY ROBIN DAMON
PUBLISHER SALEM (MASS.) NEWS

IN the troubled years following the civil war it was seen by most of our financiers that the resumption of specie payments was vital to the restoration of normal conditions. But the issue was evaded. Finally, a statesman of that day said: "The way to resume is to resume." The same remark applies to the present-day white paper situation. The way to save is to save.

Many Publishers Seem Oblivious to Dangers

Plenty of warning about the dangerous condition has been given. And advice has been offered. So far as I can see little or no attention has been paid to the ominous words of warning or to the practical advice. Here is one instance of neglect: A recent Sunday issue of one of New York's leading papers had more than 128 pages. The publisher of the particular publication has been quoted regarding the newspaper business and has frequently spoken at the sessions of the A. N. P. A. He knows that white paper is scarce. Yet on this example he places before other publishers. Another indication of the way newspapers expect to use the supply of white paper is the advancement of the How & Company, which states that more than 400 new presses are being manufactured.

Following the arguments advocating conservation of paper, what can manufacturers think of the action of Boston publishers, who are printing from 18 to 32 pages daily? And it is the same story in all the big cities. Paper is going through the presses with dangerous prodigality.

Mr. Damon's Remedy

Of course the remedy for the present and future is simple—so simple, in fact, that it has escaped the notice of the big men in the newspaper business. At least they give no indication of possessing the knowledge.

Cut the number of pages is the answer. Comes the nearly unanimous cry: "No can do."

And so white paper soars to ruinous prices—that is, for smaller papers of the country that must at least pay expenses from receipts.

Here is an illustration of the way paper could be saved: If the Boston daily papers saved two pages a day the total would be 360 tons a month, and that quantity of paper would furnish supply the other dailies in Massachusetts. Follow this plan in all the other large cities and the present sky-rocket paper market would drop to about normal prices.

Touching upon the practical side of the matter, I should say that with the present method of running magazine-newspapers it would require only a small amount of work to devise plans whereby the 14 to 16 columns of space suggested as the minimum of saving could be eliminated from almost every "big paper." This plan would really solve the problem. Then if advertising rates were boosted on lines following the increase in every other business, few daily papers would suffer from lack of white stock.

To me the problem of saving the paper supply is as easy as "falling off a log." Other publishers, who have wider opportunities, throw up their hands and say: "It can't be done." They do not know how to carry out the job. And so owners of paper mills and paper brokers smile while they stuff their boxes with Liberty and other bonds.

Advertising rates are undoubtedly too low, considering the fact that a dollar today is worth only 50 cents compared with 1914. Here I again cite an instance: The minimum rate of the Salem News for bulk space is 4 cents a line. A Boston daily with 22 times our circulation sells space for 25 cents a line. It should have 75 cents to $1. This particular paper frequently issues 32 pages. It has long been my contention that any daily regularly printing so many as 16 pages was weak in its business department, and I should set 12 to 14 as plenty.

As to Advertising Rates

Another favorite expression or argument of mine is that if newspapers were manufactured with the same attention to costs demanded by cotton mill directors paper makers would be chasing around after orders, instead of writing customers that they will permit them to use a certain per cent of the amount asked for.

However, personal contact with a considerabel number of prominent newspaper publishers has convinced me that they will never permit their establishments to be run on the sort of regulations adopted by other business concerns. Apparently both leading and minor publishers believe they are absolved from paying attention to ordinary ideas of doing business. And so they keep on selling for two cents a daily paper that costs for white paper more than the receipts from circulation, and advertising space is frequently sold for less than the expense of carrying the copy.

Some publishers I have talked with have expressed a hope or opinion that matters would get "normal" again within a short time, and so they have hesitated to adopt plans for cutting costs and other plans that would increase incomes. Nothing doing in that line, I'd say. Instead, I think prices for material will go higher and wages and salaries will not drop for years. An increase in running expenses of from ten to twenty-five per cent. is probable during 1920-21. So I say: Prepare.

SEYMOUR BACK WITH A. N. P. A.

F. A. Dowd Now Purchasing Agent of N. Y. Evening Post

Theodore P. Seymour has resigned as purchasing agent and assistant to the publisher of the New York Evening Post and has rejoined the staff of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, assisting L. B. Palmer, secretary and manager. F. P. Sherwood, who has been in poor health for several months, has been given an indefinite leave of absence.

Frank A. Dowd has been appointed purchasing agent of the Evening Post. He has been in that paper's service for thirteen years, as a reporter, secretary to the managing editor, secretary to the Saturday magazine editor, and in the circulation and auditing departments. He served two years in France, eight months of which he spent as a member of the Stars & Stripes editorial staff.

E. A. Owens has been appointed auditor of the Evening Post, succeeding C. E. Lonergan, who has gone into business in Minneapolis.

CHINESE AWAKENING TO AMERICAN WAYS

I do not want to minimize the value of the papers printed in the English language in the Orient. They are performing a very useful service and appeal to the limited foreign clientele, which trade is worth while, and also to the limited number of natives who read such publications. The English language press also has considerable "dealer" influence. But the newspaper to use for the big masses, is without doubt the paper in the vernacular and the neglect of such arbitrarily restricts the sale of the product or the establishment of the trade mark. The advertising for such publications should be prepared carefully in the Chinese, Japanese, or Filipino (Tagalog) as the case may be. And the distribution should be established to meet the demand at once.

NEW phonetic Alphabet, proposed by the China Continuation Committee, a group of Missionaries. The advantages of this system for rapid teaching of illiterates is apparent. Under the system even old women of 70 could be taught to read and write Chinese in less than three weeks. The characters can be fitted to a typewriter, and if adopted would revolutionize education in China. Instead of thousands of characters there would be less than fifty. Such a change would make China a great newspaper reading nation in one generation.

American ideas and methods must ultimately prevail in the Orient. Most of the Japanese bankers are American trained. The Chinese are favoring American methods. The Filipino is our ward. The Chinese are reaching out for technical education and they will make the same rapid progress that the Japanese made and will not take unfair advantage of our instruction. American advertising methods will be the ones to win out if we take advantage of the conditions and train some of the orientals in our agencies.

Like all undeveloped spheres there is a great waste of money in many of the mediums that are used by Americans, and money is wasted by Japanese and Chinese in supporting publications having no reading circle and without influence.

Fine, artistically printed affairs catch the eye of the unwary, and the diversion of money that should be spent in American newspapers, to house organs issued by steamship lines, directories, guide books, etc., struck me quite forcibly in going about from place to place.

I quite candidly believe that of all the publications printed in the English language outside of the various dailies there are not over a dozen weekly or monthly publications deserving of any recognition. Distinction must also be made as to the class of people to be reached. The newspaper is the safe medium, either weekly or daily.

Trade journals are developing up rapidly and will serve a useful purpose. In China there is a crying need for several trade journals to be printed in the Chinese language.

American organization is coming into play and the Americans, who were at one time, and at that recently, noted in the Far East for their jealousies and squabbles amongst themselves are getting together. I presume that the influx of a higher type of business men

Thirty-one years ago the E. Katz Special Advertising Agency was established.

In the years that have followed, the business has thrived chiefly because of our policy to do business right.

We sell our papers for what they are. We make no claims that are not in strict accord with the facts.

And our papers, be they large or small, weak or strong, have only one rate for a given service.

We have earned and retained the respect and the good will of the publishers we serve because of the results our organization produces. This good will is not founded on sentiment, but on satisfactory service.

We not only produce business for our publishers, but we insure the payment of 100% of that business. On the same day of every month of every year whether we have collected or not, our checks go to our publishers in full for the previous month's advertising.

We have shown not only progress, but permanency—stability. And it is our aim to persevere—to discover better and more efficient ways to serve the publishers we represent.

Much of our profits we put back into our business that we may continue to remain among those progressive representatives who believe in bettering the business in which their livelihood is made.

We are in a position to represent additional progressive publishers—men who believe in guaranteeing advertisers a definate circulation and selling them on a one price basis. To those publishers to whom our methods may appeal, we are ready to submit a proposition.

1,335 EVENING NEWSPAPERS OF U. S. HAVE TOTAL CIRCULATION OF 17,505,178

OF the 1,335 evening newspapers of the United States, whose circulations and advertising rates are analyzed in a double-page tabulation appearing in this issue, 813 have circulations below 5,000. The total for this group is 1,931,162, and the joint advertising rate is $11.30 per agate line.

Reference to the state figures under this classification will show that Pennsylvania leads in evening newspapers having less than 5,000 circulation, with 74. Indiana has 73 and Ohio 69.

There are 218 evening newspapers with circulations ranging from 5,000 to 10,000, the average for the group being 6,951. The aggregate circulation of these papers is 1,508,423, and the joint rate $5.15 per agate line, this figuring .0034 per agate line per thousand of circulation.

The rate per line for each thousand of circulation in the Middle-Atlantic Group is .00289 and in the Central Group .00290. This indicates a substantial uniformity in rates in newspapers of the same class, considered from the standpoint of circulation, in eleven of the principal states.

Uniform Rates in Many States

There are 134 evening newspapers with circulations between 10,000 and 20,000, the average being 14,008, and the total circulation 1,877,030. The joint advertising rate for this group is $5.02 per agate line. The average rate per thousand of circulation is .0026. Here again the rate per line for each thousand of circulation in the Central and Middle-Atlantic states is practically uniform and is the lowest shown for the various groups of states.

Ninety-nine newspapers are classed as having circulations between 20,000 and 50,000, with the great total of 3,302,544, averaging for each paper in the group 32,349. The joint advertising rate is $6.83 per line; the rate per line per thousand of circulation is .0021.

There are but 39 evening newspapers having circulations between 50,000 and 100,000. The aggregate circulation of this group is 2,700,069, and the joint advertising rate $4.73 an agate line. This figures .0017 a line per thousand.

There are 26 evening newspapers having circulations between 100,000 and 300,000, or an aggregate of 3,780,244. This is the largest total listed for any of the groups. The 26 papers average 145,394 copies each, which of course indicates that they are metropolitan papers throughout. The joint rate per agate line is $5.95, or .0015 per line per thousand of circulation.

Lowest Basic Rate

There are but six evening newspapers with circulations above 300,000 and these have a total circulation of 2,505,706, with a joint advertising rate of $2.93 per agate line. This is .0011 per line per thousand of circulation, the lowest basic rate of any group. The average circulation for the papers in this class is 417,618. It includes the Chicago Daily News and Chicago American, the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, the Boston American, the New York Evening Journal and Evening World.

Interesting confusion are shown as to rates between the 813 evening newspapers having less than 5,000 circulation and the six evening newspapers above 300,000. The line rate for each thousand of circulation in the first group is .0081; for the last group it is .0011. An advertiser may buy space in the 813 small city dailies with a total circulation of 1,931,162 at a joint rate of $11.30 an agate line. He may buy space in the six biggest evening newspapers, with a total circulation of 2,505,706, at $2.95 per agate line.

Yet this variance in cost is based upon perfectly sound considerations. When the total output of six newspaper publishing plants is greater than that of 813 separate plants, basic overhead costs enter into the calculation and enforce the higher rate for the smaller papers. Of course, the intensive local appeal of the smaller dailies renders their use indispensible to advertisers who would reach and develop the small city markets. And their rates, considering the nature of the service they render, are extremely low.

The total circulation of these 1,335 evening newspapers is 17,505,178 and the joint advertising rate for the entire list is $41.93 per agate line.

Evidence Arrived Too Late to Convict Minor

Army Wanted Certain Conviction to Balk "Red" Activities in United States

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 24.—Robert Minor, former newspaper writer and cartoonist, who was arrested by American army authorities in Germany on the charge of distributing German propaganda was freed because the army did not discover enough evidence to warrant his conviction until after his release, according to Secretary of War Baker, who gave the facts in the case to the Senate.

Minor was arrested, the report states, following disclosures by a sergeant of the intelligence department of the army, who, in the guise of a deserter from the American army, gained access to the Spartacide councils and learned of Minor's revolutionary activities. Corroborative evidence was sought by the judge advocate's department of the A. E. F., but none was forthcoming as long as the preparations for the trial were going on. Because it was felt that a trial resulting in an acquittal, a disproved conviction or an approved conviction based on anything but the most conclusive evidence would be of no propaganda assistance to the radical element in the United States, it was decided not to risk a trial of Minor, despite the belief in his guilt.

Immediately after his release, testimony was secured from a German radical who knew at first hand of Minor's part in preparing material for distribution in the American zone of occupation and from the printer who put that material into pamphlet form.

Secretary Baker's report does not state why the discovery of the new evidence was not followed by further proceedings against the cartoonist.

"K. C." Star Has a New Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 29.—George Longan, city editor of the Kansas City Star for many years, is now news editor of the Star, a recently created position. C. G. "Pete" Wellington, assistant city editor, succeeds Mr. Longan. Mr. Wellington is a graduate of the journalism department of the Kansas State Agricultural department. Ralph Morrison has resigned to become chief publicity man for the Kansas Natural Gas company here.

"Personal" Column Revived in Big City Daily

Experiment of St. Louis Republic Reported Successful in Building Circulation

The Sunday St. Louis Republic has evolved a circulation building stunt that is proving eminently satisfactory in stimulating city-wide interest in the paper and in building the subscription list. In principle, the scheme is merely an extension and intensification of the small-town "personals" idea—throwing open more widely the society section than the term "society" news strictly would imply.

The Republic each Sunday runs a 12-page Part II, called "The Neighborhood Section." A sub-captain reads: "Something About Folks You Know. You'll Find Your Neighbor's Name in It." The city of St. Louis proper is divided into 28 "neighborhoods," each of which is plainly identified and differentiated from all the others by a map with street boundaries appearing at the beginning of each neighborhood news section.

Young women correspondents, living in those neighborhoods, are employed to report for each Sunday issue. The correspondents' names, address and telephone number in every case is printed immediately below the map, making it easy for anyone in her vicinity to reach her with news items of value to time.

Editorially the "neighborhood" sections comprise club and social notes considered not important enough for the general news columns. All sorts of chatty, informal gossip also is used, together with a profusion of portraits, the latter of which comprehend everything from pictures of the new baby, the nuptial photograph, the latest picture of the girl who has just left for California or returned from boarding school, overseas snapshots of neighborhood boys in uniform, and the like.

This "Neighborhood Section" is not to be confused with the ordinary suburban or small adjacent town news which the Republic—like all medium-city papers—carries.

Hammond Sells His Paper

FREMONT, NEB., Oct. 29.—Ross L. Hammond, president of the company publishing the Fremont Tribune, who last August celebrated his 40th anniversary as editor of the paper, has disposed of his stock to his nephews, Ray W. and Lucius R. Hammond, and Walt B. Reynolds, circulation manager. Mr. Hammond will go to Riverside, Cal., to enter the banking business.

Miss Hall Is in Siberia

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 28.—Miss Mary Hall, assistant librarian of the Kansas City Star, has written a letter to friends here telling of her appointment as director of refugee work for the American Red Cross, at Novonic, Siberia. Novonic is 400 miles east of Omsk, on the Trans-Siberian railway. Miss Hall sailed last April as a nurse's aid.

For Uniform Printers' Wage

AUSTIN, TEX., Oct. 28.—A meeting of the Texas Allied Printing Trades Council will be held here next Saturday to discuss a uniform wage scale for printers. George Pierce of Fort Worth is president. At a recent meeting of the employing printers, held in Houston late in the summer, plans were made to provide a uniform wage scale for printers, pressmen and bookbinders.

French Printers May Strike

Paris newspaper printers are taking a strike vote following a demand for higher wages.

The combined daily and Sunday circulation is 6,538,893 copies and the combined rate is $10.6425429 per line on a 2,500 line basis or $9.7341 per line on a 10,000 line basis.

There is no other place in the country where advertising space may be purchased at so low a rate.

There is no other place in the country where advertising space is as valuable as it is in the state of New York.

This is because there are more people in New York than in any other state—more possible customers. They are people of all walks of life, from the richest to the poorest.

A concentrated advertising campaign, directed directly to the consumers, through these daily newspapers, and linked up with local dealers, is the best, quickest and cheapest way of popularizing merchandise, and there is no better or more fertile territory than the state of New York.

These daily newspapers co-operate with manufacturers in placing merchandise, in selecting dealers, and in helping dealers to move goods.

The modern idea of advertising is to concentrate in given territory and then pound hard.

New York state is choice territory.

NEWS IN BRIEF of the NEWSPAPER AND ADVERTISING WORLD

The St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Evening Caledonian has started for Newport, Vt., under the name of the Record. The Caledonian was purchased July 1, by Herbert A. Smith, who was formerly with the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, Boston Herald, and International News Service. The Newport Record is handled by Richard D. Howe, late of the I. N. S.

George W. Tyler, colored, committed suicide in jail before he could be arraigned in court on a charge of shooting Marcus Garvey, editor of the Negro World, New York.

Several students from the University of Minnesota journalism have taken up work with Minnesota papers. Miss Elsie Fjelstad is reporting and doing feature work on the Minneapolis Daily News. Miss Eunice Smith is on the Aitken Independent. Three others who did newspaper work during the summer, have returned to complete their course. Leland Petersen was with the Canby News, Miss Elsie Van Ness was with the Morris Tribune and Miss Alice Buckley did publicity work in Minneapolis.

Memorial services for Clifford W. Roberts, former assistant city editor of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard-Telegram, killed last year in France, were held on October 12.

The trial of Ray Green, editor of the Conecordia (Kan.) Blade-Empire, on charges of criminal libel, preferred by Rev. F. R. Berry, is under way.

The advertising committee of the New England Council of the A. A. A. A. prepared a series of five newspaper advertisements, each containing a striking argument for sound advertising and agency service, and this series was used by 45 New England dailies and nine Boston trade journals. The ads were attractively typed, each occupying about the space of a full page of Editor & Publisher. The newspapers and trade journals published them free of charge, as an appropriate greeting to the convention of the A. A. A. A. recently held in Boston.

Regular editions of Lima (Peru) newspapers were issued October 16, after a nine days' suspension owing to a printers' strike. Settlement of the strike was on the basis of a 30 per cent increase in wages.

The Newspaper Engraving Company, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has opened a branch plant in Kalamazoo, under the local management of J. H. Korff, formerly with the Grand Rapids Herald.

Having been at liberty two weeks, during one of which he published an edition of the Tar River Bounder, at Miami, J. J. Shepherd was returned to the Oklahoma State Penitentiary to begin serving a seven-year sentence given him last December. Shepherd was at liberty on an appeal bond, but his bondsmen requested to the court they be released.

A. W. Brown, Sunday editor of the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, is now also music editor since the recent resignation of George K. Thomas.

The Zanesville (Ohio) Times-Recorder and Signal owners have taken over the Sunday News, giving them morning, evening and Sunday editions.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., of the New York Herald, has been appointed New York correspondent of the Camp Bragg (Wilmington, N. C.) News, and his weekly articles are being featured by that newspaper.

The French Commission of Revision, to which was referred the appeal for a new trial of Pierre Lenoir, sentenced to death on charges of having intelligence with the enemy in the recent Paris Journal court martial case, has reported that it found no ground for a rehearing and he was executed by a firing squad last week.

The publishers of the proposed Norfolk (Va.) Daily News hope to start operation about February 1, 1920, according to B. Gray Tunstall, city treasurer and one of the owners.

David Hall of the Herald won the qualifying round of the New York Newspaper Golf Club tournament, October 20; Frank T. Cope of the Journal of Commerce had the second lowest score, with Martin E. Moore third.

Charles Willard Whittemore, assistant editor of Current Affairs, the paper published by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and Miss Ruth Elvira Waters, have been married.

Z. Z. Luidens has resigned from the Grand Rapids (Mich.) News staff to enter the University of Michigan.

Members of the Connecticut Editorial Association on October 17 were guests of the Connecticut Light and Power Company, which is bringing to fruition the development of a portion of the Housatonic River Valley between Stevenson and Sandy Hook, Newtown, as a source of water power.

The Yishihpao, the largest vernacular Liberal daily in Northern China, with editions in Peking and Tientsin, has been purchased by the Yishihpao Company, an American owned and controlled firm operating under a charter from the State of Nevada.

The Portland (Ore.) Advocate has filed a $25,000 libel suit against the Portland Times. Both newspapers are published by negroes.

George C. Schnitzer, for six years engaged on special work for the Houston Post, has resigned and gone with the Gulf Coast Lumberman as associate editor.

D. S. Stephens, circulation manager for the Farmers' Wife, St. Paul, has become circulation director of Farm & Fireside, New York.

The St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press and Farmers' Dispatch are about to inaugurate an automobile contest, with prizes totaling $11,000.

A Jewish weekly newspaper, to be printed in English, will make its appearance in Kansas City, Mo., the first week in January. M. Roth will be publisher. The paper will be known as the Standard.

Miss Mary M. Crowley has been elected chairman of the Chicago Women's Advertising Club's "on to Indianapolis" committee. Miss Crowley is connected with the John Bndd Company.

Emil Brisacher has opened an advertising agency in the Flood building, San Francisco.

Captain Frank Mason, whose demobilization left the United States without a military representative in Berlin, expects to return to the German capital very shortly—this time as a newspaper correspondent.

Alfred Stewart O'Brien, editor of the New England Sun, published in Bridgeport, Conn., is Socialist candidate for mayor there.

Joseph A. Altieri, editorial room worker on the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard Telegram, is Democratic candidate for sheriff in the municipal election to take place November 4.

Norman Shannon Hall, who was a lieutenant of infantry in the war and who is high court reporter for the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post, is to be marshal of the big Armistiee day parade in that city. He is commander of Raymond W. Harris Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In the seventh match for the Rodman Wanamaker cup between the golfers of the Advertising Club of New York and the Poor Richards of Philadelphia, the latter won by 12 points to 6. The outstanding feature of the day was a 78 made by W. Roy Barnhill of New York against R. C. Maxwell. He made the turn in 41 and gained a 31. The match was played October 14 in Philadelphia.

There Are Circulations—And Circulations

All is not gold that glitters, not even in Colorado

Advertisers there are fast learning that bulk circulation in itself is not the principal requisite in successful advertising.

But rather that the first essential to advertising success lies in finding a receptive and responsive audience—in other words, a circulation with buying ability.

If you would reach the high grade, intelligent, financially able people of Denver and the Mountain States use the columns of Denver's fastest growing evening paper, Newspaper writers covering the New York theatre district have organized. No strike or anything intended, they say. Only formed a club and they wish it to become known. Its name? The Cheese Club. The officers are: President, Thomas Oliphant; vice-president, Turley Lillon; treasurer, Frank Hughes; secretary, Benjamin Holtzman. Through the courtesy of E. F. Albee the members are making use of the club house of the National Vaudeville Artists.

And Is Still Active

Clyde P. Steen, I. E. A., once an active Ohio newspaper man, has changed his headquarters from Bedford, Va., to Lynchburg, Va., and recently visited in Chicago.

Boyden R. Sparkes Wrote It

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: Now that Ring and Briggs and G. P. A. have had their shares of soloxy in your columns perhaps you can spare a little space in which to praise an accomplished writer.

Who he is, this anonymous reporter, I do not know—he may be a star or a rube. What I do know is that he is a writer—and, in my opinion, as much of an artist as almost any producer of learned fiction current in the magazines.

His story of the robbery of the Roselle Bank on the last page of The Tribune today, seems to me a masterpiece of news writing. It is fresh, clear, picturesque and swift with no sacrifice of news to mere smartness, and in construction is remarkably logical. His characterization are sure and strong that I am sure the author will not long remain unknown to more creative work. Will you be kind enough to give him my congratulations?

GELETT BURGESS.

New York, Oct. 17, 1919.

Our Efficient Postal Service?

It is with many thanks to Mr. Burleson that we acknowledge receipt, Wednesday night, of a special delivery letter mailed at Watertown, N. Y., Monday night. At the time of going to press we expectantly await a special delivery mailed at Chicago on October 10.

Poor City Editors

Morton Birge, whose "Frog Pond" in the editorial page of the Boston American has even been looked upon with favor by the staid citizens of that city, has always shown real kindness for the weak and helpless—in his writings. That may or may not explain the following.

We hope it is not too much to now expect something from "Larry" Macdonald, of Slippery Rock, Pa., and Bill" Plummer, New Englander, and some others who are just hustling staff members. Here is McAdoo's offering:

Who's job is hard and bad and "sore."
Who's stuff is never big enough,
Who thinks he is an "awful stuff"?
The City Editor.

Who swears and swears and fumes and boils,
Who digs and dumps and grinds and toils,
Who steals and hunts and robs and mails?
The City Editor.

Who learns a tip ain't what it seems,
Who thinks the "features" in his dreams,
Who's mildest thoughts are piercing screams,
The City Editor.

Who's duty is to bear the brunt
Of yap crazy office "stunt,"
From reporters in a picture hunt?
The City Editor.

Who's not supposed to have a heart,
Or live his life a thing apart,
And let no human feeling start?
The City Editor.

Who has to stand for other's sins,
Even getting soused to having twins,
Who is the guy that never wins?
The City Editor.

Who's held responsible for all,
If any luck that may befall,
Who has to carry the can and "call"?
The City Editor.

Who's 'spozed to be the end and sum,
An accurate compendium
Of all the facts to Kingdom Come?
The City Editor.

Who needs the wisdom and the love
Of both the serpent and the dove,
With staff beneath and Boss above?
The City Editor.

Who has no time for home or wife,
Or even ponder after-life,
His best is unsurpassed strife—
The City Editor.

Sing Sing Editor May Return

Albert Van Ness of Brooklyn, who has served three terms in Sing Sing during the last of which he was editor of the Star of Hope, has pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging larceny of a gold watch and chain.

Judge Dike instantly recognized Van Ness, who during the last incarceration, which was for forgery, sent the Judge a copy of the prison paper each month. If convicted on the present charge Van Nass will face life imprisonment as a fourth offender.

BOOK OF GOLDEN CELEBRATION

Contains Addresses Delivered at Celebration of Ayer Founding

"The Book of the Golden Celebration" in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the founding of the advertising house of N. W. Ayer & Son, Philadelphia, has just been issued.

The book contains the addresses delivered on that occasion, April 4th last, and an introduction in which the story of what happened then is given as well as full-page reproductions in color of the portrait of F. Wayland Ayer, presented to the organization; the bronze tablet commemorating the life and work of Henry Nelson McKinney given by members of the firm; the gold loving cup from 210 American publishers; and of the autographed book presented to Mr. Ayer.

"The Book of the Golden Celebration" is dedicated to Francis Wayland Ayer, the founder of the house.

KINGSTON PAPER CELEBRATES

Canadian Daily Commemorates 110th Birthday With Big Edition

The 110th Anniversary number of the Kingston (Ont.) Daily Standard was issued on October 16, containing 48 pages and carries the story of the growth and development of Kingston and Canada as told in the Standard's files.

The Standard was established in 1810 by Stephen Miles and Charles Kendall as the Gazette. The name of the paper was changed many times during its long life and in 1908 it became the Standard when taken over by the present management, of which W. R. Givens is president and editor.

Portrayed Texas' Development

HOUSTON, TEX., Oct. 25.—"The Texas Development Edition" was the name of a splendid edition issued by the Chronicle October 16, the date of the paper's 18th anniversary. The story of the statewide development of Texas was set forth vividly, especially the amazing growth of the oil industry, which has made cities of villages and put in circulation almost more wealth than one can credit. Houston, of course, received her share of space in the record of achievements.

Ad Club Joins "C. of C."

JOPLIN, Mo., Oct. 28.—Reorganization of the Advertising Club, to be known as the advertising division of the Chamber of Commerce, is under way.

ILLINOIS

Geographically Illinois is Central.

East and West meet in Illinois.

Farmers, stock raisers, merchants from the West go to Illinois, not only to sell, but to buy.

Manufacturers and importers have headquarters or important branch houses in Illinois for the distribution of their wares.

Many of the most important manufacturers have their factories in Illinois.

Everything tends to making Illinois a great commercial state, as well as the meeting ground of people from all parts of the United States.

Business starting in Chicago goes into Illinois first, then it radiates through the rest of the middle west, and far out into the real west.

Illinois is the railroad center of the country, and has distribution facilities unequaled elsewhere.

As a try-out territory Illinois is second to none. Some of the best-known and biggest newspapers in the country are published in Illinois.

They are able and willing to cooperate in opening new territory, in strengthening old territory and in generally serving national advertisers.

This group of Illinois daily newspapers can do wonderful work for you.

COLVER HITS BACK AT CHICAGO PACKERS

Federal Trade Commissioner Says Millions Spent in Advertising by Meat Barons Has Caused "Editorial Astigmatism"

Hon. W. B. Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, paid his respects to the Chicago packers in the course of his address to the National Association of Ice Industries on Wednesday evening in New York. The commissioner, after explaining the genesis and purposes of the trade body, said:

"We have run afoul of a group of great business concerns whose business theories and practices we have had to question. These are the five big Chicago meat packers. They have retaliated. They have spent millions of dollars in advertising. The sums of money so spent are so great as to cause editorial astigmatism. These men have charged the Commission with conspiracy and what amounts to treason.

"The charge made by Senator Sherman has been answered and proof has been challenged. Instead of proof we get new charges. Employees of the Commission are charged with sedition and bolshevism. I dare them to come forward with their proof."

Mr. Colver cited how similar charges had been made from the same sources against Theodore Roosevelt in 1906, when he was urging the passage of a meat inspection law.

ROBB ON EDITOR & PUBLISHER

New News Editor Well Acquainted With Trade Field

Arthur T. Robb, Jr., has been appointed news editor of Editor & Publisher, succeeding Dan F. Miller, who resigned recently to become connected with Troy & Co., an investment securities house. Mr. Robb has been actively engaged in newspaper and advertising trade editorial work with The Fourth Estate since 1916.

During the war Mr. Robb served overseas as a sergeant in Company K, 311th Infantry, in France, and was gassed in action. He is also a former editor-in-chief of the Columbia University Daily Spectator and at one time was connected with the Daily News-Record, the daily publication of the textile trade.

Economy Urged on N. Y. Publishers

Economy of all kinds in the use of paper was urged upon the members of the Publishers Association of New York City at their meeting on Wednesday. Minor labor matters that had been referred to committees were discussed during the meeting, which was largely devoted to routine business.

Mobile Register's New Edition

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 26.—The Register has inaugurated a twelve-page state news section on Sunday mornings, containing general news of its territory in Alabama, South Mississippi and West Florida. Frederick H. Waltz, formerly city editor of the Nashville Tennessean, is tri-state news editor.

Will Enlarge Plant

Meriden, Conn., Oct. 28.—The Morning Record has outgrown the building it erected in 1915 and the equipment installed at that time and has completed plans for a large addition to the structure and a material increase in mechanical facilities, including a new 32-page press.

HEARST WARS ON TAMMANY

One Libel Suit Already Instituted in Political Fight

The attorney for Charles F. Murphy, head of Tammany Hall, filed October 28, in the New York County Clerk's office, a summons in a suit for libel again William R. Hearst and the Star Publishing Company. The summons did not mention the damages that would be demanded, but one of the attorneys for Mr. Murphy thought $1,000,000 would be asked. Notice of appearance for Mr. Hearst and his publishing company by ex-Assistant District Attorney William A. De Ford was filed simultaneously.

The libel suit is the outcome of a new political war opened by Mr. Hearst against Tammany Hall and Governor Smith. The latter recently challenged Hearst to an open debate on their differences, but the editor declined very pointedly to discuss the issues in any way other than through his newspapers.

Morgan Greets King as Kensan

Hutchinson, Kan., Oct. 27.—When King Albert of Belgium and the royal party passed through Hutchinson, Wilmot L. ("Billy") Morgan, editor of the News and a former "Y" worker in France, was called upon by the people of his home town to show them how to greet a royal couple. "Billy" was equal to the occasion. He instructed his fellow townsmen to "take off your hats and give King Albert the Kansas salute." "How are you, ol' top" is just as acceptable to the king as "Howdy," they were told.

Beatty-Kelley Wedding

Raymond R. Beatty, connected with the Martin V. Kelley Company, Toledo and New York, and Miss Bernice M. Kelley, daughter of Martin V. Kelley, were married in New York on October 28.

Why Second Class Mail Is Lost

FACSIMILES OF ADDRESSES SHOWING WHY COPIES OF PUBLICATIONS ARE LOST IN THE MAIL

Compiled by LORD & THOMAS

EVERY day an enormous number of copies of publications that cannot be delivered are received at the postoffice, according to a statement made recently by the Chicago Postoffice.

This unfortunate condition exists to an alarming extent, and, because of numerous complaints from advertisers, advertising agencies, and publishers, the Chicago Postoffice recently made an investigation of 18,000 pieces of second class mail, already sorted for distribution within the city, to ascertain the reasons why copies of publications fail to reach their destination.

The investigation showed that 99.84 per cent of these 18,000 pieces of second class mail were properly assorted by the postoffice—that is, placed in the proper bags for distribution to the localities for which they were intended—which indicates that the cause for the failure of so much second class mail to be delivered is not due to an error on the part of the postoffice service.

Further investigation showed that a large percentage of this second class mail could not be delivered because of incomplete or incorrect, and in many cases, absolutely unintelligible addresses.

The above facsimiles of addresses on copies of publications, selected at random from one bag of second class mail, tell the story plainly. One address printed over another, double addresses, split names, indistinct names, etc., are the causes or the failure of much second class mail to be delivered.

While publishers' mailing lists may be correct, these errors evidently point to the fact that the addressing machine in many cases is not properly handled.

As the amount of second class mail lost daily is a source of much trouble and inconvenience to advertisers, advertising agencies, the postoffice, and the publishers, themselves, the matter should have the immediate attention of the publisher.

The seriousness of the condition is clearly indicated by the fact that one advertising agency alone is obliged to write from 100 to 130 letters daily to publishers, asking for copies that have not been delivered.

AUTZMAN REFUSES PARDON

refers Jail to Abandonment of Newspaper Business

PORTLAND, ORE., Oct. 28.—Ham Kautzman, whose case has attracted the interest and sympathy of the Oregon Editorial Association, has refused to accept conditional pardon from Governor Olcott. Kautzman, who is 72 years old, was editor of the Columbia Herald. He was imprisoned for sending improper matter through the mail. He still has a year to serve.

Governor Olcott's pardon was granted after an investigation made at the request of the editorial association. It was conditional on Kautzman giving up the newspaper business and leaving the state. "My newspaper has suspended publication and I am virtually ruined, but my only hope of making a living is in the newspaper business," said the old man. "If I must leave the state and have no more to do with the only trade I know, I would become a public charge on some other state. I prefer to stay in jail."

RALEIGH TIMES CHANGES

Hellen Business Manager and Boyd to Direct Advertising

RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 28.—George B. Hellen, for the past seven years advertising manager of the Times, on November 1 will become business manager and assistant to the publisher, John A. Park.

D. L. Boyd, Jr., will become advertising manager, being assisted by Harry Schwartz, Melvin D. Finch, and Mrs. Arthur Aronson. Mr. Finch is succeeded as accountant in the business department by R. E. Briscoe.

Dealing with the Wholesaler in Wisconsin is a CITY matter, but HE sells MOST to the country!

Still, it is no problem in Wisconsin to advertise to the ruralites, who have the money. DISTRIBUTION is provided, both for Daily papers and Commodities, by upwards of 75,000 miles of highways, 12,000 miles of which are surfaced: and by 7,693 miles of railroads, besides 847 miles of electric railroad track.

Thereby the whole country side is assured daily newspapers and goods.

Advertise your goods in the daily newspapers and the consumers will get them through the wholesalers.

As to the number of stores, remember that in Wisconsin it is not numbers but SIZE that counts!

WATERTOWN CONVENTION FOUND ANSWERS FOR CIRCULATORS

Brought Realization That "Houses Must Be Cleaned" for Coming Day of Absolute Paid-in-Advance Subscription.

BY FENTON DOWLING

IF your publisher desires to know what you members of the New York State Circulation Managers' Association did during the two days of last week, Monday and Tuesday, you presented yourself from your office you have the chance of your life for an alibi.

And, maybe, in having this alibi exploited in the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, some publishers, who do not take proper interest in circulation affairs, will see the advantage of permitting their circulation men to join the Association, thus affording an opportunity for them to mix with a set of men who are looking for light and who are enriching their minds from an exchange of ideas brought out at the semi-annual meetings. The publishers and the business managers are invited too.

Discussions Carried On Until Midnight

The New York contingent, for instance, left the big city Sunday night, and reached Watertown, N. Y., at 9 A. M. Monday. They went into session with forty other visitors at once and accomplished that first day a vast amount of work. With the exception of a few hours for refreshments, the business discussions were carried up to midnight.

The next day the subjects were so interesting that only luncheon and a brief respite spell were allowed before train time and the start for their homes. Praetically two full days' work and sixteen hours of travel were crowded inside the period from Sunday to Tuesday night.

Sure to Find An Answer

The economics necessary to be effected; the proper procedures in the event of necessity of increased prices; how to build circulation profitably under these times of high prices; how to help publishers in their trials and hardships; consistent modern methods for city, suburban and country circulation; room economies—are only a few of the topics discussed and for which solutions were found at this meeting.

No matter what your local problem may be you are sure to find some one in such a gathering who is having or has had similar difficulty; and if you are not afraid to ask questions, you will profit by the advice so freely dispensed.

Circulators must recognize the importance of co-operation, and the modern publisher is confronted with problems every day where the circulation man, if he is posted on methods and tactics of others who are successful, can reach a helping hand to his employer.

Day of Cash-in-Advance

Circulations must be made cleaner and less involved, for the day is fast coming when recognition of paid-in-advance or absolutely cash subscription is the only kind the advertiser will pay for. This is the program today of all the successful newspapers, and the recent New York meeting in its deliberations pointed out the way to this result for any who are not living up to the test come.

Extracts from papers printed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week and those appearing today throw light on many a hard problem. The new president of the association, M. J. Burke, of the Brooklyn Eagle, offers a plan and a promise of great value to New York State newspapers and circulation managers would best serve the interests of their employers and their own welfare by giving him wholehearted support.

Last week EDITOR & PUBLISHER presented the meat of the talks given by James McKernan, F. S. Levy, Frank A. Roberts, W. C. Hixson, M. J. Burke, and Daniel W. Tanner. The following completes the entire program:

A simple system for recording orders and stops for city carriers and mail subscriptions was described by C. E. Blewer of the Binghamton Press and Leader. He said:

Recording Orders and "Stops"

"We have a duplicate card, one white and one blue, in pad form and the correct size for filing. The white card is given to the carrier, and is marked in large letters across the face "SEND." It has a place for the name, address, route, town, also the card number, paper number, date started, date stopped and remarks. At the bottom of the card we print the following instructions for the carriers:

"Your increased profits depend on good service. Call and find out just where to deliver papers; then do it. Poor delivery will lose this subscriber."

The blue slip is the same form as the white except the word "SEND" is omitted. The blue cards are filed with the proper routes and our carrier records are kept in this manner.

The stop form is the same size as the send, printed in white and yellow. The white card is given to the carrier and the word "STOP" is printed across the face of it. The address and route number are likewise shown. At the bottom are printed the following instructions:

"It is just as necessary to hold old subscribers as it is to get new ones. Call and find out why this subscriber discontinued. If temporary, find out when you can start delivery. Your profit depend on this."

Our city carrier routes run from one to eighty-five and each route has a number. The boys know as it is to our best interest to very particular to keep each boy's route by itself, and we order that it be followed.

The change slips are the same size in yellow and blue, and are white in perforated through the center, and can be torn in half readily. The top slip reads "Stop" with subscriber's name and address. The bottom slip reads "Send" with the subscriber's name and address. These slips also contain the route number and date of change. The duplicate is retained in one slip and has the complete record of the subscriber and is filed by themselves. They are always at hand for reference.

Our mail carriers are independent and pay for their papers once a week. We furnish them with a slip which contains fifty-two coupons. The name and address, date started and price is also given. The carrier pays the coupon for a receipt and he can tell at a glance to what date any particular subscriber has paid. These slips are kept in a leather, loose-leaf coupon cover and in the order the route is delivered. We are always able to check the boy and can tell readily if he is keeping up his collections.

Our mail orders are given first to the circulation cashier who checks up the amount sent in with each order and enters this with name and address in a journal. The orders are then written on the gulley sheet and our weekly list for addresses are made from the gulley sheet. As soon as stencils are made they are immediately placed in their respective draws. The renewals and new subscribers that come in the morning mail are sent out the same evening. We also run a card file for the mail subscribers, divided into each month of the year.

All our mail subscribers are paid in advance. They are notified fifteen days and five days before expiration. Those that fail to renew are sent a stop letter, explaining that it was necessary to discontinue their paper.

The best results from the above methods are obtained by keeping them as accurate as possible.

Stopping papers when subscribers do not renew orders on time, after they have received advance expiration notice, was declared by G. S. England, of the Johnstown Leader-Republican to be the best means of keeping a list paid-up. His method was described as follows:

The official government notice that subscribers must make payments in advance or papers would be stopped came to us three weeks before October 1, the date set for the order to go into effect. Though we had previous to that time, endeavored to urge advance payments we found, upon accurate investigation that the order would effect many of our subscribers.

Our first step toward the fulfillment of the order was to insert, in a conspicuous place in the paper, a notice explaining the proposition and urging the subscriber to assist in a quick response and stating that a representative of the paper would call on as many as possible before October 1.

Our second step was to have printed in red ink, small slips explaining the government order and emphasizing the necessity of advance payments. Slips covering the amount due the company October 1 and also for a

FINDS BERGER DISLOYAL

House Committee Recommends Unseating of Socialist Editor

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—"All the evidence in this case conclusively proves that Victor L. Berger from the time of the outbreak of the war until his indictment by the Federal Grand Jury did everything in his power to hinder obstruct and embarrass the Government of the United States, and thus to give aid and comfort to its enemies, and in the opinion of your committee is unfit to sit as a member of our lawmaking body. That he should be rewarded for his treasonable conduct by being given a seat in the American House of Representatives is inconceivable."

This is the conclusion of the special committee appointed May 19 to determine the fitness of Mr. Berger for Congress as Socialist Representative of the Fifth Congressional District of Wisconsin. The committee recommended that the House declare the seat vacant.

Berger is editor of the Milwaukee Leader.

BUYS IN WINSTON-SALEM

Son of Ambassador Page Becomes Manager of Journal

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Oct. 24.—Frank C. Page of New York, who recently became one of the stockholders in the Journal Publishing Company, has assumed the duties of manager of the Journal, succeeding N. L. Cranford, who recently resigned to enter the United States Revenue Service as chief deputy of the Winston-Salem division.

Mr. Page is the youngest son of the late Walter Hines Page, ambassador to England, being now in 33d year. He attended Harvard university and finished his work there with the class of 1910 He was for two and one-half years with Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers, first on the editorial staff of the World's Work and laterea managing editor of the Red Cross Magazine. After nine months of service for that publication Mr. Page entered the air service of the United States Army with rank as captain. He was later promoted to the rank of major and was on duty with the American Expeditionary Forces in France for more than a year.

Navy Men Proud of New Policy

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 26.—Lieut. Commander O. F. Cooper, U. S. N., in charge of the Navy Department's $300,000 appropriation to be spent with the newspapers for recruiting, is in Atlanta in connection with this work. Commander Cooper says the entire Navy Department has a new feeling of self-respect since it is being enabled to enter the editorial offices via the business manager.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A WEEK

Washington, October 23.

To the Editor of The Times:

What is the circulation of The Times and how does its circulation compare with those of the other Washington papers?

ADVERTISER.

The Times is second among the Washington papers in daily circulation. The most recent figures of the Washington papers are in the sworn semi-annual statements filed this month with the Postoffice Department. The first three papers show for the past six months:

	Net Paid Daily Circulation
First paper	92,840
A LOSS of 1,783 from April.
THE TIMES	59,880
A GAIN of 1,371 over April
Third paper	56,780
A LOSS of 3,089 from April.

It is noteworthy that The Times is the only one of the three to show a circulation gain over last April's statement.

MICHAEL J. BURKE

to foreman of the mailing department and in April, 1917, he was made the circulation manager. He was active in the formation of the New York State Circulation Managers Association which he now heads.

In an interview given to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Burke stated that his aim would be the greatest possible co- operation among the circulation man- agers of New York. With this end in view, he wants all circulation managers and publishers to submit to him their important and perplexing problems. He will then secure expressions of opinion from men who have been confronted by the problem in question. These will be sent to inquiring managers.

Mr. Burke is a great believer in the adage that, "Many heads are better than one." His idea of bringing this out in discussion of topics at the semi-annual convention. For this reason he expects that all members will submit topics to the chairman of the program committee and that no man will refuse to prepare a paper when requested.

He suggests that circulation managers confer with their publishers on subject for discussion and also in preparing papers for reading at the conventions. If the papers are prepared, the promises to cause enough discussion to bring out all that no man will refuse to prepare a paper when requested.

The new president will also try to in- crease the membership of the associa- tion, whose object is to have every cir- culation manager in New York State in its ranks. To attain this, in the State in general and in Long Island in par- ticular, he advocates a strong campaign among publishers in order to persuade them to enroll their circulation man- agers as active members. With the proper support he fully expects to achieve the greatest co-operation.

FINNISH EDITORS CONVICTED

New Yorkers Face 10 Year Sentence for Criminal Anarchy

Carl Paivo and Gust Alonen, who were indicted on a charge of printing and publishing anarchistic articles in a Finnish paper called the Class Struggle, in New York, were convicted by a jury October 25 in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. They were sentenced to from 4 to 8 years in Sing Sing, and the Justice in pronounc- ing sentence, promised to do his best to effect their deportation on their release.

Paivo and Alonen contended they were not responsible for the articles in question. The defendants were in- dicted largely as a result of the find- ings of the Lusk legislative committee investigating criminal anarchy, and the trial was the first held under the criminal anarchy statute passed after the assassination of President McKinley in Buffalo.

FARRAR SUCCEEDS CHAPMAN

Golf Layout and Pen for Latter on Leaving Denver

DENVER, Oct. 23.—On his departure for the New York newspaper field Octo- ber 22, Arthur Chapman, for the past three years managing editor of The Denver Times, was presented by the em- ployes of the newspaper with a complete golf layout and a gold fountain pen. Mr. Chapman's plans in New York have not been perfected, but probably will include special attention to the magazine field.

At Mr. Chapman's departure, Frank C. Farrar, managing editor of the Rocky Mountain News, was appointed manag- ing editor of both the News and The Times, both papers belonging to the Shaffer group. Under Mr. Farrar will be an assistant managing editor for each newspaper, to be appointed later, when reorganization has been perfected.

Journalism Study Popular

PULLMAN, WASH., Oct. 26.—The open- ing of Washington State College finds the new courses in journalism in de- mand. Sixty are now enrolled. The whole course has been reorganized un- der the direction of Frank Thayer, for- merly director of the course in journal- ism at the State University of Iowa, assisted by J. L. Ashlock, T. J. O'Day and F. F. Nalder, formerly associate director of the extension division of the University of California.

New Franch Weekly for N. Y.

The Gazette Franco-Americaine, a new weekly printed in the French lan- guage, will appear in New York Satur- day. Its purpose, as explained by the editors, will be to promote closer rela- tions between America and France, and to stimulate better co-operation between the two republics in the various fields of peaceful activity. The editors are Arthur Plottier and Emile Cregut.

Decoration For Campbell

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 28.—Henry C. Campbell, assistant editor of the Mil- waukee Journal, has received word from M. Casenave, French high commissioner to the United States, that he has been made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

The daily newspapers of West Virginia are neither many nor postscripted for circulation.

They are machine guns for advertisers searching out a territory of nearly 1,500,000 people, who live 50 to the square mile, and trade chiefly through the ten wholesale centers shown on this map.

Wholesale and retail radius of trade for these cities is unusually extensive, the direct distributers, MERCHANTS, most of them, not small city shops.

When you "size up" West Virginia you want to remember that. And also that you can safely credit these dailies with exceptional influence, beyond numerical circulation.

GETTING TO A BETTER BASIS

IN the days when advertising was not generally recognized as the vital factor in business building some unsound policies and practices were developed which, to some degree, still survive as traditions.

Among these was the habit of concentrating on a certain day of the week the greatest part of the advertising appropriation for that week. This policy had its inception in part in the fact that not many advertisers bought enough space to enable them to make a good showing every day of the week, or even for two or three days. They solved this problem, not through making adequate appropriations for advertising, but through using ample and impressive copy on one day and little if any copy on other days.

Having found this illogical expedient they tried to analyze the buying habits of the people and to select as their day for real advertising the one preceding (in the case of evening papers) or (in the case of morning papers) the very day on which there seemed to be the greatest "natural" volume of business.

At first Friday held favor, and Friday's papers were top-heavy with advertising. Then some of this volume shifted back to Thursday, where space—eventually to Wednesday's. The theory seemed to be that advertising could not create demand for goods—but only serve as an accellerating force, a stimulant, for an existing demand.

Monday's issue was a starved one, so far as advertising was concerned. Politicians, keenly alive to this situation, had a habit of releasing big stories for use in Monday's papers, assured of ample space. Even today, to some degree, this practice obtains. Even today there are newspapers whose Monday, Tuesday and Saturday issues are "light" in advertising, while carrying a maximum of news and appealing very strongly to reader-interest.

But many of our metropolitan papers—of a long list such conspicuous examples may be cited as the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Bulletin, the Post and the Chicago Daily News—now find that the ideal of a better balanced volume throughout the week is very near to practical realization. One of Philadelphia's big department stores has for some time used some time almost full copy in the Saturday issue of the Bulletin, and find that this is a strong stimulant for Monday sales.

E. A. Brown, advertising manager of the Marshall Field stores in Chicago, says: "We are now in our fifth year for consistent Saturday night advertising. We were the pioneers among Chicago retailers in this move. We started with very small copy and with very little heed of success. Most of us really believed that advertising would carry over Sunday against the great Sunday paper competition Now, however, we never pass a Saturday without generous representation in the evening issue. We find that in spite of the decrease of the Daily News' circulation on Saturday the results we get on those items advertised are frequently greater than with the same items advertised on an ordinary day."

Could there be stronger testimony to the fact that advertising creates trade, irrespective of "shopping habits" and merchandising traditions?

The Boston Post reports more business on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday than ever before Pressure on the advertising columns is almost equalized throughout the week. This permits a better balanced paper, more consistent treatment of news, better service to advertisers. Advertisers who insist upon position "near reading matter" are able to secure it, because of the standardization of news space Under the old method the week-end issues were overburdened with advertising and starved for news. The problem of using at least a little news on every page except those given over to full page ads led to fantastic makeup, defeating the real purpose in view

This question of an even balance of copy throughout the week is one demanding the co-operation of all agencies and national advertisers. With papers that are still top-heavy with advertising on certain days, schedules should provide for the use of national advertising copy on "light days." This policy will yield better results—and that should be the deciding consideration.

SIMPLE PROBLEM IN COSTS

HOW much does the white paper in one copy of your newspaper cost, before any ink is put on it?

For a newspaper using an eight-column page one pound of newsprint affords sixty pages. The present average price of paper, delivered, is about four and one-half cents per pound. Thus a 30-page paper costs, for newsprint, two and one-fourth cents; and the selling price, on the streets, of a majority of the dailies running to such sizes or larger, is two cents. As the rate to dealers is $1.40, sometimes less, the publisher who issues a 30-page edition sustains a loss of about $1.70 on every hundred pounds of newsprint used.

The loss sustained on white paper used in big Sunday issues is even greater, and publishers who will face the cold facts will realize that the present retail prices of their papers are wholly inadequate.

A three-cent daily issue of 30 pages, wholesaling at $2.25 per hundred, would exactly meet the present average cost of the newsprint required. Can it be disputed that sound business methods demand that the net revenues from circulation should at least cover the total cost of white paper? Can a newspaper prosper, even with a great volume of advertising, while selling its finished product for less than the cost of the basic raw material?

Is it to be expected that the newsprint market will right itself so long as publishers persist in using a maximum of that product without regard to its cost or the loss involved?

Volume of advertising can do much to cover fundamental errors in publishing costs—but it is expecting too much when this factor is depended upon to retrieve, week by week and month by month, unnecessary losses in the circulation department.

If drastic increases in advertising rates are to be avoided, a higher average selling price for newspapers must be established. The three-cent price will go far toward relieving a situation as to mounting costs which grows more menacing all the time. But it will not be a panacea. Reasonable increases in advertising rates, even at the cost of somewhat reduced space for big advertisers, must be made. These increases should be based upon the average increase in publishing costs for recent periods. It would greatly simplify this computation if the selling prices of the papers were fixed so that the revenues will cover white paper costs and fluctuations.

As a prominent publisher says, in a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER: "Both the subscription and advertising rates must be immediately raised to avert a break-down somewhere."

THE passing of William J. Douglas, for forty years one of the bright and well-loved figures in Canadian journalism, brings sorrow to hundreds of warm friends here in the states. He was a man of great heart and wide vision, who lived close to the ideals he cherished. His influence upon the press of Canada will live after him.

DAMON SUGGESTS A REMEDY

ROBIN DAMON, publisher of the Salem (Mass.) News, has acquired a reputation as a practical authority on the conservation of newspaper space—therefore, of newsprint. During the war Mr. Damon aided many publishers to save space in little ways—the elimination of useless rules, condensation of heads and news text matter, saving through narrower margins, etc. Among the metropolitan papers that utilized his suggestions successfully was the New York Globe.

Mr. Damon is somewhat of a pessimist—perhaps because he has lived too much with optimists. He does not believe that the big publishers, as a rule, are at all concerned about saving white paper. In a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER he uses very plain language in characterizing the wasteful practices of many of the metropolitan papers.

He sees a very simple remedy for the present shortage of newsprint—but he does not believe that the remedy will be adopted. If the Boston papers should save two pages a day, he figures, the total would be 360 tons a month, "and that quantity of paper would about supply the other dailies in Massachusetts." He believes that if this plan were to be followed in all the large cities the present sky-rocket paper market would collapse and normal prices rule.

In this argument he is in practical accord with Mr. Carvalho, who has made plain to readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER that any drastic curtailment of consumption would result quickly in a stabilized market. Are normal market prices and an adequate supply of newsprint important enough to our metropolitan publishers to justify concerted action to end the present shortage?

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, newspaperman and sage, told a Kansas City audience the other day why the President is ill. In his view the presidency is now too great a burden for even a superman to carry; as a result of Woodrow Wilson's passionate consecration to the big tasks urging themselves upon mankind in this new day, he is halted by broken nerves and a pain-wracked body. Describing the President's unprecedented achievements at Paris Mr White says: "He had to go alone amidst the play of great forces." Of the big issue of the hour the Kansas writer offers this classic analysis "The League of Nations covenant is only 70 per cent perfect; sometimes I think it is much less than that, but it is the big thing of the Peace Conference. the most significant thing west of the Ganges since the crucifixion of Christ is Wilson's work. If it were only 10 per cent perfect it would still be a step in the right direction." And that is the view of all broad-visioned Americans.

MALCOLM McALISTER, an advertising man of Salt Lake City, wants to know what newspapers in the United States have discontinued the practice of publishing free reading matter and press agent stuff—particularly that applying to automobiles and real estate. No statistics are available—but it is true that a growing number of newspapers may qualify under this class. Of course there will never be a time when news matter about real estate and automobiles, as well as amusements, will be dispensed with. But the vogue of the "puff" has passed in hundreds of newspaper offices.

PEI.MANISM, George Creel says, is "merely the science of thinking." Any ism which can teach men the science of thinking is "some ism!" Why not try it out on certain little Senators at Washington, who think they are thinking about the league covenant in terms of Americanism?

HOW much newsprint are you saving in every issue through more intensive editing of news matter? Every inch which you save, without impairing textual value, is an inch turned over to the revenue-producing end of your paper.

ANY good newspaper may sell its classified to its readers by advertising—by persistent cultivation of reader-interest.

BRITISH JOURNALS' WAR RECOVERY IS RAPID

FOR a month or two after the Armistice there was a rush of new issues and a resumption of many publications suspended during the war. Then came an interval of comparative quiet, but now, with the return of holiday-makers and renewed activities there comes another flood of new journals. From various parts of the country comes news of projected dailies and weeklies, a recent addition being a weekly edition of the Manchester Guardian.

The proposed issue of an English edition of the Saturday Evening Post by Odhams, Ltd. (which is said to have been abandoned) is responsible for a new London weekly called Nash's Weekly, the preliminary prospectus of which frankly confessed that it was to be the British equivalent of Cyrus H. K. Curtis's Philadelphia paper. It is published by the Periodical Publishing Co., 33 King street, London, W. C. Then there are the New Commonwealth, a weekly newspaper of politics (Kemsicott Company, 133 Salisbury Square, Fleet street, E. C. 4.) Sports, a new illustrated sporting weekly newspaper from the Amalgamated Press, Fourdrinier (George Newnes, Ltd.), aod trade and class papers including the British Builder (Organiser House, Bedford street, W. C. 2); the Musician, (17 Great Titchfield street, W. 1), which has grown out of a trade paper called the Pianomaker, founded by a plucky Scotsman, Herbert Sinclair, in a time of war-strain and trials, Works Management (A. W. Shaw Co., Shoe Lane, E. C.) Industrial Art Journal (Kingsfisher Press, Southampton Row, W. C. 1) and others of minor importance.

But as a result, things are distinctly booming among editors aod publishers, aod the public seems to receive each new issue with open arms. Our newstands are regaining their prewar standards in bulk and variety of the periodicals displayed and the winter season promises to be one in which the British reader will have a bewildering profusion of newspapers and other publications to select from

Newspaper Rumors in Ireland

I UNDERSTAND that very few if any of the existing Irish newspapers—and there are some fine journalistic productions in Belfast and Dublin alone—are at all perturbed at the rumors of new Irish newspapers to be established in various political interests, or of changes in existing proprietaries. Sir Henry Dalziel (who owns the London Daily Chronicle, Pall Mall Gazette, Reynolds' Newspaper, etc.) is one of those spoken of as desirous of becoming interested in Irish newspapers.

Then, the present Government is suggested as having aspirations in the direction of an Irish newspaper as an official organ and mouthpiece of its views—run as a private property, of course.

Thirdly, the leader of the Sinn Fein party in Ireland, de Valera, is said to have returned from the United States so impressed with the power of the newspaper there that nothing short of a daily Sino Fein paper will satisfy him. It is believed that these rumors have their foundation in the fact that the death of W. Martin Murphy, of the Independent and Freeman's Journal has given rise to the idea of changes in proprietorship. But from what inquiries show, the only people who are worrying are those whose names are mentioned as projecting Irish journals

Higham Would Inspire National Ideal Through the Press —Editor & Publisher Is Quoted by Union of Journalists.

BY HERBERT C. RIDOUT
London Editor, Editor & Publisher

Sunday Times is printing Von Tirpitz's story of German submarine warfare.

In another direction the Observer is effecting a radical change in its appearance by removing the trade display advertisements which have hitherto occupied its front page and replacing them with "smalls"—the object being avowedly to improve the appearance of the paper, with the mystifying addition that it is at the request of a very large number of readers.

It is an illuminating instance of the hold some British newspapers exercise upon their readers when the Observer (it is 128 years old) can advance a reason of this kind.

"Toby, M. P." Writes Journalistic History

FOR many years Sir Henry Lucy wrote the Parliamentary diary in Punch under the nom de plume of "Toby, M.P." He is now engaged on a volume of reminiscences of his career "The Diary of a Journalist," which is awaited with some interest since Sir Henry's period was that of middle and late Victorian and Edward VII.

Editorial and Publishing Activities

THE proprietors of established journals exhibited activities that indicate in a marked degree that determination to hold their own against the attractions of any newcomers. Perhaps the most marked instance of the kind is that of the Londoo Morning Post, which, always a daily of strong character, if with a reputation of being somewhat staid, has inaugurated a publicity campaigo for sales and advertising that has startled many of its contemporaries by its boldness and forcefulness.

There is no doubt that the fighting policy of the Morning Post during the war gave the paper a new reader-interest and power, of which full advantage is now being taken. It was a bold step, and now leaves only one competitive daily out of the field of advertising, and there is probably little doubt that the big-minded proprietor of this will not recognise his opportunity before many moons have past.

Then, following on the Times serial of Ludendorff extracts, comes Land and Water with ao announcement of still further copious extracts, while the

Editor & Publisher Is Quoted

THE official organ of the British Institute of Journalists, the Institute Journal, has been interesting itself in the question of casual authorship and its relation to newspaper production In the last issue of the Journal Keoneth McMillan writes, apropos of the subject:

"I should like to quote from a recent number of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of America anent that very subject. It seems that the New York World secured the stories of their Transatlantic flight from the three American aviators who essayed the attempt quite recently. Quoting the EDITOR & PUBLISHER in this connection, it is of interest to note that all of the proceeds of their journalistic work went to the writers themselves, although the article was syndicated through the World. The provision that the aviators should reap the financial reward of their stories was written into the contract by the World

"Surely this is a tip for our legislators in this very matter. If real honest bona-fide journalists, members of the Institute would observe this code, and at the same time refuse to be the puppets of ambitious proprietors, then there would be little difficulty in expunging the practice from the best journalistic circles."

I think the influenee of EDITOR & PUBLISHER in England may be fairly gauged from quotations of this kind

Trade Unionism Growing Among Newspaper Men

THE growth of trade unionism among British newspaper writers is steady and strong. The National Union of Journalists reports from Central London alone fifty-two new members in the month of August—a vacation month, too. The workers in the London house of E. Hulton & Co. number about 120 members.

As illustrating the strength of the idea, the organ of the National Union tells of an incident that occurred in a Norfolk town where a meeting was held in connectioo with a local laundry workers' strike. The press was represented by the district reporter of one paper and the local correspondent of another.

The chairman of the meeting challenged the press representatives regarding their trade union status. The district reporter was a member of the N. U. J., which was sufficient, but the local correspondent, naturally, was not a union member and he was requested to leave. The chairman subsequently explained that he could not allow the non-uniod man to sit next to another reporter who was a trade unionist.

EWSPAPERS FIGHTING TUBERCULOSIS

ammering Away with Paid Advertising Has Most Effect on Public, Declares W. E. Chandler of Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 22.—"Newspapers are one of the greatest factors in the campaign against tuberculosis," this E. Chandler, secretary of the hode Island Anti-Tuberculosis Association, declared at the New England Tuberculosis Conference, after ting the failure of leaflets to reach rge numbers of people. His subject was "Paid Advertising," the use f which was discussed as one of the ore effective methods of publicity. Mr. Chandler urged that any campaign against tuberculosis be conducted in a business-like manner. He gued that newspaper advertising is far better means of reaching the ople than by the circulation of free olders.

"The first thought of a person ho is handed a free folder," he id, "is about the same as that of a an who is handed a free cigar, name-, what is the matter with it."

"By hammering away in the newspapers with paid advertising," he dded, "we hope to get our message o everybody."

Mr. Chandler praised the newspapers for the co-operation they had iven in tuberculosis campaigns for unds and along educational lines.

I. E. A. CONVENTION DATES

Announces First Annual Gathering Will Be in Kansas City

(Special Correspondence)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 29.—It has been announced that the first annual convention of the International Editorial Association, which claims to be a fraternal and beneficial organization, will be held here December 12, 13 and 14 instead of in Cleveland, Ohio. At the same time, it is said, Clyde P. Steen, managing director, will complete the formation of the Missouri Chapter.

The formation of Oklahoma and Wisconsin chapters will be completed, it is hoped, before that time. The following are given as the officers of the organization: Clyde P. Steen, managing director; Edward Arkle, city editor Wheeling (W. Va.) majority vice-president; Claude R. Diegle, managing editor Milwaukee Leader, secretary; J. M. Magie, managing editor Waynesboro (Va.) Twin City Times, and Herbert Vanderhoul, Chicago, directors.

The Wheeling (W. Va.) Majority is a weekly labor paper. The population of Waynesboro is given as 2,000. The Twin City Times is a semi-weekly paper of which R. S. Owens is editor and publisher. Its circulation figures are not included in EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S records, but the circulation of the Valley Virginian (weekly), the only other paper in that city, is given as 950. The Milwaukee Leader is Victor Berger's Socialist newspaper.

Celebrates in Waynesboro (By Telegraph)

BEDFORD, VA., Oct. 27.—Clyde P. Steen, managing director of the International Editorial Association, left Bedford early in October and on the tenth day of this month celebrated, in Waynesboro, the acquisition of another home for editors in that town. His present address has been given as Lynchburg, Va.

Curtis Gives Free Insurance to All Employes

Philadelphia Ledger Staffs, Pleased by Award, Sign "Round Robin" of Thanks

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—Every employe of the Public Ledger and Evening Public Ledger, who has been associated with either newspaper for a year or more, have just been handed life insurance policies, the gift of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, publisher of the two newspapers.

The policies are payable at the time of the employe's death to any person he or she may name. Upon proof of death the beneficiary of the insured is given a lump sum of $250. This is to defray burial expenses. Following this payment the beneficiary collects each week a sum equal to the insured's earnings at the time of death. These payments are to continue until a year's salary shall have been paid.

The offer was entirely gratuitious on the part of Mr. Curtis. There are no "strings" attached to it and it is absolutely gratis to every employe. So pleased were the employes that the various departments of the two newspapers signed a "round robin" which they presented to Mr. Curtis, emphasizing the thanks of the workers for the beneficent award.

FRIENDS HONOR BOK

Retiring Ladies' Home Journal Editor Tendered Farewell Dinner

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 24.—Edward Bok, who will resign at the end of this year as editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, was given a dinner this week by his associates in the Curtis Publishing Company in recognition of his thirty years' service. Every department of the company was represented at the dinner, which was attended also by representatives of the company's branch offices in other cities. Mrs. Bok and her son, Curtis Bok, recently mustered out of service, were also among the guests.

Cyrus H. K. Curtis presided, and introduced Dr. John Gribbel, former president of the Union League and for years associated in business with Mr. Curtis, who made the principal address. A feature was the playing of Joseph Hoffman, noted pianist, who for years has been associated with Mr. Bok through the Philadelphia Orchestra, as well as through the Ladies' Home Journal, to which the pianist is a regular contributor.

Prize for Pittsburgh Stories

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 26.—The University of Pittsburgh has received a check for $100 from William A. Johnston, author and a former Pittsburgher who is now a member of the New York World editorial staff. This amount is to be awarded as a prize for the best short story, laid in Pittsburgh, produced this year by a U. of P. student. Mr. Johnston wishes to encourage writers to use Pittsburgh atmosphere in their stories and censures the tendency of young authors to locate their stories everywhere save home.

State Editor for Portland Paper

PORTLAND, ME., Oct. 29.—As part of a plan better to cover the state of Maine and make the Evening Express-Advertiser even more decidedly a Maine paper than it is at present, the paper has created the position of state editor and has appointed H. J. R. Tewksbury, who was telegraph editor of the Lewiston Journal for a number of years, and more to the Express-Advertiser as an assistant news editor about a year ago. Mr. Tewksbury is succeeded on the news desk by L. Barton Motherwell.

Engravers Want $1 an Hour

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 4.—One dollar an hour or $44 a week for 44 hours work, is the rate Albany photo-engravers have set, and for which a demand will be presented to the employers shortly. The present scale is $35 for 48 hours work. The wage contract between the workers and the employers ends in December.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Circus Tickets for Advertising

To Editor & Publisher:

At the meeting of the A. C. W. Newspaper Departmental in New Orleans, a motion was adopted stating it to be the sense of the meeting that publishing notices should not be given to circuses.

As you know, it has been the practice for newspapers to give reading notices and accept tickets which are a common source of internal strife in newspaper offices when the distribution comes among. The editor has a letter from A. M. Deckery, Third Assistant Postmaster-General, in which he says the following:

Publishers of publications entered as second class matter are not prohibited by the postal laws and regulations from inserting in their columns reading notices pertaining to circuses. If such notices are inserted in consideration of receiving tickets of admission to the circus, they should be marked as advertisements in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 24, 1912. If the notices are not inserted in consideration of obtaining tickets of admission to the circus or of some other valuable consideration, they would not appear to come within the requirements of the Act.

The printing of circus readers has been a practice followed in newspaper offices from time immemorial. The writer has yet to see a circus reader followed by the word "advertisement," though it undoubtedly is space printed unless circus tickets be secured. In fact, the ordinary circus contract contains the stipulation that so many tickets are to be given and that readers are to be furnished.

It has long been the custom for city and county officials to take tickets for the presumed purpose of seeing that the law is not violated or observed, as the case may be.

Now, isn't it about time that newspapers were conducting their business on a business basis?

"Let Us Have Open Discussion on Writers' Organizations"

KNOXVILLE, TENN., Oct. 31, 1919.

To Editor & Publisher: The tendency of newswriters the country over to form unions or associations with or without affiliation with the International Typographical Union is fast spreading and the question naturally arises among reporters and desk men:

Will the movement be beneficial?

The craft appears to be divided into three classes regarding it: (1) Those who believe in the principle of unionism as adapted to printers; (2) those who are radically opposed; (3) those who have to be shown. I class myself with the third division after reading everything that Editor & Publisher has had to say on the subject and carefully weighing the arguments for and against.

It is a fact unconscious and to the shame of a large percentage of publishers that salary increases in the line of journalistic endeavor have not kept pace with the advances in the mechanical departments. Of the new handicaps that the Maine debacle adequate compensation through organization well and good. But what is the benefit?

The newswriter more than any other man keeps in close touch with the public pulse. His job is a quasi-public one. He owes a duty not only to his employer and, perhaps, a larger extent to the public in that he must present the latter with unbiased and truthful manner for the benefit of the whole. His judgment must not be warped by any outside influence.

Recently we have seen attempts of various unions in England, Canada and the United States to censor the editorial pages of newspapers. That they have met with no success was due to the fine stand taken by publishers who preferred to suspend publication rather than submit to dictation.

Now, if the men who gather the news, write the news and prepare it for publication will organize they will act with the same interest toward the public as they do toward their job. This is not a fanciful idea, but union movement. It is an honest effort to obtain light from every angle by competent men. Run through the columns of Editor & Publisher. If this agitation is merely a flash in the pan it will flourish under the spotlight; if it isn't it stays under cover.

Let us have the opinions of men who are taking part in the drive that is on in many sized cities of the country who are not afraid to sign their names to communications.

Night Editor, The Knoxville Journal & Tribune

The Lawrence Case Clarified

LAWRENCE, KAN., Oct. 23, 1919.

To Editor & Publisher: Both the heading "Publishers Complain of Invasion" and the article following on page 34 of your issue of October 9th are misleading.

The "Boiler Plate" published at the University of Kansas as a six column folio daily here and there for several years, with us the year, for the past ten years. It has its field as a University paper, and as Associated Press reporter, and also as an Associated Press director, we referred them to W. C. Simons, publisher of the Journal-World, the member of the Associated Press at Lawrence.

Not being able to secure an Associated Press franchise contrary with the Kansas Press, which had been furnishing the U. P. news to the town for several years, without conferring with the publishers of that paper. The Lawrence correspondent for Mr. Simons was called into the matter by the state authorities.

The field of the Kansan as a newspaper and the field of the Department of Journalism as job printers were discussed and Governor Allen and the Board of Administration decided that the Kansan should not essay to become a general job printer nor should the job printing plant of the Department of Journalism enter the field as an active competitor with the printing establishments of the institutions, but that the University paper should be limited to a four page seven column paper, excepting for a number of special editions of four pages and that the job office should be confined to the actual needs of the University in certain amount of fill-in job work originating within the university. The newspaper part of Lawrence appeared before the state officials at the invitation of Governor Allen, who handled the matter very wisely.

The real question of whether a plant owned by the state and conducted at least in part with state funds should be allowed to operate in competition with privately owned plants, the Governor decided in favor of the view that they should not be conducted for profit, and should be limited to job work.

Jack Barry Writes from Iquitos

Iquitos, Peru, Sept. 9.

To Editor & Publisher: Here I am 2800 miles up the Amazon. Iquitos is a town of 20,000 people, the commercial capital of the Andes in Peru; has four daily newspapers and is very pro-American. Strange to relate, not a single American in Iquitos!

No only communication it has with the outside world is down the Amazon or on mule-back over the Andes. It has not strung wireless stations all through these wild sections as the U. S. has, but its daily papers each day carry all the latest important dispatches.

Did I see oil? Not quite that—mostly one or two live affairs. It is surprising what "civilized" lives they live in these out of the way places in the Andes and in the U. S. A. seems to be looked upon as the main hope of the whole world.

I have given a few interviews to the local press in various cities and towns, including the idea. This is the country of the future—a "white man's" country in every sense.

4-5 Column Strip Features

MONTREAL, MISS., Oct. 23, 1919.

To Editor & Publisher: As one means toward newspaper conservation, may I suggest that syndicates issue four and five column strip features instead of six and seven columns, each feature to be of such a size that scenes can be deciphered in four and five column sizes.

We are sure the syndicates that supply us with strip features and will try to have the matter considered by other publishers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 27.—The deral Trade Commission's report on ws print paper production and conmption for the month of September rees with the report of the News int Service Bureau (printed in Edr & Publisher last week) in that ere was only about 4 days' average tput of paper on hand at the mills on ptember 30.

Tonnage reports from 753 publishers ow that the newspapers of the coun- had on hand on September 30 a to- l of 139,987 tons of news print. As is estimated that the present daily nsumption of news print approximates 500 tons, it is evident that the pub- hers' stocks cover about 21 days' con- mption.

1871 Tons in Transit

Publishers' stocks decreased 3,238 tons ring September, which was counter- alanced in part by an increase of 1,871 ns of news print in transit. Fifty- ven publishing concerns held about l per cent. of the total stocks at the nd of the month.

The weighted average price of con- act deliveries from United States mills s publishers during September, f. o. b. ill in carload lots for standard roll ews was $3.675 per hundredweight. his average is based upon September eliveries of more than 77,000 tons on ontracts involving a total tonnage of ore than 1,500,000 tons of paper made n the United States. These contracts, ost of which extend until December 1, 1919, include a few long-term con- racts made prior to the war at very ow prices.

The weighted average contract price ased on deliveries from Canadian mills f more than 18,000 tons of standard oll news in carload lots f. o. b. mill in September, was $3.663 per hundred- eight. This average is based upon de- veries on contracts involving more than 60,000 tons of Canadian paper. Most f the contracts terminate on December 1, 1919.

Average Market Price Is $4.58

The weighted average market price or September of standard roll news in arload lots f. o. b. mill based upon do- nestic purchases totalling more than 0,000 tons was $4.58 per hundredweight.

Imports of news print during August, ractically all from Canada and New- oundland, totalled 47,131 tons, against 6,863 tons in August, 1918.

Exports of news print, totalled 9,650 ons in August, 1919, as compared with ,521 tons in August, 1918. Argentina was the leading customer, with 3,781 ons, other purchasers taking the fol- owing amounts:

Brazil, 1,421 tons; Cuba, 1,116 tons; Chile, 509 tons; China, 512 tons; United Kingdom, 476 tons; Uruguay, 275 tons; Japan, 268 tons; Peru, 225 tons; Philippine Islands, 156 tons; Australia, 100 tons.

Jobbers had on hand on September 30 a total of 7,756 tons, a decrease both in roll and sheet stocks. Commitments reported in September, 1919, to sell roll news were 5,828 tons greater than commitments to buy. Commitments to sell sheet news were 1,541 tons less than commitments to buy.

TO EDUCATE IN GAS

National Advertising Campaign Will Instruct Public in Uses

A nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign by the American Gas Association was decided upon October 16 in a meeting of the organization in New York. The campaign will be for the purpose of bringing to the consumers' notice the necessity for the use of gas in conserving the nation's resources.

Few persons, it was said, have a clear idea of the manner in which gas is produced. Few know that the gas service is handled on a highly scientific manner, and few realize that the cost of this prodnct to them is low comparatively.

CIRCULATION NOTES

William G. Mercier, the new circulation manager of the Peoria (Ill.) Journal and Transcript, has been connected with the circulation of daily newspapers for more than sixteen years. Starting with the Chicago Examiner and American, he shifted after five years to the Cleveland News and Leader and later went with the Chicago Herald. Prior to joining the Journal-Transcript forces, he was on the staff of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

W. G. MERCIER.

The Houston (Tex.) Post published the names of prize winners of its circulation contest campaign, October 9, and distributed the prizes the following Saturday on the Federal building square.

The Seattle Daily Times, which recently made material advances in its price, the street sales on dailies going to 5 cents and the Sunday issue to 10 cents, with corresponding increases in home subscriptions and advertising rates, has announced a circulation contest on its Sunday issue. Twelve prizes, ranging from $250 to $50, will be awarded to the members of what is called the "Help Yourself Club" who obtain the largest number of new subscriptions to the paper. Trips to the Yellowstone National Park are also planned for successful contestants.

Earl Foster, for the past seven years circulation manager of the Des Moines (Ia.) News, has resigned to go with Wallace's Farmer, Des Moines, as circulation promotion manager. G. Morrison of the Toledo News-Bee is Mr. Foster's successor.

Thomas Middlemas has been appointed circulation manager of the Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Tribune, succeeding Albert L. White, who retires after nearly 25 years' service, because of poor health, and will spend a while in California.

F. W. Conrey, for the past two years circulation manager of the Topeka (Kan.) Capital, has resigned to devote his energies to private business.

About $60 was raised for new uniforms for the Schenectady (N. Y.) Newsboys' Association drum corps, through the annual field day. A pie eating contest was one of the features. It was participated in by about 100 carriers. Officials of the Union-Star and the Gazette helped to make the day a success.

L. L. Ricketts, formerly circulation manager of the Des Moines Capital and later on the Atlanta Georgian and American, has returned home from 18 months' overseas service as a Y. M. C. A. secretary with the U. S. mine forces in the north of Scotland. He is now in Des Moines.

H. F. Norton, formerly circulation manager of the Springfield (Ill.) State Register, is now circulation manager of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star. Mr. Norton takes the place of R. W. Kirkwood, who will be identified with the advertising department.

While the editorial staff of the Glens Falls (N. Y.) Post-Star was off duty Sunday, H. A. Wenige, the circulation manager, volunteered to make an airplane trip as a passenger and tell the following morning how it felt for an amateur to loop the loop, do reverses, vertical reverses and nose spins. He did both jobs well. Mr. Wenige has been elected a state delegate to the national convention of the American Legion.

E. B. Reynolds, former circulation manager of the Winnipeg Free Press and of the Ottawa (Ont.) Journal, has assumed management of the Dyson Company in Winnipeg.

A fund of $3,500 has been raised in Houston, Tex., for equipping a clubroom for newsboys to be under the supervision of the Y. M. C. A. For several months the boys have been given the privileges of the Central Association building twice a week, including baths, swimming pool, games, moving pictures and other entertainment features. The Y. M. C. A. directors feel that the boys are entitled to a club room of their own to which they may have access at all times, to include games, baths, educational and other features that they can not have under the present arrangement.

The Galveston (Tex.) Tribune, of which W. L. Golden is circulation manager, recently gave its carriers and newsboys an outing, with 75 youngsters present.

Probation officers of Dallas county, Tex., have been instructed by Judge Simpson of the Juvenile Court to take into custody all boys under 10 years found selling papers on the streets of Dallas. Judge Simpson says boys of that age should not be permitted on the streets and that if their parents cannot support them they should be declared delinquent and placed in the detention.

BAUMGART PRESIDENT IOWA AD CLUBS

250 Delegates Attend Convention—Des Moines Wins 1920 Convention—Finest Pageant Ever Seen in Iowa

(By Telegraph)

OTTUMWA, IA., Oct. 23.—The eighth annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the State of Iowa closed here yesterday after a very successful meeting, a banquet and dance. It was unanimously agreed upon that Des Moines be favored with the 1920 convention.

C. A. Baumgart was elected president of the association. He is editor of a publication called Building Trades with Farmers.

Over 250 delegates attended and many of them remained to attend the Iowa Press Association, held also at Ottumwa. A pageant Tuesday evening, exhibiting Ottumwa wares, was a feature of the convention. It contained 82 floats, three bands and representatives of the many advertising clubs of Iowa. It was indeed a spectacle the like of which has never been surpassed in Iowa.

MUST FIX SIZES AND STICK TO THEM

paper. No publisher can make a profit on his business when he buys paper at such outrageous figures. Wouldn't it be better for him to curtail anywhere from four to eight pages daily now than to probably face a famine around about the first of the year?

"There is not enough paper to give all publishers all they need and there must be drastic curtailment. I find that some New York papers are running on a 24-hour supply and yet they still print anywhere from twenty-eight to forty pages daily, seemingly afraid that if they don't take all the advertising offered, some of their competitors may get it.

"As long as every publisher is trying to print 100 to 200 columns of advertising in his week day issues there is going to be a famine in news print and profiteering on the part of a few mills that may have a little tonnage for sale. If the big papers in the East would put a limit on the size of their papers and make the limit something sensible, say not more than twenty-four pages on week days, they can soon solve the white paper situation.

"If they cannot get together, however, and if each fellow is going to be afraid to act on his own initiative, then the newspaper world as a whole will suffer and we will enter the new year with a runaway market and the most uncertain, chaotic conditions the newspaper industry has ever confronted.

"I have refused to buy a pound of paper while here at the prices now prevailing. I decided it would be better to curtail on my use, thereby conserving my present tonnage under contract, than to buy the paper we could so easily use if we accepted all the business offered us.

"Why should any large publisher build up excessive profits this year when he is merely injuring other publishers throughout the country who may not be as lucky as himself and who in many cases will be facing financial disaster if they pay six cents and above for white paper?

"I find that many of the biggest mills and biggest brokerage houses in New York regret the situation as much as do the publishers. Mills generally are begging publishers to reduce their orders and not to ask for tonnage above their contracts. They do not want an uncertain market, but prefer to have normal conditions and regular fixed prices for regular deliveries.

"In my opinion, after talking with some 10 or 15 paper manufacturers and brokers the contract prices for the ensuing year will average between four to four and one-half cents per pound, provided publishers do not go wild and begin bidding against each other for excess tonnage."

ADVANCING TO 3 CENTS IN N. Y. STATE

Higher Costs of Production Are Forcing Publishers of Newspapers to Increase Revenue from Circulation

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 24.—The Observer says:

"Utica newspapers may be obliged to jump to three cents if the cost of white paper mounts any higher."

Various other cities in New York State have gone back to three-cent papers, which were maintained in many places during the war. Among the papers now charging three cents are the Watertown Standard, Binghamton Republican-Herald, Geneva Daily Times, Ithaca Journal, Elmira Star-Gazette and the Auburn papers.

AUBURN, N. Y., Oct. 24.—The Advertiser-Journal makes the following announcement:

"The Auburn papers, following the decision made in other communities, have decided to raise circulation rates.

"A glance at the cut above shows that the Auburn papers are not alone in this decision. The three-cent paper has been a reality in most of the cities of this section of the country for a long time. In fact early in the war when conditions less precarious than those now prevailing forced many New York State dailies to go to three cents, the Auburn papers paid no dividends in their efforts to weather the conditions without raising the price to three cents, the rate that prevailed here a number of years ago.

"But the demands of labor and of the newsprint manufacturers have increased instead of diminished, and no alternative remains.

Attention, Editors and Publishers

Two practical photo-engravers wish to install an up-to-date engraving plant in connection with newspaper or publishing house, who are willing to finance or otherwise assist in same. Address A 934, care of Editor and Publisher.

"The Auburn papers have just raised wages to printers, linotype operators, machinists, apprentices and other employes, wages varying from 10 to 25 per cent. among the lowest paid workers in the Typographical Union. Until an agreement further slight increases will go into effect January 1.

"The Auburn papers are also faced with sensationally high prices of newsprint paper, and one paper has had an increase of approximately 33 per cent. in its raw materials in the present month.

"The paper market points a warning which those publishers who seek to avert disaster must heed. Conditions now compel us to ask the same price for our commodity as our neighbors charge."

CHARGE SMITH WITH LAW VIOLATION

Publisher of Indianapolis News Arrested for Alleged False Statement Regarding Newspaper's Ownership

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Oct. 27.—A warrant was served by the United States Marshal today on Delavou Smith, on an indictment returned by the Federal Grand Jury for alleged violation of the postal laws and of Section 28 of the Penal Code. The charge is in connection with the reports required to be published semi-annually, in April and October, as to the ownership, circulation, etc., of newspapers having mailing privileges.

In the case of the Indianapolis News, of which Mr. Smith is publisher, it is charged that the reports set forth that he was the owner, whereas it is alleged that Charles W. Fairbanks, and later his estate, was a three-fourths owner of the paper.

The various counts in the indictment refer to reports filed in October, 1912, the first report following the passage of the so-called Barnhart law, and the report of April, 1918, during Mr. Fairbanks' last illness, and the September report of 1918 and the April report of 1919, after Mr. Fairbanks's death. Mr. Smith gave bond in the sum of $10,000, with the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company as surety.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER of September 11, printed the following dispatch from its Indianapolis correspondent:

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 10.—Supplemental inventories filed in the probate court of Marion county in the estate of the late Charles W. Fairbanks, former Vice-President of the United States, disclose the fact, hitherto unknown even to friends of the publisher, that the late head of the Indianapolis News, that Mr. Fairbanks at the time of his death had a three-fourths interest in that newspaper. That is now the Mr. Fairbanks estate.

The News property includes a one-half interest in the Griffith building, formerly occupied by the newspaper, and the new newspaper building, which is separate from the business building, and is inventoried at $2,000,000. The three-fourth interest of the Fairbanks estate represents, therefore, a valuation of $1,500,000.

When the founder of the paper, John H. Holliday, sold the controlling interest to the late Major W. J. Richards and associates, Mr. Fairbanks, at the instance of Major Richards, became one of the associates. He retained his interest as an investment later at the time of the sale in 1899 by Major Richards to Delavan Smith and Charles R. Williams, but took no part in the conduct of the property and had no voice in the management.

Subsequently, Mr. Smith bought out Mr. Williams and purchased the interest of Mr. Fairbanks, the latter reserving the right to repurchase. The repurchase had been negotiated just prior to Mr. Fairbanks' death, which interrupted the process of reorganization.

"Letters received from Mr. Smith, who has been ill for a long time, indicate that agreements have been reached on a friendly business and that it is the right of all concerned that he remain in control of the paper," said Hilton U. Brown, general manager of The News, to the correspondent for Editor & Publisher. "There is to be no change in management or policy."

In France the cost of novels has increased from 30 to as much as 100 per cent.

$23,000 buys only daily newspaper property in a city of 9,000. Annual volume of business $23,000. Return to owner for personal effort and investment $4,643. Proposition T. J.

ANDREW J. McCONNELL DEAD

Was Editor and President of the Woonsocket Call
(By Telegraph)

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Oct. 28.—Andrew James McConnell, editor of the Woonsocket Call and president of the Evening Call Publishing Company, died yesterday at his home in this city following an illness of twelve days. Mr. McConnell, who was a native of Brooklyn, began newspaper work in the composing room of the Brooklyn Times, later becoming assistant foreman.

He came to Rhode Island in 1891 as foreman of the composing room and a dramatic critic of the Providence News when that paper was started. He entered the employ of the Woonsocket Call as news editor. The following year he became associated with Samuel E. Hudson in the management of the Call and since that time has been an active and influential factor in shaping the policy of the Call and in directing its affairs.

EXPORTS ROSE IN AUGUST

Newsprint Figures Up After Decline of Five Months

MONTREAL, Oct. 28.—Paper exports from Canada during August included 57,817 tons of news print, valued at $4,-140,812, the importing countries including the United Kingdom, United States, Argentine Republic, Australia, Brazil, British South Africa, China, New Zealand, Peru. Paper exports fell off $3,-431,118 in value for the first five months of 1919, as compared with the same period last year. This year they were valued at $30,395,082.

During August, exports of pulp and paper amounted in value to $8,348,179, a gain over August, 1918, of $1,229,781. Exports of pulp wood amounted to $944,877, against $1,978,012 in August, 1918.

Morgan Talks on Foreign Journals

SIR CHARLES STARMER HOST TO AD MEN

British Publisher Shows Wonders of Birmingham to Men Who Plan and Place English Advertising

By Herbert C. Rindot

The English city of Birmingham is one of the six industrial centres outside of London that figures in every British advertiser's list of media. To miss this humming hive of industry and its 900,000 well-paid workers would be to eliminate one of the most profitably yielding territories of Great Britain.

Sir Charles Starmer, the proprietor of the Birmingham Gazette, which has a larger sale than any other morning paper in the Midland counties, believes in Birmingham, and with the object of making the men responsible for the formulation of most of the advertising campaigns in this country see through his eyes and witness for themselves the industrial glories of the city, invited a party of advertising experts to spend a week-end in Birmingham and district.

To all it was a revelation. Most knew Birmingham as a big place, rich in its industries, well-favoured in its wage-earning capacity, and as ranking high among the first cities to be considered in any advertising plan. But to most it had been given the "open sesame" which Sir Charles Starmer's excellent scheme secured.

Perhaps the most outstanding facts of the cleverly planned visit were the important place which Birmingham is filling in the production of British motor-cars, the scenic beauties of the country outside the city of Vastness and the hospitality of Sir Charles Starmer and his staff.

City of Wage Earners

The respective industries which engage the workers in Birmingham make an interesting study, as the visitors found. For instance the Engineering and allied trades, including sheet metal workers, tool workers, and motor body builders, engage about 150,000; the Jewellery and allied trades, between 40,000 and 50,000; the Brass and bedstead trade, about 50,000; the Hardware industry, about 50,000, and the Gun trade, sporting section, 3,000, military section, 1,000, total 4,000.

Among the visits arranged was one to the works of the Austin Motor Co., Ltd., at Northfield, and here every process and stage of manufacture was witnessed from the rough castings to the final finished production of the Austin Car—to-day one of the most prominent figures in English advertising.

Guns and motor-cycles were the next industry to be laid bare to these advertising men, and the Birmingham Small Arms Co., Ltd., exhibited their fine works and almost-human machinery to their visitors with an entirely justifiable pride, for the "B. S. A." sporting guns and bicycles are among the highest-prized in their respective departments the world over.

The Dunlop Rubber Co., Ltd., revealed the mysteries of Dunlop Tyres, in a factory that is a wonder-house of production. The visitors had a new respect for the name of Dunlop when this interesting experience was concluded.

It was a triple glimpse of the phenomenal activities of Birmingham, a convincing suggestion of the importance of the city as a manufacturing centre, and a striking reminder of the vital necessity that Birmingham must ever be counted among the first of the advertising fields of the country. In this, the astuteness of Sir Charles Starmer was made manifest, for one cannot think of a good advertising territory without including all media, and as the Birmingham Gazette stands where it does in prestige and influence —the moral is obvious.

Tribute should be paid to the excellent arrangements made by Sir Charles Starmer's lieutenants, Mr. L. Thornelee and Mr. Robert Thornberry, both of whom knew exactly what to do and how to do it.

Expert Tells the Merchants to Buy Newspaper Space

Jesse M. Joseph Says 75 Per Cent of Their Advertising Should Be in Dailies

Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 26—Newspaper advertising and plenty of it is the foundation on which a successful retail business can be built, Jesse M. Joseph, Cincinnati advertising agent, told members of the advertisers' and the retail divisions of the Association of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club at a recent luncheon.

Mr. Joseph recommended that retail stores devote at least 75 per cent of their advertising appropriations to newspaper advertising. He pointed out by practical application to Milwaukee how newspaper advertising is elastic, in that it may be used for all kinds of publicity at almost any price; how it brings results within twenty-four hours; and how the psychology of the reader is such that they will respond more readily to the advertisements in newspapers than to almost any other form of advertising.

MERGER IN WOOSTER

Republican and Democratic Papers Now Under One Ownership

Wooster, Ohio, Oct. 27.—The publishers of the Republican, Albert and E. C. Dix, have purchased the Daily News and Wayne County Democrat, which, beginning today, will be issued in connection with the Republican for an indefinite time. J. F. Daubel and W. A. Weygandt, manager and editor, respectively, of the Daily News, retire from the newspaper business in Wooster for the present. Announcing the deal, the owners of the Daily News say:

"The transaction is in line with similar action in hundreds of other cities. In Ohio there have been numerous consolidations. Among the most recent have been the purchase of the Mansfield Shield by the Mansfield News, the consolidation of the three newspapers of Zanesville, two in Xenia, all of the daily and the two weeklies of Ashland under one ownership, and the two of Lorain. One of the dailies of Alliance was absorbed by the other last year.

"The spirit of the times, based on good business principles, is against two daily newspapers in cities of similar size to Wooster."

WATERTOWN MEETING OF CIRCULATORS

stated time after October 1, accompanied these notices.

The third step was sending out the reprint circular, which presented considerable difficulty in collecting both the amount past due and the subscription for the current issue that he returned with many "stops."

On October 1 the papers of all subscribers who had not complied with the order were discontinued. A few days later the Daily Item who had evidently not taken the notice seriously recorded the paper for once and the Watertown Standard did likewise. During the year bills were sent for the amount past due, but no subscriptions renewed, the item discontinued and who had not reordered.

We considered the methods of collecting back accounts in to have our own representative and the use of a collection agency.

Early this summer the same representative was sent to work a thorough canvass of all past and present subscribers. He made the trip by automobile, calling at homes through out the country and by displaying a certain amount of "skill in business" returned with surprising and gratifying results.

Seventy per cent of the subscribers whose papers were stopped October 1, 1918 paid the back accounts, started paying in advance and ordered the paper started at once.

We find as a result of improvement order that the majority of the subscribers are satisfied to have formed the habit of paying in advance and a habit is a difficult thing to get rid of.

Take away the H and he will still have abit. Take away the A and he will still have a bit. Take away the B and he will still have it. The habit of paying in advance.

Handling Bad Dealers

J. M. Annenberg, who has just resigned from the Albany Knickerbocker Press to become circulation manager of the Philadelphia Press and was elected an honorary member of the N. Y. S. C. M. A., in discussing points by which circulators may co-operate, brought up in particular the case of troublesome newsdealers, saying:

We have a big association in this state and it is composed of members from all sections, but then a wonderful machinery of co-operation can be put to valuable use.

Nearly every newspaper has more or less trouble with a few newsdealers here and there; and right now it costs a considerable amount of money for road men to take care of a few minor complaints or a small collection of a bill.

Why should this be necessary? Why can't the member who is having trouble, inform the party that, unless he pays his bill on time as he should or gives him an even break on pushing his paper, the association members will take united action and cut off his supply.

You will find that he will take care of the matter at once as he relies on the newspaper business for his livelihood and would not like to offend any publication. Of course, there are some small instances where this would not be necessary but, in many cases, there should be action of this nature so as to avoid some of the unnecessary expense which every one of you is incurring to get some of these fellows who refuse to pay a bill unless you send after it.

I do not mean that this is general as, in this state and especially in our section, we have a fine set of dealers, but there are a few bad ones, and, if we could get the proper co-operation from all the members of this organization, just see what it would mean.

Your publisher could soon sit up and take notice and realize that he is getting a lot of good out of this association. When you as a publisher that this association helps him with new ideas and the saving of money, he would not be slow to do his limit and co-operate with you to make the association of larger importance. I do not think I am thinking this point for a long time and believe that the time is ripe for such a movement.

Salaries of road men and the expenses have increased, it costs considerable amount of money to travel these days. Of course, some complaints are small, while others can get along without such members on their staff if they could be assured of co-operation from all the members.

This point, I believe, is the most vital of all, but believe you understand clearly just what is meant and need co-operation from all members, for the best interests of the publisher.

Let us all give and take and thereby help each other to make our positions stronger at all times.

Efficient Mailing

P. E. Kessinger of the Rome Sentinel recommended a device called the "Addressograph," for addressing, addressing and mailing smaller city newspapers. This machine has been fitted with improvements by the Sentinel's own force and, driven by a small electric motor, operates with complete satisfaction. He said:

The cost with full equipment is approximately $1,000. The first month after its establishment, while we have not figured it closely, seemed to us to be worth more than the cost, besides being a more accurate and dependable mailer and preventing many of the errors which formerly were annoying.

An Empire in Itself

Sharpshooters' Medals

Every soldier is supposed to be able to shoot a gun---to know how to load a gun, aim it, and pull the trigger.

But there are soldiers set apart from their comrades, and wearing medals, resembling miniature targets. They are sharpshooters.

They not only know how to load a gun and pull a trigger---but they know how to aim at some object and hit that object.

Their shooting counts. No general results with them. It is right to the point---and they get results.

Think what a regiment of sharpshooters could do in a battle! Every shot aimed, every bullet fairly sure of landing where it will do business---where it will produce results.

Sharpshooting is much like territorial advertising.

In territorial advertising every shot is aimed at some particular object. You can aim at something definite---you can sight your gun, so to speak, through the local dealer---and can reach your objective.

Daily newspapers are the best advertising guns---and the South is a wonderful spot at which to aim---for you are sure to bag big game down that way.

These daily newspapers, covering this territory as it can be covered in no other way---are sharpshooters, every one of them.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND

PAGES I TO XVI INCLUSIVE

RHODE ISLAND, STATE OF THE PAYROLL, OFFERS ATTRACTIVE MARKET POSSIBILITIES

Midget Among the States It has the Densest Population and Stands High Among Wealth-Producing Communities—Here Center Great Textile and Jewelry Interests of America

RHODE ISLAND, as a market for advertised goods, affords a most interesting field of study and analysis. Smallest of the states in land area—having a land surface of 1,067 square miles—this midget of the sisterhood of commonwealths has tremendous industrial importance and supports the most dense population of which any state can boast.

The last federal census placed the density of population at 508.5 inhabitants to the square mile. Of the total population of the state at that time 96.7 per cent. was urban—which fact places Rhode Island in a class by itself as essentially a state of city dwellers.

The estimated total population in 1914, made by the census bureau, was 591,000, as compared with official figures for 1910 of 542,610. If this rate of growth has been maintained—and many authorities still contend that it has been greatly exceeded—the present population of the state should be approximately 660,000.

Strictly a Manufacturing State

A striking illustration of the extent to which the population is engaged in manufacturing industries is shown in the fact that ten cities, each having a population of more than ten thousand, whose aggregate populations represented 82.8 per cent. of the people of the state, produce 88.5 per cent. of the state's total annual manufactured products. This indicates that the business of manufacturing is not confined to the larger cities but extends to the towns and villages in and about the same proportion.

It is trite, and usually inaccurate, to say that a state is a "hive of industry." Yet the description seems to be the only adequate one to apply to Rhode Island. It is not an agricultural state. Its terrain, generally speaking, does not favor farming. Dairy farming shows a healthy growth, due to the tremendous demand for dairy products in local cities; and there is a consistent attempt to supply local demands for garden truck, but Rhode Island people buy the bulk of their table necessities from outside sources.

The total value of the manufactured products of Rhode Island according to the federal census figures for 1914 was $279,545,873. The value created by the process of manufacture was $117,120,654. These products, and this new wealth, were created in 2,190 manufacturing establishments, employing a total of 124,109 people, the average number of wage earners being 113,425.

The total value of products for the state represented a per capita of $473. The corresponding per capita figure for continental United States was $245. These figures illustrate again the extent to which the state is devoted to wealth production through manufacture.

The capital invested in manufacturing in the state in 1914 amounted to $308,444,563. The amount paid out in salaries and wages totaled $72,621,981.

Vast Extent of Textile Industries

The textile industries are the most important in the state. Statistics of the Department of Commerce covering the calendar year of 1914 show that woolen and worsted goods head the list, with products valued at $60,888,755. These lines employed 22,745 wage earners. The new wealth created by the process of manufacture amounted to $19,153,956.

The manufacture of cotton goods ranked second among the state's industries, employing 29,483 wage earners, and with an annual product valued at $49,718,837, of which amount $20,962,528 represented value added by the process of manufacture.

Third among the state's dominant industries is the manufacture of jewelry. Two hundred and ninety-one establishments, employing 8,778 wage earners, turned out products valued at $21,522,251, and $10,313,204 of this sum represented value created in manufacture.

Fourth in the list is foundry and machine shop products. In this industry there are 182 establishments reported, employing 10,728 wage earners, with an annual products valued at $19,373,113. Of this, $12,263,131 represents value added by manufacture.

The fifth industry of the state is dyeing and finishing textiles. Forty-seven establishments employ 7,928 wage earners. Their annual product is valued at $16,300,783, including $7,536,489 new value added by manufacture.

Proud Record for a "Little State"

The industry ranking sixth in importance is silk goods, the seventh rubber goods, the eighth meat packing, the ninth electrical machinery and the tenth printing and publishing. There are 162 establishments engaged in printing and publishing, employing 1,515 wage earners and turning out annual products valued at $4,593,489. In this industry the value added by manufacture is very high, totaling $3,131,697.

The combined textile industries, including woolen and worsted goods, cotton goods, silk goods, hosiery and knit

The large number of wholesale houses is due to the fact that they supply not only the Providence area but go to every part of the state and far into Massachusetts. The great compact population demands complete service. National advertisers receive exceptional distribution for their goods. Trolley freight, steam train steamboat and auto delivery are as fine as any in the United States.

Retail Section

The principal shopping district is located on Westminster Street, Weybosset Street and Washington Street, which run parallel to each other. Crossing these streets are ten or twelve shorter streets. The entire district totals about two miles of stores al avery description; department stores, specialty shops, large grocery stores, theatres, etc.

There are three Italian shopping centres. One about one-half mile on Atwell's Avenue and Federal Street, another in the Eagle Park District about one-half mile long, and one on Pocasset Avenue or Silver Lake District nearly one-half mile long.

On North Main Street there is a Hebrew shopping district about one-half mile long.

Residential Features

In the fine residential section, which is very large, one-family houses predominate. There is a rapid growth of fine apartment homes but few cheap tenements. On the West Side two and three-family houses predominate.

The demand for luxuries and exclusive home comforts is great. The demand for homes is greater than the supply and building is booming, especially in the fine suburban districts.

Many Providence residents own cottages and summer homes along the river and aree as far distant as the shores of Long Island Sound and Block Island.

Trading Area

The Providence trading area is one al the largest in square miles and one of the most thickly populated territories in the United States.

The network of trolley lines and excellent railroad and motor highway transportation facilities are great aids in the developing al retail business which this area contributes to the city of Providence.

The Providence trading area extends some distance beyond the state boundary lines into Massachusetts. Fall River, fifteen miles distant, and Taunton, Mass., mark the eastern limits of the Providence territory.

To the south, the territory extends to Long Island Sound. In the summer months a large amount of business is attracted from Block Island, about sixty miles distant. Fine steamboat service daily, both freight and passenger, has been constantly enlarged and improved as the island has grown in popularity as a summer resort.

The fact that Providence merchants advertise in Westerly newspapers is evidence that the latter city contributes business to the local stores.

The territory extends to Milford on the north, twenty-three miles distant.

Trading Area

To the north extends to Wrentham, west to Manville. Part of the latter trade shared with Woonsocket. Southwest nearly to Enfield and on the south about midway to Providence. In fact, Providence advertisers find it advisable to use large space with Pawtucket papers and thoroughly "cover" field. East boundary lines extend beyond North Rehoboth and Attleboro. Pawtucket paper has extensive circulation throughout this area.

RHODE ISLAND STATE MARKET SURVEY

goods and dyeing and finishing, comprise by far the most important group of industries in the state. They gave employment to 64,511 wage earners and reported products for the year 1914 of $138,764,688. Rhode Island stands fifth among the states in the value of products of cotton goods, third in woolen and worsted goods, fourth in dyeing and finishing textiles, sixth in silk goods and fifteenth in hosiery and knit goods.

In estimating the value added by manufacture there is taken into account only the difference between the costs of raw materials and the value of the finished product. As overhead expenses are not considered, it is obvious that these figures do not throw any light on comparative profits earned in the various industries.

Of the 113,425 wage earners employed in the industries of the state in 1914, 64.6 per cent. were males over 16 years of age; 31.8 per cent. were females, and 3.7 per cent. were under sixteen. In the period, 1909-1914, there was a slight decrease reported in the number of women workers and an increase in the number of male workers. At present, of course, the factor of child labor is eliminated.

Women workers are employed chiefly in the textile industries. In most of these lines they outnumber the men. A steadily decreasing number of women workers are employed in the manufacture of electrical machinery and of jewelry.

The maximum number of wage earners employed in 1914 was reached in the month of March, the total being 116,501. The minimum was in December, the total being 108,261. It will thus be seen that industrial employment in Rhode Island is stable, for the low-ebb month reached 92.8 per cent. of maximum.

Wage Earners of 10 Largest Cities

In the ten largest cities of the state during the year 1914 wage earners were employed as follows: Central Falls, 3,007; Cranston, 2,218; Cumberland, 4,666; East Providence, 1,906; Lincoln, 2,602; Newport, 893; Pawtucket, 16,713; Providence, 44,176; Warwick, 6,439 and Woonsocket, 10,952. Estimates as to the number employed in these cities at the present time are found in the surveys of cities printed elsewhere in this issue.

The eight-hour day, so far as the statistics for 1914 indicate, has not become generally recognized in Rhode Island's industries. In that year 72,681 wage earners worked 54 hours a week; 26,013 worked between 54 and 60 hours, while but 5,871 worked 48 hours or less per week.

Of the total number of manufacturing establishments but 32.6 per cent. are under corporate ownership, yet these reported 84.9 per cent. of the total value of products. Only in bakery products do individually owned shops show greater value of products than do the shops under corporate ownership.

There are 1,410 establishments in Rhode Island employing an average of less than 20 wage earners throughout the year. While these represent 64.4 per cent. of the state's manufacturing establishments, they employ but 6.5 per cent. of the state's wage earners. There are 238 establishments employing more than 100 wage earners each, and these carry on their payrolls 88,978 workers, or 78.4 per cent. of the total.

The total number of cotton spindles in Rhode Island in 1914 was 2,574,942, and almost all of these were active during the year. The total number of looms was 66,972, including those used in weaving cotton goods, woolens and worsteds and silks. There were 1,864 knitting machines in use.

This vast army of workers needs a great commissariat; requires and is able to buy and pay for every desirable commodity or product used in the modern home. Wage earners who are prospering—as are those of Rhode Island—are liberal spenders. They are finding, in better wages, that new economic freedom which is the portion of the thrifty worker. They want finer things for their homes, and they are constantly raising the standards of their home life.

Providence, the state capital, is one of the most important manufacturing cities in the United States. It has 1,670 streets. New buildings in 1918 cost $4,972,700. Providence stores and shops are noted for enterprise and progressiveness. There is a fine civic spirit, rivaling that found in some of the Pacific Coast cities.

Within a radius of fifty miles from Providence 3,044,122 people live. The U. S. census of 1910 gave to Providence a "Metropolitan District" in which at the present time it is estimated that 548,477 people are to be counted.

The city is the home of the world-known Brown University and of other famous educational institutions.

Providence people point to the map as proof that their city is the natural gateway of New England.

"Produce More" Is the New Slogan

The members of the Providence Chamber of Commerce are working to stimulate greater production by the industries of the state, seeing in this the answer in part to the question of how to stabilize the cost of living. "Produce more" is the slogan in Rhode Island in these days, and that sound economic doctrine is making headway. With maximum production, these manufacturers believe, lower selling profits are possible.

Pawtucket, about five miles north from Providence, is the birthplace of the cotton industry of America. The mill built by Samuel Slater in 1790 stands intact to-day. Vast natural water power is fully utilized by the city's diversified industries. The port enjoys extensive commerce. In 1914 there were employed 16,713 wage earners, and the value of products was placed at $42,028,728.

Woonsocket, the third city of the state, is 16 miles north of Providence. Its industries employ 10,952 wage earners. The annual value of its manufactured products is $28,115,187.

Newport, always thought of as the home of the rich, is one of the society capitals of America. Aside from this distinction the city has important industries, including extensive fisheries.

Westerly has granite quarries employing 2,000 men, as well as other important manufacturing interests.

Because of its concentration of population and the uniform earning capacities of its people, Rhode Island affords an excellent "try-out" market for any new product. Its newspapers are modern and fully up to the high standard set to-day for our American press. They reach all of the people, and reach them quickly. No predated issues are necessary to Rhode Island newspapers, for their field is near at hand. Rhode Island publishers cooperate cheerfully and helpfully with advertisers seeking to win a foothold in that market.

Excellent Compensation Law

Rhode Island has an excellent workmen's compensation law, under which wage earners in all the industries are protected. In case of death from accident sustained in the course of duty the dependents of the deceased receive $10 a week (maximum) for a period of 300 weeks. In case of disability, free medical attention and compensation; and, in case of total disability, a maximum of $10 per week for 500 weeks.

To realize the vastness of Rhode Island's army of wage earners in the industries—an army of more than 113,000 in 1914—it may be noted that only thirteen other states could show a greater number, while 34 states fell behind—some of them very far behind—Rhode Island's record.

The figures for the city of Providence alone are impressive when compared with those of many states. In 1914 Providence had 44,176 wage earners employed in her 1,207 manufacturing establishments. There are fourteen states, not one of which can show so great a number employed in the industries. Several other states show figures but slightly higher than those of Providence.

If Rhode Island's wage earners were to form in procession, marching in columns of ten, allowing a space of six feet between columns, the procession would be almost eleven miles long.

As an example of how specialization has built up great manufacturing plants in Rhode Island, the making of shoe laces may be cited. One concern in Providence has a weekly output of 26 tons of these small but necessary adjuncts to dress. This establishment is said to be the largest of its kind in the world.

Providence's Pride

Providence people are proud of their splendid system of public parks, of the beauty and variety of shade trees which line her streets, of her many historic buildings, many of them dating back to colonial days. The John Brown house was pronounced by John Quincy Adams, in 1789, the finest private residence on the continent.

Providence people are also proud of the city's leadership in the manufacture of jewelry, the city's excellent port facilities, modern schools, ample transportation systems and splendid public buildings. The new state house cost more than three million dollars.

The following steamship lines at present use the port of Providence regularly: Fibre Line, Colonial Navigation Company, Hartford and New York Transportation Company, New England Navigation Company, Hartford and New York Transportation Company, New England Navigation Company, Merchants' and Miners' Transportation Company, Dyer Transportation Company, Block Island, Newport and Providence Steamship Company, and Providence, Fall River and Newport Steamship Company. The channel, 27 miles long to the ocean, is 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep at low tide.

WORKS OF THE TAFT-PEIRCE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, WOONSOCKET

Few Children Employed

According to the latest available statistics the number of male wage earners employed in the industries of Rhode Island is 75,129, and the number of females 38,296. During the period, 1909-14, the number of male wage earners increased 1,606 and the number of females decreased by 228.

The proportion of wage earners under sixteen employed in Rhode Island industries has never been large, and of course this factor in employment has been practically eliminated through the child labor law provisions.

Pawtucket, second city of the state, made the greatest gain from 1909 to 1914 in the value of products of her industries. This gain amounted to $4,332,542 and was due in part to the increased products of its silk mills. The greatest relative gain, however, was scored by Newport, amounting to 66.7 per cent., and was in part the result of increased activity in shipbuilding and the manufacture of confectionery.

The naval torpedo station at Newport, operated by the Federal Government, employed in 1914 an average of 588 wage earners.

The textile industries are dominant in Pawtucket, Woonsocket and Warwick. In Pawtucket textiles accounted for 52.3 per cent. of the total values of manufactured products in 1914; in Woonsocket they represented 74.7 per cent and in Warwick 76.7 per cent. Woolen mills lead in importance in Woonsocket and cotton mills in Pawtucket and Warwick.

In Providence 83.5 per cent. of the total value of products were reported by establishments under corporate ownership. In Cumberland 98.7 per cent. of the manufactured products are reported by concerns owned by corporations. Lincoln reports but 53.6 per cent.

Freight and passenger service on the Providence-Newport-Fall River line to New York daily. New England Steamship lines to New York daily. Boat connections with Wickford and Iron Steamboat Co. by rail to the Shore Line Division of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R.

Principal Industries

Newport is not a big industrial city. The lame and the wealth of the city lies in the fact that it is America's greatest summer resort for the richest society people of the entire nation.

The Government contributes literally to the prosperity of Newport through the military and naval activities of this big base.

There is, however, a large number of the local inhabitants who are employed in the chewing gum factory and the New England Steamship Co.'s repair shops. There are the usual small factories devoted to furniture making, tailoring, foods, etc.

A Government torpedo factory employs many well-paid mechanics.

Special Information

In spite of the fact that Newport is not a big industrial center, there is without doubt a greater amount of wealth in this city, especially in the summer season, than any city its size in the United States.

Stores are advanced ideas and stock because numbered among their customers are many of the wealthiest society people of the world and their demands are often very exacting.

Newport should be an excellent field for "try-out" campaigns of advertising.

Suburban and Farm Residents

Within a radius of fifteen miles are Jamestown, 1,200; Middletown, 2,000; Portsmouth, 3,000; Block Island, 1,300; Tiverton, 4,000; Little Compton, 1,500, and several smaller villages.

The large number of houses is due to the fact that Newport has a trading territory of its own and demands such service. The wholesalers of Providence and Fall River also serve the Newport retail trade and the national advertiser may feel assured of the best distribution of his goods, either luxuries for the wealthy class or necessities for local home owners.

Retail Section

The principal shopping center is about two miles long on Broadway and Thames Street.

On Bellevue Avenue there is a small exclusive shopping center composed of branch shops of many New York and Boston houses which open these places in the summer to cater to their society trade. A few of these shops are open all year.

Residential Features

A large number of one family houses. A few two family houses. No tenement district.

The Government erected a number of buildings of permanent type in their $225,000 housing system.

The homes of the wealthy society residents vary in value from a few thousand dollars up to the million dollar mansions. There are nearly 300 beautiful villas of the rich

Trading Area

The Newport trading area as outlined in square miles does not do justice to the amount of retail business enjoyed by the local merchants. Thousands of dollars' worth of business is received from visitors who may reside many miles beyond the boundaries of the Newport area.

On the north the territory extends nearly to Fall River. To the east the lines extend to the limits of the State. On the south Block Island is a source of much trade and the fishermen all along the Rhode Island coast spend no small sum of money with the Newport merchants. To the west the boundaries of the trading zone extend beyond Kingston.

The Newport Daily News is an evening paper with a prestige that Advertisers appreciate. Newport is not a large city, but an important one.

It is the recognized summer capital of society, noted for the wealth and buying power of its residents. It is also the greatest Naval Base on the North Atlantic Coast, and includes the War College, Training Station, Torpedo Station, and Coaling Station.

The News is a part of this community. It is one of the few daily newspapers in this section whose circulation has increased since the close of the war.

Having been established as a daily since 1846, it is among the oldest papers in the State. National advertisers realize that Newport must be covered. Consult any advertising agent for an account of the value of this paper as an advertising medium. The rates for space in The News are rigidly maintained. The News does not use premiums or any other form of circulation boosters. The circulation does not have to be solicited, yet IT IS IN PROPER RATIO TO THE POPULATION. It is our business to keep it there. It is your business to get the benefit of this field. SOCIETY READS THE NEWS. The soldier, the sailor, mechanic and farmer also read the News.

Advertising Agents Are Great Business Builders

This Is the Ninth of a Series of Constructive Articles on Newspaper Building.

BY JASON ROGERS

THE more newspaper men with whom I come in contact, the more I appreciate how general is their ignorance regarding the important functions performed by the advertising agents for the development of larger volume of advertising for all newspapers.

From the newspaper viewpoint the advertising agent is often looked upon as a pernicious middleman who should be eliminated. Such newspaper men foolishly consider that if the middleman could be eliminated they would receive higher rates for their space.

Too many of us look upon advertising as something that grows on trees, something that can be garnered in by merely venturing forth occasionally and shaking the branches and picking up the fruit.

Cost Is Less

We do not take the trouble to study the matter thoroughly enough to discover that, in the absence of the many advertising agents scattered all over the country carefully cultivating prospects, it would cost us two or three times as much money to secure probably the same volume we now receive.

I know how many newspaper men feel toward advertising agents because I have been in the business for about 40 years and talked with many hundred of them on the topic, and must admit that until about eighteen months ago I was in sympathy with the erroneous opinion.

First Collective Action

Only about three years ago when the American Newspaper Publishers Association at its annual meeting adopted a resolution stating that it was the sense of the meeting that the time had come to eliminate commission to agents, I was a member of the committee appointed to draw up the resolution and read it to the convention.

I was largely influenced in reaching the conclusion then in mind by the expressed opinion of such men as John Lee Mahin, that a basis of net rates to all advertisers with agents charging a service fee in accordance with service rendered would simplify the relation.

No sooner had the resolution been adopted than I realized that we had spilled the beans, as it were. Many of the newspaper men who had voted for the resolution considered that by so doing they were establishing their then existing gross rates as net, and that they were therefore increasing their earning 10, 15, 20 or 25 per cent.

Would Work Injury

Immediately after the meeting I was called on by a group of advertising agents and we had a conference which lasted several hours. I was convinced that the elimination of commissions to agents would work a serious injury to the whole industry of advertising. I then commenced a quiet individual study of the situation, but not until July, 1918, at the meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association at Asheville, N. C., did I grasp the underlying factors in a way to be of constructive use to newspapers and the agents.

Investigation revealed the fact that long years before the day of the general medium, the advertising agent came into being, as a convenience to the advertiser wishing to insert his copy in more than one newspaper or to use those in other cities. At first he was looked upon as the agent of the newspapers and paid a commission for working up and bringing in business.

Later on as newspapers became more numerous and agents controlled more and more business, the newspapers found themselves placed in the position of soliciting business from their own agents.

Solicited From Own Agents

This double expense was thought by many publishers to inflict too heavy a cost in the stimulation of business, and the newspaper men naturally grew to view the commission to agents, who now represented the advertiser and not the publication, as a fee which should be paid by the advertiser and not the publisher.

At about this stage of development came the general medium, with its thin cover of the whole country. The publishers of the general mediums were quick to grasp the situation. They sought to placate the agent with liberal commissions and to show him how much larger profit he could make by using their mediums than many hundred newspapers.

General Medium See Opening

Like many another illusory scheme, brilliantly conceived, and ably carried on, by the most skilled talent obtainable from the ranks of journalism and the agencies, the new kind of advertising found rapid root and grew to tremendous proportions.

For a time it was comparatively easy to get dealers everywhere to stock up on the strength of a showing of proofs of a heavy campaign in the magazines, and the agents found they could garner in their 15 or 20 per cent on a total appropriation consumed in 15 to 50 accounts, instead of handling, checking and bothering with 300 to 500 newspaper accounts.

In the meanwhile newspaper publishers while on one hand seeking business from the agents were doing everything in their power to eliminate him, all of which helped the general mediums to a large share of appropriations.

Heavy Cost to Dealers

Dealers all over the country at their cost learned that it was one thing to stock up on the strength of a so-called national medium campaign, and quite another matter to get goods moved from their shelves.

Manufacturers gradually learned that general medium advertising was an expensive luxury until they had a general distribution all over the country, and owing to the impossibility of localizing their appeal it was ineffective regarding definite checkable results.

It was not until the general mediums were satiated to the point where they could scarcely care for the business that was offered them, and some few of them became so arbitrary in their treatment of customers as to offend them, that many concerns and agents commenced to use daily papers for dominant and direct results.

Newspapers' New Triumph

Newspaper advertising with its modern efficiencies thus came in for a new demonstration largely through accident, as it were, but it has proved an eye opener to many advertising men brought up during the period of general medium hysteria and exploitation.

Leading men in the agency business such as William H. Rankin, Wilbur D. Nesbit, and others, by reason of close contact with Red Cross and Liberty Loan campaigns in the newspapers and other experience, came out emphatically endorsing newspaper advertising as a discovery.

Our newspapers have not even yet felt the full force of the immense volume of general advertising which is to come to them. It is business which has been worked up and created by advertising agents.

The expense of developing new business by the advertising agencies is much greater than it ever was before, just the same as in any other lines of business. The newspapers which still insist that 10 per cent agents commission is all they can afford to pay are a menace to the industry.

Operation Cost

These men in effect are demanding that the agents do business with them for less than the cost of carrying on the service. Figures furnished by the exchange of experience between leading agents indicate that the cost of doing business varies from 11½ to 12 per cent, and that even the payment of 15 per cent commission and 2 per cent cash discount would not make millionaires of them.

The few newspapers still refusing to meet a real condition would only have to slightly adjust advertising rates to enable them to meet the necessities of and to help the agents in developing new business for them. It should be obvious to them that this is essential. Otherwise they stand as a stonewall in the path, and virtually encourage the agents to continue to do business with the general mediums in order to live.

No newspaper or group of newspapers can ever render an advertiser or prospective advertiser as effective a

MANUFACTURERS THINK IN TERMS OF MAJOR AND MINOR MARKETS

Newspaper Advertising Offers Only Method by Which Dealer-Influence May Be Utilized Fully in Localized Selling Campaigns.

BY. H. R. DRUMMOND

THE theory of intensive cultivation of a comparatively small market, rather than attempting to cover the entire country, especially with merchandise that is new, is fundamentally sound and logical.

There are so many things that enter into a successful advertising and selling campaign that, unless they are co-ordinated and followed through in their logical sequence, something is more than liable to go wrong, and the whole thing topple.

One Territory at a Time the Best Policy

Assuming that the main object in entering any campaign is to make money, and that the matter of expense is one to be considered—not, perhaps, because of a lack of money, but for sound business reasons—it is correct to have the thought of thorough introduction and sale in a certain territory, rather than the tremendous expense of attempting to cover the country at one time.

Every advertiser is vastly more interested in his proposition than is the general public; and, while his advertising may attract attention, while it may arouse interest, while it may create desire to possess, it may stop there unless it points out an easy way for the reader to get the merchandise.

National advertisers must take into consideration the influence of the local dealer and, in order to be successful, must enlist this co-operation to the greatest possible extent.

Local Merchants Factors

Local merchants have loyal followers—or they would not be merchants —and those loyal followers take the advice of these merchants to a greater extent than they take the advice of manufacturers whom they do not know.

The "home folks" element of psychology enters strongly into every transaction. Particularly is this true in the smaller cities, for the people, for the most part, are loyal to their home cities. They live there, work there, pay taxes and vote there, and if they are good citizens, like to think that their home town is a good town, a "comer" and, for that reason, if for no other, they prefer to spend their money where they make it.

The local merchants are "home folks." They, too, pay taxes, they furnish employment for more "home folks," they simply belong.

These "home folks" read home newspapers. They are interested in openings in their own baliwick. They pay closer attention to their own city than they do to the doings in other places.

"Merchandising" New York

Take the state of New York, for instance. The total population of the state is 10,273,375 people—10 per cent of the United States.

New York city is the largest city, containing 5,602,841 people, over 50 per cent of the population of the state.

Let us assume, for instance, that we wish to merchandise a new line of canned goods, which sell better in cities than in rural communities. First, we will merchandise New York city.

In New York city there are 66 wholesale grocery dealers. They, obviously are the first people to line up. They, in turn, have 8,852 retail grocers and delicatessen dealers to cater to.

These wholesalers can make or break any proposition. They have the situation well in hand. They can, if so disposed, kill anything they wish, for they can discriminate against retailers who handle brands they themselves do not supply.

We will assume, however, that we win these wholesalers, or jobbers. They are the ones we want first.

Then we talk our proposition to the retailers, taking orders which we clear through the jobbers.

These retailers are subject to constant watching and jollying. We must keep our brands in front, as much as possible, for they are going to move through introduction.

Of course our package is attractive. We have seen to that. Our goods have merit, some particular merit not found in others, and we must see to it that the buying public knows about that.

Ready to Advertise

So now, and not until now, are we ready to advertise. The jobbers have the goods, the goods are on the shelves of the retailers. Now it is up to us to move those goods.

So we go to the consumers through the daily newspapers that these same consumers read. We tell them about the goods and, most important of all, we tell them what the goods are going to cost them, and where they can get them. That is the important thing to do. Tell people what the goods will cost and where they may be had.

It will take a crew of men to do this work. It will take men constantly at it to keep the ball rolling, once it is started.

When we have New York city well in hand we will go to the next largest city, which is Buffalo, with 468,558 people.

Buffalo has 15 wholesale grocers and 1,530 retail outlets for our product.

Rochester, with 256,417 people, 6 wholesalers and 814 retail dealers, is our third city, and Syracuse, with 155,-624 people, 9 wholesalers and 608 retailers, follows.

Albany, with 104,199 people, 14 wholesalers and 440 retailers is the fifth city, immediately, with 100,000 people; Utica, with 85,692 people; Troy, with 77,916 people; Yonkers, with 100,-000 people and Binghamton with 53,973 people follow and thus we have the ten largest cities in the state.

Now, in order to make this introduction successful it should be thorough. In order to make it thorough it should be given intensive cultivation, and that means careful local cultivation, which means not only cultivation, but co-operation.

Obviously the best, cheapest and quickest way to do this is to co-operate in every possible way with the "home folks" which means the local jobber, the local dealer and the local daily newspaper.

Retailers Value Advertising

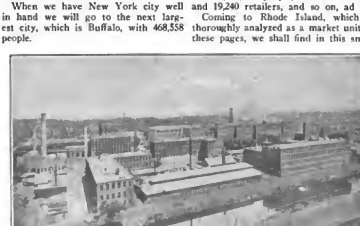
It is a fact that retailers, no matter who they are, or where located, like to see their names in the newspapers. This is not a matter of personal pride, but they realize that every mention they get means a boost for business, and they are more kindly disposed to manufacturers who mention them in the advertising.

And it is a fact that the majority of people who read advertising in their home paper, advertising telling them of the goods, and at the same time telling them that some store they know, some merchant with whom they deal, and in whom they have confidence, handles these goods, will buy quicker than they will if the news is brought to them through some outside source.

The state of New York has 198 wholesale grocery concerns and 29,758 retail grocery and delicatessen stores, and this is the biggest, most profitable territory in the world to work.

When New York is thoroughly covered it is but a step into Pennsylvania, with its 8,522,017 people, its 228 grocery wholesalers, its 24,420 retail grocers and delicatessen dealers.

The Sound, Logical Way



Ohio adjoins Pennsylvania, and has 5,150,356 people, 123 wholesale grocers and 25,918 retail grocers and delicatessen dealers.

Indiana lies next to Ohio, and has 3,000,000 people, 91 wholesalers and 7,168 retailers. Then comes Illinois with 6,152,257 people, 134 wholesalers and 19,240 retailers, and so on, ad lib.

Coming to Rhode Island, which is thoroughly analyzed as a market unit in these pages, we shall find in this small but populous state simpler merchandising conditions than prevail in larger territories. The problem of distribution is easier. Transportation facilities are one hundred per cent. ample and adequate In the market surveys of Rhode Island cities will be found detailed information about wholesale and retail dealers.

It is logical, it is fundamentally sound, that intensive, localized cultivation of each market, as a unit, is going to pay better than any other method of getting merchandise where it will be moved.

Such sales work is less spectacular than the nation wide work, that hits here and there. It is hard work. It is linking the component parts together, but it is the sound, logical way to sell goods.

ADVERTISING AGENTS AS BUSINESS BUILDERS

service as a well-organized advertising agency with a wide lot of successful experience behind those it is.

Advertiser Pays

No matter how many ways newspaper men like to figure it, they do not pay the commission to the agent. The advertiser pays both the net rate and the commission, which are included in the gross rate which he pays.

From the broadest possible newspaper standpoint, the support of reputable service agents operating on an entirely contingent basis—which is what they do—is the most logical and profitable activity they can encourage

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

BY JASON ROGERS

Q—In judging whether a newspaper is carrying a fair, good or very good amount of advertising, what percentage would you figure at times like this when print paper is as high as it is?

A.—A newspaper in a town of your size (11,000 population) would do well to establish a standard of 30 to 35 columns of reading matter, including everything printed except paid advertising.

In my judgment the whole theory of percentage of reading and advertising matter is a radical mistake which leads editors to burn up dollars needlessly.

If every time we receive a full-page ad our editors are permitted to crowd in another page of reading matter in a paper operating on a fifty-fifty basis, white paper is being wasted and an unfair charge put upon advertising.

"A good amount of advertising" for a newspaper like yours is, in my opinion, as much or more than your competitor carries at sound rates. Mere tonnage does not tell the story.

I am coming to the theory that whenever the advertising carried by a newspaper forces it beyond 24 pages the rates should be raised to automatically hold down volume.

A Jewelry Center

The manufacture of jewelry, in which industry Providence, R. I., leads all cities of the country, is closely allied with the silversmithing and silverware industry and with the reduction and refining of gold and silver from sweepings, clippings and scraps. The census bureau does not give combined figures for these allied industries, as it is the practice of the bureau not to make public statistics which would disclose the operations of individual establishments.

Special Information

Arctic is the center of a dozen prosperous mill towns, so closely connected that it is hard to define the boundary lines of any of them. It is the shopping center of these towns and also the trading center for many prosperous farmers from the western section of Coventry and South Sictnate.

It is one of the State's four big centers of the textile industry.

There are seventeen big cotton mills in this territory, all working at full capacity.

There are unsurpassed facilities for all kinds of manufacturing and many factory sites for which options are held by large concerns contemplating locating in this field.

The weekly wage for unskilled labor is $22.50; the weekly wage for skilled labor is $30.50.

Suburban and Farm Residents

Within distances varying from one to ten miles from the center of Arctic are the prosperous villages of Anthony, 1,500; Washington, 1,000; Quidnick, 1,200; Coventry Center, 1,200, and six other villages of about 500 each. There are practically no wholesalers of any size in this territory, but the retailers of Arctic and the surrounding villages are rendered exceptionally fine jobbing service by the big wholesale houses of Providence, R. I.

These houses maintain fine motor delivery throughout the territory and enjoy exceptionally fine trolley express accommodations. In a few instances branch offices are maintained in these smaller towns but no cold storage plants or wholesale storage is considered necessary.

Retail Section

The shopping center of Arctic is about one-half mile long on Quidnick, Main and Allen Streets. Here is found a variety of establishments in the retail line, theatres, hotels, etc.

Residential Features

One and two family houses predominate in the central part of all the Pawtuxet Valley villages.

There are no large tenement districts but around several of the large factories are well arranged mill settlements. These homes are prosperous-looking, well kept and arranged on the most up-to-date sanitary principles.

Trading Area

Although Arctic and the nearby towns and villages contribute a large amount of business to the retail stores of Providence, still the town of Arctic has a well defined trading area of its own. In the course of a year thousands of dollars come to the Arctic retail establishments and the variety of stores makes it possible for the inhabitants to satisfy all their desires for necessities and luxuries without going to the larger city. On the north the territory extends to Oaklawn, on the east to Apponaug, on the southwest the territory extends to Nooseneck Hill, on the west to the State line, on the northwest to South Sictnate, Kent and Clayville.

What is the Pawtuxet Valley?

The Pawtuxet Valley is composed of 23 busy villages clustered along both north and south branches of the Pawtuxet River.

Their population according to the latest estimate of the Pawtuxet Valley Board of Trade is 40,000 people.

Arctic is the largest of the number and is the trading center for all western and central Rhode Island.

In order to cover the field national advertisers must use the Pawtuxet Valley Times.

It is the only daily published between Providence and Willimantic, Conn.

It is the official paper for Kent County, which includes the townships of Warwick, West Warwick, Coventry, East Greenwich and West Greenwich. Also for the Kent County Superior Court and the Fourth Judicial District Court.

The Times is an independent paper read by all classes. It has no class favorites.

To cover the second industrial district (in size) of Rhode Island use

Next year New England celebrates its 300th Anniversary

Where all was wilderness and a few Indians three hundred years ago, in 1920 now are upwards of seven million people.

Two of the states, Rhode Island and Massachusetts are more densely populated than any European countries except Belgium and Holland.

Even within the last fifteen years its population has doubled, while the wage-earners have increased over 350 per cent.

That its present vision extends to ruralizing its cities augurs well for the future. Massachusetts is now 92 per cent urban, and farm lands near Boston bring $500 to $1,000 per acre, and for under-glass cultivation $5,000.

At present New England buys three-quarters of its food supply from other states. It is the biggest per capita market for high-grade food specialties, clothes and investment securities.

Its daily newspapers offer opportunities for intense advertising that have made a host of national trade-marks famous in New England.

Concentration vs. Diffusion
In Chicago Advertising

The sun's rays diffuse over the earth, lighting it uniformly. Concentrate those rays and you start a fire.

Advertise in a paper that circulates over a large territory and you get scattered, lukewarm results.

Use a paper that concentrates an enormous circulation in a small territory and you strike sparks!

The Chicago Daily News serves a population of 2,544,229 people—and serves it so well that 77.7 per cent. of those who speak English read it.

It is the kind of a paper you can use to strike sparks. 94 per cent. of its circulation is concentrated in Chicago and its suburbs.

The 7-out-of-10 Chicago families who read THE DAILY NEWS form probably the biggest single buying unit in the country—and they all buy from Chicago dealers.

If you advertise in a paper that diffuses over a large territory you waste effort on those who habitually buy where you may have no dealer.

The average daily net paid circulation of The Chicago Daily News during the period October 1, 1918-March 31, 1919 (the latest A. B. C. figures available), was 386,474. Of this 364,445 was city and suburban circulation—107,555 more than the week day city and suburban circulation of the second paper, a morning paper.

Using The Daily News it costs you less to concentrate on and win this great market than it does to fuss with enough smaller markets to make up the same bulk.

To strike sparks in the great Chicago market, concentrate on the paper that concentrates on that market.

Canada a Vast Treasure House of Natural Wealth

The quality of Canada's manhood was put under the world's spotlight at Vimy Ridge. At a critical hour of the great war the courage, grit, tenacity and fidelity of the strong men of the Dominion thrilled the allied peoples with a new faith and a new confidence in victory.

Vimy Ridge afforded a measure of that spirit which has made Canada one of the virile and forward-moving nations. That spirit was not born on the firing lines. It simply demonstrated itself anew under the fiery test. It has always lived in Canadians, for they have been pioneers, doers, creators, developers, dreaming dreams of commercial and industrial expansion which have come true.

Her world-task done, Canada has turned to her gigantic domestic problems with the same conquering spirit which flamed forth on the European battlefields. Her heritage of natural wealth is almost unmatched. Her treasuries of raw materials are inexhaustible. Her vision of development is sane and sound. Her people are busy with the tasks of peace. They are highly prosperous—as all busy people are apt to be.

Canadians buy the goods they want—whether they are made in England or in the United States. This great market is at the doors of manufacturers in the United States.

Canadians not only use the English language, but the same "trade language" which prevails with us. Advertising does not have to be toned down, or cut or otherwise denatured in order to "get over" its selling appeal in Canada. If it is good advertising in the United States it is equally good advertising in Canada.

In Canada, as in the states, the daily newspapers are the dominant mediums for advertising. There, as in the states, the newspapers have demonstrated their prestige and influence with the people by making successful the great issues of war bonds. There, as in the states, display advertising has come into its own—as the most powerful sales force known to man.

The daily newspapers listed on this page open the door to the rich and growing CANADIAN MARKET!

They Must Be Good

CONTINUITY and regularity of orders for "ONE-SET" Rollers prove that they must be good.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer from March 14, 1918, (the date they first installed a "ONE-SET" Roller), have been regularly equipping their presses with them.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer are installing these rollers, because they have convinced themselves that they are by far the most practical and efficient roller for them to use.

Goodrich "ONE-SET" Rollers require no re-adjustments from time to time and are immune from temperature changes. Hot or cold weather—slow or fast speed—they function and distribute perfectly. "ONE-SET" Rollers need no wash-ups and water does not affect them. They're long wearing, save trouble, worry and money

Over one hundred large progressive newspapers throughout the country have already ordered "ONE-SET" because they realize the tremendous saving and increased efficiency to be gained.

Let us cover a core for you, or at least write today for prices, stating core diameter, finished diameter and length of cover face.

CONGRESS IS ASKED AGAIN TO HELP SOLVE NEWS PRINT SHORTAGE PROBLEM

Representative Reavis Declares Smaller Publishers' Supply is Being Cut Off in Favor of Metropolitan Dailies---Reed Committee Promises to Hurry Investigation---Sizes Being Restricted

RECOGNIZING news print shortage in the United States as the forerunner of a possible national calamity, another effort to have the Government intervene in the crisis that is menacing American newspapers was made by Representative Reavis of Nebraska on the floor of the House, November 3.

Small daily and weekly newspapers are threatened with destruction because of inability to obtain print paper, the House was told by Mr. Reavis. He charged that newsprint manufacturers are refusing to sell to small publishers in order to fill the wants of the metropolitan dailies.

Paper consumption by the big city dailies and magazines has been greatly increased, Mr. Reavis said, by an "extensive national advertising campaign, conducted to defeat the Government in collecting taxes."

Sees Plot Against Nation

He urged that the Internal Revenue Bureau investigate the returns of concerns conducting the campaign to disclose to what extent their excess profits taxes were reduced by the costs of the advertising.

The action by Mr. Reavis was caused directly by the recent notices sent out by the International and other large paper companies to smaller customers that they will have to look elsewhere for their news print supply in 1920. The publishers affected are demanding that instead of their being cut off entirely, the total news print output should be pro-rated among all newspapers and not given entirely to the metropolitan dailies.

At the same time, it was announced in Washington that hearings by the Senate sub-committee of the committee of manufacturers named to investigate the news print situation will be opened as soon as the treaty of peace has been farther advanced or disposed of. Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin made the announcement November 4.

Reed Committee Will Hurry

The inability of Senator Reed, of Missouri, who sponsored the resolution for the investigation, to devote any of his time to it was given as the reason for delay.

"It is our desire to have the full subcommittee present when the matter is taken up," said Senator LaFollette in discussing the situation. "Undoubtedly exhaustive hearings will be held, but so far we have been unable to proceed. There have been requests from both sides for a chance to present testimony.

"Numerous publishers and consumers of news print have written to the committee for a chance to be heard, and in one instance there has been a request from a manufacturer of news print to be allowed to present his side of the case.

"When circumstances do permit the committee to meet, ample advance notice will be given so that all those who are interested may appear before it."

Senator Reed has been unable to devote any attention since the adoption of his resolution more than a month ago. He was absent from Washington until ten days ago on a speaking tour against the League of Nations, and soon after his return became ill and has not attended the sessions of the Senate.

Senator Reed is understood to have received numerous communications from publishers on the news print situation and he has promised to throw considerable light upon conditions in the industry as soon as he is able to devote a little time to other matters than the treaty, in which he is most deeply interested.

Coal Strike Protection

The importance the Government attaches to the uninterrupted publication of the nation's newspapers is illustrated again by the steps taken to prevent possible curtailment of news print manufacture and printing during the present coal strike.

Newspapers and news print manufacturers have been given the same preferred status in the matter of fuel supply as they enjoyed during the days when Dr. Garfield was rationing coal during the stress of war emergency. The publishers are in no danger of being cut off from coal until there is a shortage of such gravity as to make it necessary to close industries in order that homes and hospitals might be kept warm. The possibility for such a contingency is extremely remote.

News print producers enjoy the priority rating by reason of their inclusion in the preferential districts of the war industries board during the war. They are, therefore, placed ahead of the papers themselves in accordance with the theory that the paper must first be manufactured before the publishers can use it.

"E. & P." Figures Proven

Officials in Washington do not believe it will be necessary to revive this list in such form as to exclude newspapers, as there is a very general sentiment, especially in Congress, that the dissemination of news at this particular time is one of the first duties to the nation. Many members of Congress would very much prefer to see industries curtailed before newspapers were allowed to cease publication in the event of a prolonged strike and an acute fuel shortage.

Facts and figures on the news print that have been printed for several months past by Editor & Publisher in predicting the crisis that has now arrived are proved to have been entirely correct by a review of the 1919 paper production issued November 5 by the Federal Trade Commission. The report says: "The figures indicate that the 1919 news print production will be approximately the same as that of 1917, which represents an increase of about 6 per cent. over 1918."

Advertising Rates Too Low

With a 1919 increase of only 6 per cent. over last year's news print production, the newspapers are averaging fully 25 per cent. more consumption. The result has been the wiping out of many smaller papers' entire 1919 contract paper, driving the publishers into the open market, where prices as high as 8 cents a pound are reported to have been paid for "spot" paper in New York during the past week. Prices of 6 to 7½ cents a pound have been common up to this new high point.

On the close of September there was only four days' output of news print ahead of shipment at all mills in the United States and Canada and the stocks in the hands of the publishers totaled only 21 days' consumption, most of this being held by the publishers in the Metropolitan newspaper centers.

In speaking of the situation to Editor & Publisher this week, a leading news

PAPER SITUATION DEMANDS HIGHER RATES

BY CHARLES I. STEWART

General Manager Lexington (Ky.) Herald and Chairman News Print Committee of the S. N. A.

My view is that the only way to meet the news print shortage is to raise advertising rates. This crisis has been brought about by the demand for advertising space. Publishers have met this demand at the sacrifice of their own interests.

When they consider the increase in cost of production and the decreased value of the dollar, advertising space is the cheapest commodity today. It has advanced in price relatively less than anything else and the flood of avertising at low rates has brought about a situation threatening the newspapers with disaster.

I believe there should be an advance in rates sufficient to reduce the volume of advertising. A 40-page New York morning newspaper is not only a waste of paper bordering on the criminal, but it is an imposition on the public.

Most of the 32-page advertisers could tell their whole story quite as effectively in half a page, and often in a quarter of a page, and the rate should be high enough to reduce the size of these ads and the size of the 40-page city newspaper.

This, like news print conservation, is a matter that is beyond the control of the smaller publisher. Naturally the publisher in the small city feels that he ought to be able to get paper for 20 and 24-page week-day issues, if papers with 300,000 to half a million circulation can get the necessary supply for 40-page papers.

If New York would agree not to print more than a 24-page morning paper or more than a 30-page afternoon paper, with other cities agreeing to scale down in proportion, we would very soon have supplies of news print on the market.

If all newspapers will make a sufficient advance in advertising rates to bring about a 30 per cent reduction in the size of their publications, they would make more money and reseue the publishing business from its present danger.

One little newspaper can accomplish nothing, so far as the general situation is concerned. But the Lexington Herald plans to make advertising rates for 1920 sufficiently high to reduce the size of the paper and to meet the increased cost of production. All contracts made hereafter will be subject to rate revision on thirty days' notice.

In this period of great advertising activity, it is quite as important to educate the advertiser in the matter of rates as it is to secure the regular and permanent patronage of the new advertisers.

NEWSPAPER AD CHIEFS TO CONSIDER VITAL PUBLISHING PROBLEMS

Meeting of National Association in Chicago Comes at Crucial Period—May Affiliate With A. A. C. W. Departmental.

BY HARRY A. AHERN
President National Association Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers

THE newspaper advertising managers throughout the United States will confront some very large problems within the next few years; the great volume of advertising now running in the newspapers and the shortage of print paper at present being only one of those which they will have to face.

At the coming convention of the National Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers, which will be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on November 10 and 11, the advertising managers may propose some plan which can be suggested to the publishers that will help solve these vital questions.

Round-Table Talks Promise Big Results

Some very interesting matters will be discussed during the round table talks, which will be divided into four groups.

The first group will be attended by advertising managers representing newspapers in cities with a population of from 25,000 to 100,000; the second group by advertising managers representing newspapers in cities with a population of from 100,000 to 200,000; the third group by advertising managers representing newspapers in cities with a population of from 200,000 to 300,000; the fourth group by advertising managers representing newspapers in cities with a population of from 300,000 and upward.

The latter group will take in the big metropolitan papers, whose problems will be entirely foreign from those of newspapers printed in smaller cities.

May Affiliate With A. A. C. W.

The plan should work out very advantageously, insofar as solving large and small problems now confronting advertising managers all over the country.

The round table group plan at conventions is not at all a new one; it has been successfully worked by circulation managers at their conventions and there is no doubt that a great deal can be accomplished by the same method carried on by the Newspaper Advertising Managers' Association.

One of the principal discussions at recent meetings of the New York Advertising Managers' Association has been the wisdom of the affiliation of the National Association with the Newspaper Departmental of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

There seems to be a very strong feeling among the local New York advertising managers that the National Association should become as a unit, a part of the Newspaper Departmental of the A. A. C. W.

At the opening session of the advertising managers' convention this subject will be thrashed out thoroughly and it is hoped by the New York association that the plan will be adopted by the national association, so that the aims of the National Association of Advertising Managers and the Newspaper Departmental of the A. A. C. of the World will be mutual.

If the plan is adopted, the Newspaper Advertising Managers' Association will not lose its identity as an individual, but will simply be affiliating with another association, whose purposes are to place newspaper advertising first in the field.

It has been decided to have no outside speakers at the convention.

The dinner, which will be held on the evening of Monday, November 10, will be an informal gathering of members only. In other words, it is our intention to get right down to business and discuss ways and means to better conditions in our newspaper offices, as well as further the great interest now shown in the work of the National Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers.

The officers of the association are: President, H. A. Ahern, New York Journal; first vice-president, Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia Record; second vice-president, J. B. Woodward, Chicago Daily News; secretary-treasurer, E. W. Parsons, Chicago Tribune.

Board of Directors—W. G. Bryan, chairman, New York American; Wm. McKay Barbour, New York Globe; W. C. Rogers, Boston Transcript; E. L. Clifford, Minneapolis Journal; George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Otis Morse, Detroit Free Press; Charles Miller, Atlanta Georgian; H. R. Young, Columbus Dispatch; F. R. Hussey, Chicago Evening Post; A. A. Carrington, Omaha Bee; H. A. Robert, Cleveland Plain Dealer; H. E. Grant, Milwaukee Journal; Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia Record; J. B. Woodward, Chicago Daily News; E. W. Parsons, Chicago Tribune; H. A. Ahern, New York Journal.

Favor Joining A. A. C. W.

The New York Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers at its meeting on November 3 endorsed a proposal that the national association of daily newspaper advertising managers affiliate with the A. A. C. W.

ADVERTISING IS CURE FOR STRIKES

Education Through Press Will Enable Workmen to Refute Lies of Unscrupulous Agitators

BALTIMORE, MD., Nov. 1.—Frank D. Webb, advertising manager of the Baltimore news, in an address before the Baltimore Advertising Club, on "Are Red Labor Agitators Beating Advertising Men at Their Own Game?" advocated education of the people by advertising as a preventative of strikes.

In the course of his remarks, which was replete with quotations from labor experts in support of his points, Mr. Webb said:

"Did it ever occur to you that the strike is an advertising medium? Isn't that precisely the same sort of a reaching out for certain individuals or firms through the public which we see every time a manufacturer takes up an advertising campaign with his first object to get dealers to stock his goods?

"The principle of the two propositions is precisely alike—to influence a third party through the public. Can't we accomplish everything a strike can achieve through full-page advertisements in the newspapers, stating both sides of the case fully and completely, answering the whispered lies, admitting facts which are not right, having speakers address meetings, as the agitators do—forming committees to represent both sides in the attempt to try reconciling the point of difference?

"Let's substitute real advertising for the advertising medium of the strike. In 60 to 90 days, if we do our part, and spread this idea broadcast at the same time the whole face of things should change.

"It should be possible to kill the idea that strikes are the only possible way of getting differences adjusted in less time than that, and with the various communities all over the country thinking peace instead of internal war, as at present—with a spirit of get-together instead of fight-it-out, universally abroad in the land, these stand and deliver monstrosities would be impossible because the great mass of labor would have been won away from false radicals, and, instead of following blindly towards ruin for themselves and every one concerned, would be fighting to achieve the wonderful possibilities which are now open before this country as never before in the history of the world—if we can once get together.

"And with advertising we can get together.

"Let's advertise so well that the strike agitator will run up against working men who know the truth in advance of his coming. Let's do the work so thoroughly that in time we won't be put in the position of having to answer lies but will have told the truth to labor—so well that they will detect the lies when they hear them first recited.

"And crooked agitators when that state of affairs comes to pass, will address falsehoods to enlightened working men in peril of their lives.

"Let a few of them get beaten to a jelly by men angry at being lied to. Let a few of them get the medicine which is now administered by strikers to decent men . . . .

"More and better advertising was the slogan on which we were founded. There will be more and better advertising of American goods all over the civilized world if we can once get full steam ahead and every plant in the land on a twenty-four hour a day quantity production basis."

FRAZIER HUNT, BETTER KNOWN AS "SPIKE," OFTEN JUMPS BUT IS NEVER PUSHED

(Editorial Note—Frazier Hunt, who has just started on a tour of the world for the Chicago Tribune, won an enviable reputation for enterprise and daring as a correspondent during the World War. His two greatest journalistic feats were the bringing of the first copy of the German peace treaty to America and presenting it to the United States Senate and his entry into Soviet Russia, where he was the first American correspondent to interview Lenine and Trotsky and write first hand reports of conditions.)

Correspondent Who Presented U. S. Senate With Copy of the Peace Treaty Always Knows What He Wants and Goes After It.

BY WILLIAM SLAVENS McNUTT

SOME fall, some are pushed and yet others jump.

A friend of mine said to me recently that Frazier Hunt—better known as Spike because of his striking resemblance to a long and limber split rail—now on the way around the world for the Chicago Tribune with Yokohama as his first stop en route, had fallen into a pretty soft thing. If Spike Hunt fell into his present assignment then Jack Dempsey was beaten into the champion of the world at Toledo, and the German army bravely retreated on Austerlitz victory in the Argonne! He neither fell nor was he pushed. He had been gathering speed during a long hard run and when he got to the take-off he jumped!

In April of 1918, Spike Hunt and I were dauntlessly lying for our country in the Baccarat trench sector, which was then being held by the Rainbow Division

Breakfast, We Drank

Spike was there as war correspondent for the Red Cross Magazine, while I was cussing the Kaiser for Collier's. We were drinking breakfast one morning in the Hotel De La Gare in Baccarat, after a rude night in a damp dugout with a captain who believed that he flesh was more willing when the spirits were strong, when Spike announced, without preamble: "Bill, I'm going to Russia."

"When?"

"I dunno."

"Going for the Red Cross?"

"I dunno."

"Whereabouts in Russia are you heading for?"

"I dunno."

I decided that Spike had had enough breakfast so I drank the rest of it myself and suggested bed for both of us in Jilly, when those of us with the American Army in France who went nearly to war and lied for our country were meandering around between the Marne and the Vesle with press headquarters at Meaux, I heard that Spike had transferred to the Chicago Tribune and was going to Brest to do some stuff on the navy. I met him in Paris before he left and congratulated him over a bottle of lunch.

"Ought to get some good stuff at Brest," I suggested.

"I believe I could get in by way of Archangel," Spike replied.

"What are you talking about?"

"Russia," he replied. "I'm going to Petrograd and Moscow. That's where he big story is now."

"I thought you were going to Brest."

"I am just now. But I'm going to Petrograd and Moscow later."

"Got the assignment?"

"No, but I'm going after it."

"You can't get in by way of Archangel," I said. "Might as well try to get to Berlin by going through the lines on the Western Front."

"I know," said Spike. "But I think I can get the assignment to Archangel because there are American troops up there. If I get to Archangel I'll get to Petrograd and Moscow someway."

Told Him He Was Crazy

I told him he was crazy. He said sadly that he had always suspected as much and went to Brest.

Late in October I was in bed in the Lotti Hotel, Paris, trying to cough out a cold that I had contracted in the Argonne, when Spike blew in like a January gale making time over the Grand Banks.

"Going to Petrograd, Bill," he shouted "Petrograd and Moscow."

"By what route?" I asked.

"Well, I'm going to stop at Archangel first," he admitted reluctantly.

I told him he was a fool to go to Archangel and that he couldn't get to Petrograd and Moscow. Every other correspondent in France told him the same thing. Spike agreed that we were probably right—and went to Archangel I saw his stuff from North Russia and the next I heard of him was a postcard from somewhere in Sweden. On the card was written: "I am on my way to Petrograd and Moscow." My next news of him I got in his cables—from Petrograd and Moscow. He got in and he got his stuff—and himself—out. How he did it is his own story, and not for telling here. But anyone who says that Spike Hunt fell into his present assignment has me to contradict. I saw him jump. He jumped into the dark and chance may have had a good deal to do with the selection of the velvety moss bank on which he finally lit. However, he neither fell nor was he pushed. He jumped!

Won Race Out of Mexico

Hunt's training has been a varied one. He infested the University of Illinois for four years and spent his vacations "cushing" as a police reporter in Chicago. Then he wrote advertising till somebody caught him at it, after which he took charge of a coffee plantation in Mexico. The revolution broke out and Spike entered himself in a race with a flock of bullets which he managed to beat into Vera Cruz by a narrow margin.

Having run himself so successfully in Mexico he next undertook to run a weekly newspaper in Alexis, Illinois, but he couldn't whip the sheet out of a walk so he migrated to New York and freelanced till the rent came due, upon which date he went to work on the New York Morning Sun. He handled the draft at Camp Upton for the Sun, writing "Yap Hank Benny," a humorous series on the side, until he hooked up with the Red Cross Magazine to go to France as their war correspondent. He has committed every form of literature with the exception of poetry and plays—and he's a young man yet. If enough people tell him not to write poetry and play he probably will.

Acts Against the Majority

He always does what everybody tells him not to do, thereby achieving a certain originality. No man seeks advice more insistently than Spike Hunt. He asks all his friends what to do and then does the exact opposite of whatever the majority advise. He is an original and an independent person, but like all strong men he has his weakness.

His weakness and his five year old son, Bobby, are one and the same. Spike wore a brave bird-decking the Bushwicks but when a young Hunt says "chewing gum" the poor old man coughs up a nickel like an automatic vending machine.

The youngster is the one person who has Spike subsidized and inasmuch as the boy and his mother are accompanying Mr. Frazier Hunt on his journey around the world anybody who wants to influence Spike's cables can put it over by currying favor with Bobby. And Bobby's weakness is chewing gum!

War Work Brings Decoration From France

(By Telegraph)

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, has just been made a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorimer were long identified with war work. Mrs. Lorimer is chairman of the Independence Square Auxiliary of the Red Cross. Mr. Lorimer has been editor of the Post since 1899. He was born in Louisville and received his education at Colby and Yale. He is the author of several books of which "Letters of a Self Made Merchant to His Son" is probably the best known.

Unions Defied in Nashville Strike

(By Telegraph)

NASHVILLE, TENN., Nov. 4.—Printers of the three Nashville newspapers continued on strike tonight, although the papers have not missed an edition. J. M. Campbell, Southern representative of the International Typographical Union, said tonight that both the International and local union are insisting that the contracts with publishers be strictly adhered to. The men walked out when they were refused a fourth bonus over the contract scale. The papers are being issued with type set at a local job office, and the editorials and some advertisements are being photo engraved.

NEWSPAPERS' DUTY IN THE NATIONAL CRISIS TO IGNORE FALSE LABOR LEADERS

Give Space to and Play Up Constructive Efforts of Those Trying to Hold Labor and Industry Together—Tenth Article on "Newspaper Making."

BY JASON ROGERS

RECENT contact with those supposed to be leaders in big business and with those who, while representing organized labor, assume to talk for all labor, in connection with a plan which I tried to work out for the intelligent covering of the big Industrial Conference at Washington, which went on the rocks, would seem to indicate that neither side knows us in the newspaper business very well and that they don't trust us.

In the controversy between "selfishness" representing business purpose and "ignorance" reflecting the indefinite and often impossible demands of labor, for that is the situation in a nutshell, both sides either outspokenly or quietly feel that they cannot get a square deal in the press. If this is so, and it unquestionably is, we are in a very bad way and should do what we can to remedy a false position.

Between Two Fires

Foster, the chief agitator of the big steel strike, until recently the utterer of revolutionary propaganda, refused to talk openly before a committee of the United States Senate unless reporters should be barred from the room, on the ground that they would distort what he had to say, while Fitzpatriek, of Chicago, the stimulator of innumerable strikes, regularly howls at the capitalistic press, as outrageously unfair to the working man.

Not many weeks ago at a meeting of leaders in American industry, I was almost aghast to learn how general the feeling was among them that they could not get their side of any controversy fairly before the people in the newspapers. They felt the thing just as deeply as did the labor agitators.

If conditions are as bad as both sides seem to feel they are, and there is reasonable ground to admit that there is much justification in their views, there is something radically wrong with our newspapers, and the sooner we cut into the sore spot and find out what is wrong and how we can correct it the better it is going to be for us and American industrial prosperity.

If our editors think that the wild and sensational utterances of some trouble maker, pretending to represent labor, is bigger news than a big constructive effort by some sane labor leader or captain of industry, which we must admit is often the case, we had better show them the light, and bring home to them the error in such treatment.

There are good newspaper reasons not fully appreciated by the uninitiated, why many of our newspaper readers give preferential treatment to the destructive utterances of the radical agitator, but it is high time that we gave such individual the absent treatment. Without our playing them up they would never arrive nor get their grip on a following.

Newspaper circulation reflects the popularity vote of the community for one newspaper in preference to another or others. Many newspapers seeking largest possible circulations just as naturally as a duck takes to water incline toward playing up the side of the story that will please the greatest number.

Employers, manufacturers and capitalists, being in a small minority, get very scant notice, except in our editorial columns or on the society pages of our Sunday newspapers, or when we can hurl stones at them for the purpose of gaining the applause of the mass In the view of many newspaper editors, there is circulation in roasting the big fellow, and they also believe that it proves their courage.

There is no use talking about it, our newspapers are hated by those who are doing things. The labor men call us a capitalistic press and the employers call us cheap panderers to sensationalism and industrial unrest. Despite these conditions we are inclined to take ourselves very seriously and to think that we wield great influence.

The unreasonableness of what either side would consider fair is only paralleled by the effort of the "German-Americans" who sought to conduct a "fair" newspaper during the war—one that played up the German side. That is exactly what both sides to any controversy want, when they complain of a newspaper for being "unfair" to them.

Honest and sincere labor leaders who are seeking to establish constructive betterments in relations between employes and employers and who have nothing to hide, realize as fully as we do that a grossly unfair newspaper which uniformly and consistently cried down labor and the workers would have little or no circulation, as is proven in the cases of the small number of newspapers made to please the bourbon class.

Cannot Cry Down Labor

On the other hand our great captains of industry as sane business men, if they could but rid themselves of selfish greed, know as well as we do and as the labor leaders do, that if we complied with their demands for "fairness" we would be making newspapers like those referred to above, which have neither circulation nor influence.

The press of the country is no more capitalistic than our candy stores, grocery stores or any other business. To wield any considerable influence, a newspaper must be successful and known to be such, or it will either be a cheap, grovelling beggarly enterprise or the organ of some interest, in either case of little weight and without possession of that broad public confidence that is necessary to give it influence.

Notwithstanding all the twaddle to the contrary, our newspapers as a rule are making more money today than at any previous time. Those among them who are not making money today have no right or license to be considered newspapers. I know of a few unsu

NEW YORK WELCOMES EMIL SCHOLZ HOME FROM THE FAR EAST

FRIENDS of Emil M Scholz, former publisher of the New York Evening Post, welcomed him home from a long tour of the Far East at an informal dinner in the New York Athletic Club Saturday evening and presented him with a gold watch as a token of esteem.

The speakers were Harry Ahern of the New York Evening Journal, toastmaster; David Lawrence of the Lawrence Syndicate, Washington; and Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of The Nation. Mr. Scholz treated all present to an instructive talk, with stereopticon views, on places he visited in the Far East.

James Wright Brown, publisher of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, who was to have been a speaker, was unable to attend on account of an injury to his son, sustained playing football at the Borden town Military Academy, and sent a telegraphic address of congratulation to Mr. Scholz

The committee that arranged the dinner consisted of Harry Ahern of the Evening Journal, Sam Booth of the Globe and Col. Emmett Thompson.

Those present were: Emil M Scholz Raymond Wakeman, J. M. Hopkins Ernest Scholz, Robert McLean, J. R Pollock, H. A. Ahern, S. P. Booth, J C. Dayton, Col. Emmett Thompson, Dr. Jos. Thanks Mr. Baker For Writing Truth About the President

To the Editor of the New York Evening Telegram:—

Tell Ray Stannard Baker that an humble citizen wishes to express sincere appreciation of the remarkable articles that he is writing on President Wilson's work at the Peace Conference.

Opposition to the League of Nations and opposition to Wilson are not to be criticised so long as they are kept within the bounds of decency; without forceful opposition great issues like the League of Nations could not be thoroughly threshed out to the satisfaction of the public mind.

Ray Stannard Baker's articles are timely and of national importance.

Ray Baker Throws New Light on President's Work at Paris

Self Discipline Alone Saved Him from Serious Breakdown in Paris After Five Decisive Struggles for His Principles.

(By RAY STANNARD BAKER.)

Once, as is well known, President Wilson broke down suddenly and was ill in bed for several days at a very critical moment in the peace conference. Yet such was his power of self-discipline and such the care of Dr. Grayson that he recuperated swiftly, and each morning seemed a ball of energy and an eager to go on with the fight as ever.

Even when hardest pressed he never failed to make powerful impression upon every one who came into contact with him. I saw many of his visitors come after they and the reaction was unfailing. I remember with ... Dutch editor, a man who had come into pe... th nearly every important leader in Eu... the of the President.

ACKNOWLEDGES ENGLAND'S BIG DEBT TO A FREE PRESS

Lord Ampthill, Presiding at Dinner to H. A. Gwynne, Editor London Morning Post, Lauds Service of Newspapers

BY HERBERT C. RIDOUT
London Editor of Editor and Publisher

THE independence of the British press during the war and the influence thereby exercised on the affairs of the nation, was strongly exemplified at a complimentary luncheon to H. A. Gwynne, the editor of the London Morning Post in appreciation of his services to his country by his capable editorship.

Lord Ampthill, the head of the National Political Party presided, and the company included Sir Edward Carson, Sir Henry Dalziel, proprietor of the Daily Chronicle; Sir George Riddell, Sir Emsley Carr, Sir Arthur Pearson, Robert Donald, and many representative names of high political and journalistic service.

"We Are Governed by the Press"

Lord Ampthill said that although Mr. Gwynne was but little recognised by the public at large there were few more responsible or arduous posts, or any more closely concerned with the public welfare, than that of editor of a great newspaper at the present time. We were to a large extent governed by the Press, or perhaps to speak more accurately, we owed it to the Press that our affairs were not completely mismanaged, and that we were not hopelessly misgoverned.

The Press alone made popular or democratic government possible in the circumstances of modern civilisation. Upon the Press far more than upon Parliament we depended for the preservation of our liberties, the assurance of justice and progress, and the maintenance of national honour. Without the Press, patriotic and courageous as it had shown itself to be, we should not have won the war. The newspapers, far more than the statesmen, had given the leadership to the nation during the last five years.

Mr. Gwynne, as editor of the Morning Post, was conspicuous among those journalists who did so much to bring about the victory for civilisation and humanity. But like many a soldier he had neither sought nor received honorary distinction or material reward. Neither rank or ribbons could add anything to the high esteem in which he was held.

Served Best in Editorial Chair

Mr. Gwynne's services as editor were nearly lost to the nation, because he had the defects of his qualities. When there was a fight he liked to be in it, and he had at all times displayed an adventurous and sporting spirit. When the war broke out he was desperately keen to join the new army, and was only deterred by the peremptory orders and wisdom of the proprietors of the Morning Post.

If he had been allowed to join up he would have distinguished himself in the field. Few men were better qualified by experience and ability to take part in the training and campaigning of the citizen army. But however gallantly and skilfully he might have acquitted himself, he could not have served his country half so well as he had done in the editorial chair.

No doubt he regretted and would continue to regret that he was not in the trenches and over the top, but he had no real right to complain, and he had seen as much of warfare as most men. He began life as a war correspondent, going first to Denmark. With him he had the best officers and the best men that any editor ever had.

Sir Edward Carson said he had wondered whether any good thing could come out of Wales.

Certainly. But as he read deeper into the Prime Minister's suggestion for the creation of a new world he asked himself, "Where will Gwynne be in the new world?" He had always thought Mr. Gwynne was far too good for the old world! That thought had been further impressed upon him as he found close to him Mr. Robert Donald, Sir H. Dalziel, Sir G. Riddell, and many others, and he could not help wondering where the Press would be in the new world. The new world was to be a great brotherhood of friends. Just imagine in that brotherhood of friends all the newspapers writing exactly the same thing to bring about Mr. Lloyd George's new millennium!

Instead of reading half a dozen papers every day he would content himself with buying his Morning Post in the absolute certainty that he would find exactly the same articles and the same suggestions in every other paper. "But," said Sir Edward, "I have come here to honour Gwynne, who is an old friend.

"There is no one more sincere, no one straighter, no one more courageous, and I am glad to be present on such an occasion as this."

H. A. GWYNNE
Editor London Morning Post

Under Mr. Gwynne the Morning Post had been more than ever the foremost advocate of a national policy.

Was it wrong when it asserted the right of free and independent comment within the limits of the censorship, when it successfully claimed for the British Navy the right to stop German reservists returning to their country, when it forced the Government to make cotton contraband, when it clamoured for the tightening of the blockade, when it urged compulsory military service not only for Great Britain, but for Ireland as well?

In paying a compliment to Mr. Gwynne they were paying a tribute to the whole profession of journalism.

"Colonel-in-Command"

Mr. Gwynne, who was enthusiastically received, thanked the assembly. He said he had done less than the humblest soldier, and much less than those who had died. But he accepted all that they had said about the Morning Post with pleasure because he could pass it to his loyal colleagues and splendid helpmates in the paper, for without them he could have done nothing.

The Morning Post was a regiment. The colonel commanding-in-chief was the proprietress, (the Countess Bathurst) without whom nothing could be done in the way of independence of thought and action. He was the lieutenant-colonel commanding the battalion. Sir Edward Carson said he had wondered whether any good thing could come out of Wales.

Certainly. But as he read deeper into the Prime Minister's suggestion for the creation of a new world he asked himself, "Where will Gwynne be in the new world?" He had always thought Mr. Gwynne was far too good for the old world! That thought had been further impressed upon him as he found close to him Mr. Robert Donald, Sir H. Dalziel, Sir G. Riddell, and many others, and he could not help wondering where the Press would be in the new world. The new world was to be a great brotherhood of friends. Just imagine in that brotherhood of friends all the newspapers writing exactly the same thing to bring about Mr. Lloyd George's new millennium!

Instead of reading half a dozen papers every day he would content himself with buying his Morning Post in the absolute certainty that he would find exactly the same articles and the same suggestions in every other paper. "But," said Sir Edward, "I have come here to honour Gwynne, who is an old friend.

"There is no one more sincere, no one straighter, no one more courageous, and I am glad to be present on such an occasion as this."

Nation Has Been Wenige's Circulation Field

H. A. WENIGE, chairman of the general welfare committee of the International Circulation Managers Assoiation and in working hours circulation manager of the Glens Falls (N. Y.) Post-Star, was born in Detroit, Mich., in 1882 and entered newspaper work at the early age of twelve. His first position was on the Detroit Free Press. He carried a route and worked in the mail room. A little later he added a new route and a mail room job with that paper to his daily labors and for his combined efforts received the wonderful sum of $6 per week. Since then he has traveled far and gained wide experience.

After working on various Chicago papers as a canvasser Mr. Wenige went to the old Des Moines Register and Leader, now Register and Tribune, and it was there that he first started to advance in his chosen profession and finally reached the position of assistant city circulation manager. Next he joined the Lee Syndicate and was first with the Davenport (Iowa) Daily Times and then the La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune.

While with the Tribune, Mr. Wenige received his first offer to become a circulation manager, with the Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Gazetter, and accepted it and became circulation manager of the Boise (Idaho) Capitol-News and was with that paper when the editor and publisher were sent to jail for criticising a decision of the Idaho Supreme Court. Leaving the Capitol-News he went to Spokane, Wash., to take charge of promotion for the Spokesman Review.

Mr. Wenige was circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard-American when he enlisted in the army in 1918. Prior to that he was circulation manager of the Worcester (Mass.) Post and for a time was engaged in magazine promotion work.

Now being back in the newspaper field to stay, Mr. Wenige is an advocate of the application of the policy of consulting the salesman about the commodity he is going to sell to the newspaper business. In expressing his views to EDITOR & PUBLISHER recently he said:

"I believe in clean advertising and think that the time is coming when the circulation manager will sometimes be consulted by the kind of newspaper he is going to sell. The circulation manager is a salesmanager and should have something to say about the manufacture of the article he is going to sell. If the salesmanager of a stove factory knew the low goods he was going to put out and the material he could not successfully sell it. The same should hold true of the circulation manager. If he knows that his paper accepts advertising that is, to say the least, misleading he cannot be expected to make the clean record of sales which would be possible if he knew that only honest ads were carried in his paper.

"A great many circulation managers have hobbies. I have one—working through boys. I believe that the newsboy is the best asset a newspaper has. This is especially true in the smaller cities. Nearly every business man in the small cities has at some time or other carried a newspaper route. The carrier boy of today is pretty apt to be the merchant of tomorrow. By treating the boy right you not only take care of the present, but you build for the future. When he grows to manhood he is going to remember the paper on which he carried a route. The life of a newspaper depends to a great extent upon the circulation manager."

UNFAIR COMPETITION CHARGED

Trade Commission Files Complaint Against United Typothetae

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—The Federal Trade Commission has filed a complaint of unfair competition against the United Typothetae of America and seven of its officers, alleging that the employing printers are "coercing manufacturers into payment of bonuses and attempting to annul free competition in the printing trade by setting up standard prices for its membership."

The complaint charges that the United Typothetae is seeking to collect assessments from manufacturers and merchants of paper, printing presses, type, ink, and other printing supplies, the money "to be applied to alleged educational purposes, but mainly to induce employing printers to use a uniform system of cost accounting and a standard price list compiled by the United Typothetae."

Coercive methods, the complaint charges, have been used to obtain subscriptions to this fund, "in that the organization published monthly bulletins containing names and addresses of subscribers, in order that the employing printers could discriminate in the purchase of supplies in favor of those who had subscribed."

The organization and the seven officers named, Benjamin P. Moulton, Arthur E. Southworth, Charles L. Ginsley, George M. Gardner, E. H. James, Fred W. Gage, and Joseph A. Borden, have been directed to file answer with the commission at Washington on December 13.

cessful newspapers today and every one of them falls under the classifications I have mentioned above.

Our newspapers which of necessity are conducted by business men, with more than ordinary facilities to know what is going on in all lines of industry and affairs, are as a rule unionized from cellar to roof, and many of them are wondering at the growing pains of other industries being forced, by gradual processes and modern principles between employee and employer, into greater recognition of the workers.

Our newspapers are as anxious as anybody else for continued prosperity and are just as vigorously against the activities of the pernicious Bolsheviki radicals, who would overturn the control of President Gompers and other labor heads representing the conservative element in organized labor.

I know what the "closed shop" means and of the great desirability of the "open shop" idea, representing the freedom of labor as contrasted with the monopoly that labor seeks to set up with its "closed shop," and confidently expect that through profit sharing and representation in management we will be able to solve the great problems now before us.

Some Travel in Middle Ages

Mr. Gompers at the present time is on record against profit sharing, which he characterizes as a means for holding non-union men in non-unionized industry, and as a sort of a hold-out.

Progress is not made through calling the other fellow a fool or a crook or worse, but by laboring with him to produce co-operative understanding.

The wisest heads in modern business seem to think that the successful solution of the readjustment in industry throughout the world hinges on the question of production rather than on hours or compensation to those who labor.

The Boarhosts among the manufacturers are still traveling in the darkness of the Middle Ages, and in reality are just as dead as if they had given up the ghost forty or fifty years ago. They are not aware of what has happened since the entire resources of the United States were concentrated on defeating Germany.

It is up to our newspapers, as I see it to bring home to our people generally the superior condition of workers in all industry in the United States, as compared to that of workers in the same industries in other countries, and to show to them how thankful they should be for the liberty and freedom assured them under our representative form of government.

My contact with both sides in the controversy has led me to the conclusion that if employers would handle their individual situations with absolute frankness and a sincere recognition of the rights of those who are working for and with them, there would be mighty few strikes and greater prosperity and production in every line.

We don't hear of labor troubles in the case of concerns like that of Henry Ford, General Electric Company, Proctor & Gamble, Hydraulic Pressed Steel Co., Sears Roebuck & Co., and a hundred others I could name, where workers have been given a square deal and where they know they always will.

It would seem to me that the same course for our newspapers in the emergency would be to quietly omit the names, and pictures of those who seek to lead orderly working people into lawlessness, disloyalty and worse.

Attention for Reconstructionists

By making heroes or martyrs of them we make it all the more difficult for those who would lead them along lines of sanity for their own best interests and well-being to do so.

Rather let us give space and play up the constructive efforts of those who are trying to hold labor and industry together than to magnify into seeming achievement the illogical and illusionary dreams of near-Bolsheviste.

The time is coming if it has not already arrived when all of those who believe in American institutions and freedom must stand up shoulder to shoulder to show those who would overturn our civilization that it can't be done.

Logic

Many attractive markets are relatively unprofitable through prohibitive selling expense. The market may be too scattered, too poor, too far away from adequate transportation facilities. Most likely the market itself is desirable but the divided newspaper competition makes it necessary to use several newspapers for adequate coverage.

In other words to thoroughly saturate most desirable markets, it is necessary to double, treble, occasionally quadruple your advertising expense through the absolute need of several newspapers.

Figure out your rates on a proportional basis, and you can't get away from the fact that your profits decrease in proportion to the increase of the number of advertising units.

Conversely your profits will increase in proportion to the decrease of the number of advertising units necessary for saturation.

Now isn't it perfectly logical therefore to select advertising centers which will give you largest, quickest and easiest profits?

One of the exceptional situations in the United States is

ERIE

Pennsylvania

The Market 157,000

Erie Population, 105,000; Suburban (35 mile radius), 52,000

Erie controls a large, concentrated, prosperous, desirable territory.
There selling expense is reduced to absolute minimum through the dominance of one paper:

ERIE DAILY TIMES

(A. B. C. Member)

Paid Circulation 27,079

Line Rate 6c. flat. Evenings except Sunday.

The Erie Times has 50% more than the combined paid circulations of its two competitors, and over treble the circulation of either.

Consider that in Erie's population of 105,000—21,000 homes—the Times has 19,222 paid subscribers. Consider that in Suburban Erie, 35 mile radius, 52,000 population—10,000 homes—the Times has 6,709 paid subscribers. In fact, so thoroughly does the evening Times saturate Erie and environs, that in the entire United States there are but few parallels.

The very obvious conclusion is that Erie, Pa., and the Times should be in every national campaign.

Advertisers interested in actual net profits are thoroughly justified in making an exception to include this unusual city and exceptional paper, though the campaigns may call for only the very largest population centers.

Details regarding the market and the newspapers will be supplied gladly upon request.

If you have no distribution, let us know. We may be able to assist you. You must be interested in the market.

In this advertisement is little opinion. It is mostly a recitation of facts. You cannot get away from the logic, and therefore, you must be interested in placing a contract. May we hear from you?

CREEL ANSWERS CRITIC'S "C. P. I." CHARGES

Contends Only Gross Negligence About Bureau's Affairs Was Congress' Prevention of Settling Its Business

George Creel, who was chairman of the Government Committee on Public Information during the war, has sent to Secretary of War Baker, as chairman of the Council of National Defence, a letter in which he says that the E. K Ellsworth report, making charges of gross negligence against the committee is "false and unjust" and begs an early opportunity to appear before the council to answer them.

Investigator Ellsworth, who was appointed in August as Liquidation Officer made a report to the Senate Appropriations Committee that uncashed checks for thousands of dollars were filed away or on the floor when the bureau ceased to function. Mr. Ellsworth said he was refusing to pay some accounts approved by Chairman Creel.

The report said he found a balance of about $1,500,000 left out of the $5,650,000 from President Wilson's special war fund and $1,250,000 provided by Congress, included in the committee's assets. Unpaid bills aggregating several hundred thousand dollars were still in the committee's files. An item of $10,000 in the hands of a New York auctioneer was listed "several thousand dollars with an army officer in Rumania."

Mr. Creel said in part:

"The Committee on Public Information cost the taxpayers just $1,646,000 for two years of work in the United States and every foreign nation, less than the amount spent in a single country in one year by some belligerents. The sum of $8,39?,?67.61 was paid into the treasury of the United States before our final accounting because the Government was in desperate need of money by reason of the failure of Congress to pass the sundry civil bill."

KELLOGG PLANS CHAIN PAPERS

Cities Near Los Angeles Will Get New Journals

Los Angeles, Nov. 3.—F. W. Kellogg, business manager of the Express, is planning to establish a number of daily newspapers in Southern California cities adjacent to Los Angeles. He states that the newspapers will be his own property and will not be established in the interests of anybody but himself and his own newspaper organization.

His first venture in this field is the Pasadena Evening Post, which has been issued since September 1. He expects to establish his next newspaper in Long Beach, a city of about 60,000 population. Other cities whose newspaper possibilities are being investigated by Mr. Kellogg include Santa Barbara, Santa Ana, San Bernardino, Pomona, Riverside, Whittier, Redlands and Santa Monica.

Fred C. Veon, well known in Los Angeles and Detroit newspaper circles, has been appointed business manager of the Rural World, which is owned and operated by the Express Publishing Company.

NATION'S MAGAZINES UNITE

National Association of Periodical Publishers Chartered

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 3.—The National Association of Periodical Publishers obtained a charter of incorporation today. The Board of Directors include Arthur J. Baldwin, vice-president McGraw-Hill Publishing Company; R. J. Cuddihy, Funk & Wagnalls; Charles D. Lanier, Review of Reviews; A. C. Pearson, George E. Cook, Graham Patterson, George B. Buckley, Joseph A. Moore, Roger W Allen, Frank C. Hoyt, N. E. Lewis, B. A. Mackinnon, and Thomas A. Barrett, all of New York; P. S. Collins, Charles F. Jenkins of Philadelphia, Henry Newell of Boston, E. L. Shaw of Chicago, Clarence Poe of Birmingham, Ala., and E. T. Meredith of Des Moines, Ia.

The organization will take the place of the Periodical Publishers Association, which has been in existence for twenty years. In connection with the troubles which have tied up the printing industry in New York for more on the part of the publishers is understood as an effort to prepare for future labor disturbances.

J. W. GANNON FORMS OWN AD AGENCY

Retires from Royal Baking Powder Company After Sixteen Years—Shirley N. Carr, Lawyer and Soldier, His Associate

Joseph W. Gannon, for sixteen years connected with the Royal Baking Powder Company, has resigned and organized an advertising agency under the name of J. W. Gannon, Inc., of which he is president and general manager, with offices at 220 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mr. Gannon began his advertising career in 1899 with N. W. Ayer & Son, Philadelphia, where he received a thorough training in the fundamentals of advertising and the various departments of agency work. Within a year after beginning he became a solicitor for the company and was its New York State representative in 1903, when he was invited to join the Royal Baking Powder Company, which he has since served with conspicuous success, first as assistant advertising manager and later for several years acting head of the advertising department.

His name and reputation for forceful and constructive advertising is known to publishers and advertising men all over the country.

Prominent in Loan Campaigns

Mr. Gannon contributed his services to the Treasury Department during the fourth and fifth Liberty Loan campaigns and originated and planned the celebrated Avenue of the Allies on Fifth Avenue, New York, the daily national celebrations at the Altar of Liberty, the outdoor studio in front of the New York Public Library and a number of other notable features during the fourth loan. He is president of the Dartmouth athletic council, to which office he has been re-elected for several years, and is the representative from New York City on the council of the alumni of that college.

Associated with Mr. Gannon as vice-president and treasurer is Shirley N. Carr, for several years a member of the New York bar. Mr. Carr is a graduate of Princeton, 1903, and is secretary of his class. During the war he volunteered for service in the Quartermaster Corps and assisted in organizing the production and inspection branch of the hardware and metals division. He was commissioned Captain, Q. M. C., in August, 1918, and made assistant chief of the branch, which was later attached to the general supplies division, the largest procurement division in the army.

A REMARKABLE FEAT

St. Louisian Takes 'Phone Ad from Chicago Without An Error

ST. LOUIS, OCT. 31.—E. L. Hill, assistant to President E. Lansing Ray of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, performed the unusual feat of taking a display advertisement four columns wide by 225 agate lines deep over the long distance telephone without an error. The advertisement was that of the Stanwood Company, investment securities, and it was placed by Albert Frank & Co. of Chicago. The agency was eager to place the advertisement in Wednesday's issue, as that was the last day of the convention in St. Louis of the Investment Bankers' Association of America.

Full directions were given as to size, kind of border, size of type, space between paragraphs, the size of a box and where to insert it, etc. Mr. Hill repeated the advertisement to Chicago, the whole proceeding requiring one hour and seventeen minutes. When the copy arrived the next day and was checked up with the advertisement there was not one mistake.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S

Space-Buyers' Chart and Market Survey of the

STATE OF MARYLAND

PAGES 17 TO 28 INCLUSIVE

MARYLAND, RICH AND PROGRESSIVE, OFFERS ATTRACTIVE MARKET OPPORTUNITIES

Great Army of Wage Earners Finds Steady Employment in the Growing Industries of State—Baltimore, One of America's Most Important Cities, a Major Market Within Itself.

MARYLAND is AMERICAN. Sometimes we think of it as a Southern state. It is—but it is also Northern and an Eastern and a Western state. It is Southern in a geographical sense. It is Southern in the traditions that govern its social life—in the charm of its hospitality and in the high ideals of its dominant people.

But the Mason & Dixon Line, forming a part of its Northern boundary, has not been a bar against the influx of Northern energy and ideas. It is Eastern in its density of population and in the vigor of its industrial life—Western in its progressiveness and in the self-reliance of its people. Any American feels that he is at home in Maryland—that he is among "his own people."

The first settlement in the colony was made in the hope of founding a state in which the broadest religious tolerance should prevail. That ideal was never abandoned.

Maryland ranks forty-first in size among the states of the union, twenty-seventh in population and seventh in density of population. The estimates of the U. S. Census Bureau for 1914 fix the population at 1,341,000.

The gross area of the state is 12,327 square miles; the land surface, 9,941. There are 130.3 inhabitants to the square mile.

Urban Population Outgrowing Rural

The population of Maryland is very evenly balanced between the cities and rural communities. For the first time, in 1910, the census showed a slight margin in favor of the cities, the percentages being 50.8 and 49.2. Urban population, of course, includes the inhabitants of incorporated places having 2,500 or more. In 1914 there were four cities with an estimated population of 10,000 or more—Baltimore, Cumberland, Frederick and Hagerstown. In these cities live 47.7 per cent. of all the people of the state. They reported 61.6 per cent. of the total value of manufactured products.

The state is admirably served in a transportation way. According to latest statistics there are 1,430 miles of steam railway lines and 645 of electric. Chesapeake Bay, 200 miles long, is, in a sense, a Maryland Lake," as two-thirds of it is within the state borders. It is a tremendous factor in the transportation situation, and in addition to affording quick and cheap freight transportation for vast quantities of farm products destined for the Baltimore markets and for the shipment of Baltimore goods to the sections of rich country tributary to the Chesapeake, it constitutes one of the richest fishing grounds in the country and opportunity for oyster culture unmatched elsewhere. Maryland stands first in the quantity of oysters taken from these beds.

Recent figures as to the value of farm crops in the state are not obtainable; but, at the time of the last census, before the great advance in these values, the state produced crops worth $43,920,149. Corn and wheat are the principal crops.

During the fiscal year 1914 there were exports of merchandise through the port of Baltimore amounting to $109,690,231. The imports amounted to $34,489,494.

An Important Industrial State

Among the states Maryland ranked fourteenth, in 1914, in the value of manufactured products, and fifteenth in the number of wage earners employed in its industries. The significance of these facts to advertisers who are studying market conditions appears when it is recalled that Maryland is forty-first in size and twenty-seventh in population. The conclusion must be that the state, while having no great preponderance of urban population, must be ranked as one of the important industrial commonwealths.

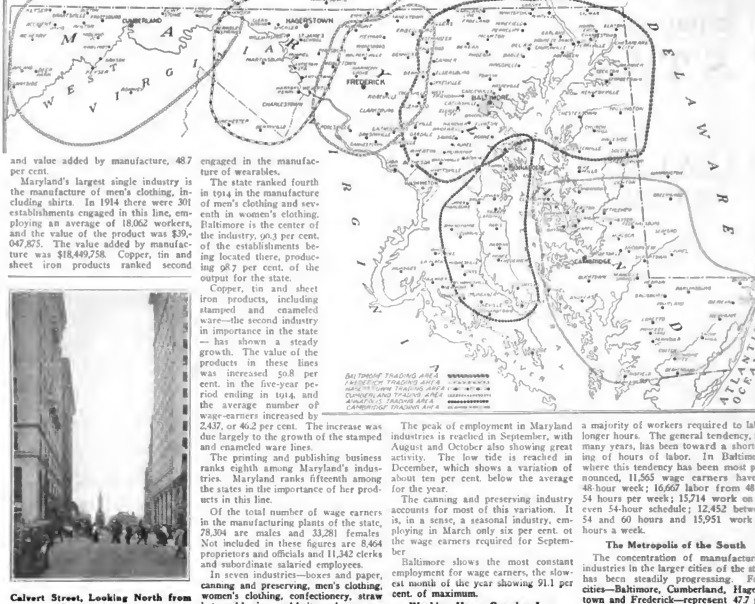
The total value of Maryland's manufactured products for 1914 was $377,749,078.

The average number of wage earners employed in these manufacturing industries was 111,585.

The number of manufacturing establishments in the state in the year named was 4,797; the capital invested totaled $203,210,925. The wage-payroll amounted to $53,792,339. Salaries of officials, clerks, et al., amounted to $18,008,770.

Clothing the Most Important Line

The value added by the process of manufacture was $138,777,105. This constitutes the difference between the cost of raw materials and the value of the finished products.



As demonstrating the growth of Maryland industries, these figures are cited: During the decade ending in 1914 the invested capital was increased by 45.2 per cent; number of wage earners by 18.5 per cent; wages, 48.8 per cent; value of products, 55.2 per cent.

and value added by manufacture, 48.7 per cent.

Maryland's largest single industry is the manufacture of men's clothing, including shirts. In 1914 there were 301 establishments engaged in this line, employing an average of 18,062 workers, and the value of the product was $39,047,875. The value added by manufacture was $18,449,758. Copper, tin and sheet iron products ranked second engaged in the manufacture of wearables.

The state ranked fourth in 1914 in the manufacture of men's clothing and seventh in women's clothing. Baltimore is the center of the industry, 90.3 per cent. of the establishments being located there, producing 98.7 per cent. of the output for the state.

Copper, tin and sheet iron products, including stamped and enameled ware—the second industry in importance in the state — has shown a steady growth. The value of the products in these lines was increased 50.8 per cent. in the five-year period ending in 1914, and the average number of wage-earners increased by 2,437, or 46.2 per cent. The increase was due largely to the growth of the stamped and enameled ware lines.

The printing and publishing business ranks eighth among Maryland's industries. Maryland ranks fifteenth among the states in the importance of her products in this line.

Of the total number of wage earners in the manufacturing plants of the state, 78,394 are males and 33,281 females. Not included in these figures are 8,464 proprietors and officials and 11,342 clerks and subordinate salaried employees.

In seven industries—boxes and paper, canning and preserving, men's clothing, women's clothing, confectionery, straw hats and hosiery and knit goods—women wage earners outnumber the men.

The largest proportions of women wage earners—about 75 per cent.—are employed in the two branches of the clothing industry.

The peak of employment in Maryland industries is reached in September, with August and October also showing great activity. The low tide is reached in December, which shows a variation of about ten per cent. below the average for the year.

The canning and preserving industry accounts for most of this variation. It is, in a sense, a seasonal industry, employing in March only six per cent. of the wage earners required for September.

Baltimore shows the most constant employment for wage earners, the slowest month of the year showing 91.1 per cent. of maximum.

Working Hours Growing Less

In 1914 the greatest number of wage earners of the state were employed in establishments where the prevailing working hours were sixty per week. In only one line, paper and wood pulp, were a majority of workers required to labor longer hours. The general tendency, for many years, has been toward a shortening of hours of labor. In Baltimore, where this tendency has been most pronounced, 11,565 wage earners have a 48-hour week; 16,667 labor from 48 to 54 hours per week; 15,714 work on an even 54-hour schedule; 12,452 between 54 and 60 hours and 15,951 work 60 hours a week.

The Metropolis of the South

The concentration of manufacturing industries in the larger cities of the state has been steadily progressing. Four cities—Baltimore, Cumberland, Hagerstown and Frederick—represent 47.7 per cent. of the estimated population of the state, and reported 61.6 per cent. of the total value of products and 72.9 per cent. of the total number of wage earners.

Baltimore is one of the great cities of the western world. Its history forms a romance of American life. As a settlement it fought, in the early days, for elbow room, resting its title to vast landed areas upon grants made by an English King, but disputed by other and adjoining colonies. Lord Baltimore was vested with imperial and autocratic power, but found that its exercise in a young land where the love of democracy and liberty was ingrained in the people of neighboring colonies was an impossible dream.

His great domains were, by negotiation and semi-compulsion, pared and trimmed, Pennsylvania and Virginia opposing his claims of dominion north and south. Finally, boundaries were fixed and Maryland, as one of the thirteen original states, entered the union as a sort of buffer state between Pennsylvania and Virginia—her boundaries in the south and west zigzagging on the map in a way to baffle the average student of geography.

among Maryland's industries, employing 7,712 wage earners, producing goods to the value of $25,491,121.

The third industry in importance is canning and preserving, in which 468 establishments were engaged, employing 8,640 wage earners and with an annual product valued at $18,028,779. The fourth industry is slaughtering and meat packing and the fifth is fertilizers.

There are forty different lines of industry in Maryland producing goods valued at more than a million dollars annually. The manufacture of paint and varnish, the fortieth industry of the state in the value of its products, was credited with an annual output valued at $1,027,441 in 1914.

The manufacture of women's clothing, considered as a line distinct from that of men's clothing, ranks sixteenth among the industries of the state. The annual product in 1914 was valued at $6,015,195, and the average number of wage earners engaged was 3,026.

Combining the two branches of clothing manufacturing, the total value of the product in the year named was $45,063,070, and the average number of employees was 21,088. Thus 18.9 per cent. of the wage earners of the state were

GET The NEWS REPORT ON

FIFTY brands of pills, twelve oils, three syrups, seven waters, fourteen salts and two medicinal teas compose the eighty-eight laxative medicinal products on sale in Baltimore drug stores according to a report just completed on these products by the merchandising department of The Baltimore News.

¶ True, many of them—particularly the unadvertised ones—were found tucked away in drawers and boxes, never to see the light of day. Some, also, were received on consignment, others were stocked on the strength of a temporary fling at advertising which did little more than get the dealer's name on the dotted line.

¶ The relationship between newspaper advertising and number of brands, established by comparison between previous reports, particularly those of the Chewing Gum and Talcum Powder investigations, goes glimmering in the case of Laxatives and Cathartics, largely because of this fact.

¶ Chewing Gums, well advertised in newspapers, do a business of approximately a million dollars a year in Baltimore, confined to 20 brands. Talcum Powders, less active newspaper advertisers, do business in Baltimore estimated at half-million dollars scattered among 80 brands.

¶ In the case of Laxatives and Cathartics, too much of the advertising has been of the kind to get the goods on the dealers' shelves—too little of the kind to get them off. The vast quantity of "dead stuff" among the 88 brands of laxatives on sale in Baltimore shows the need of an advertising cathartic that will wake up dormant interest in these products and restore to normal, sales possibilities that have absolutely ceased to function.

¶ The comparative importance from a sales standpoint of pills, oils, syrups, waters, salts and teas—distribution of the various brands, individual reports of 7 local sellers, individual reports of 27 wholesalers and 100 retailers are contained in this big report of 267 pages (the most exhaustive of its kind we have ever issued) and should be of direct value to the manufacturer thinking of entering or broadening his activities in the local field. In making your request for a copy, which will be furnished without obligation, please state the name of the product you are interested in and your connection with the firm.

These wholesale houses have a trading area extending throughout the whole southern and southwestern sections of the country, the city ranking third as a jobbing center.

Retail Section

The retail section of Baltimore, generally speaking, is confined to the center of the city, and the inhabitants from all sections, as well as from the outlying districts, gather in the shopping district for their purchases.

Baltimore has an east side shopping district known as South Broadway, while West Baltimore Street caters to residents of the western end of the town, although the great volume of business is all done in the central part of the city.

On Charles Street is located high grade specialty shops, and North Howard Street has become a busy thoroughfare.

Residential Features

The residential sections deal with the corner grocer and the corner drug store for their daily needs and come to the shopping district for their more important purchases.

The character of the stores in the shopping district ranges from the high grade stores carrying stocks in many cases equal to the exclusive Fifth Avenue shops in New York all the way down to the bargain stores catering to the woman who does her own housework.

Baltimore is a city of homes, with very few tenements; the houses being mostly two and three-story, built of brick, and with modern conveniences.

Nearly sixty-five per cent of the homes of the working class are owned by the occupants.

There are several beautiful suburban residential sections, among them being Roland Park and Guilford.

Green Spring Valley is a development of fine country homes and estates.

Trading Area

Baltimore is the center of one of the most prosperous and trading centers in the country. Within its trading area are many large towns whose industries give employment to thousands of high-grade and well-paid mechanics whose families do their trading in Baltimore.

To the north this territory extends to Havre de Grace, Pikestown, Texas, Cockeysville, Belair, Reisterstown and Towson.

On the west the area extends to Westminster, Cockeville, Ellicott City, and as far as Frederick and Hagerstown.

To the south and east are Glenburnie, Hanover, Boones, Annapolis. From the Eastern Shore comes a large number of high class buyers.

Trolley connections and express routes and excellent motor roads throughout the section surrounding Baltimore are to a great extent responsible for the growing tendency of those living in the rich agricultural and suburban areas to do their shopping there.

MARYLAND RICH AND PROGRESSIVE

But Maryland—and Baltimore, heart and center of the state—held the imperishable stuff out of which states are made great. In the disturbed colonial days the colony was a refuge for those suffering religious persecution. Maryland became the synonym for toleration in religion. That single policy and purpose furnished, in those times, the basis upon which commonwealths were built.

The second Lord Baltimore thought to plant in the new world outgrown political systems—and in this he failed, for America stood for the eventual realization of democracy. But he did plant here the seed of religious liberty for all sects alike, without discrimination. Historians may deny that this was his purpose, but it is true that this was the result of his great adventure in state making, carried out, it is true, by his deputy—a younger brother.

Baltimore, birthplace of the national anthem, has played a conspicuous role in every crisis of our country's life. But all this is history, familiar to even school children, and need not be recounted.

A Miracle of Reconstruction

In 1904 the business district of Baltimore was wiped out by one of the greatest conflagrations ever suffered by an American city. Fire swept over 140 acres, destroying 86 blocks of buildings in the heart of the city, entailing an estimated loss of $125,000,000.

The disaster shocked the world, and aid and offers of aid poured in from every part of the continent. These were courteously declined, although the spirit of neighborly sympathy shown was deeply impressed upon Baltimore people and touched their hearts. Baltimoreans themselves set about, with a vigor and a faith that were inspirational, to rebuild their city. Before the flames had been finally extinguished in some quarters, crews of workmen were busy elsewhere excavating for foundations for new and modern structures. The civic spirit shown by Baltimoreans in those trying days has rarely been equaled. Quickly, out of the chaos and ruin which marked the track of the fire, emerged a new Baltimore—not a makeshift city, but one of beauty and magnificence, planned so that old defects were not to be perpetuated, designed on model lines of city building.

Some people will tell you that the fire "made Baltimore." But it could not have done that if the spirit and energy and vision of the people of Baltimore had not been adequate to meet the great test.

Civic Spirit Irrepressible

The builders of the new city did not stop with the completion of their program for the burned district. Great civic tasks were undertaken—a wonderful sewerage system was completed.

A "Ready-Made" Survey Is Not Our Idea of HELPFUL SERVICE

When we are asked for information regarding the Baltimore market we do not offer a report already prepared, for no market survey can be sufficiently comprehensive to be of help in solving the sales problems of all lines of business. We give you a special report made after an intelligent investigation of the local market in its relation to your product—a survey that will contribute materially to the success of your sales campaign in Baltimore.

THE SERVICE DEPARTMENT OF THE Baltimore Sun

"Almost invaded the field of impossibles"

The Baltimore Sun,
Baltimore, Md.

Gentlemen—Recalling my very pleasant meeting with you recently, it has occurred to me that an unsolicited statement from me relative to the work done and service rendered by your paper here in connection with our sales campaign might be of interest.

There are a great many things that a newspaper can do to be helpful in the line of service connected with advertising in a sales drive, and there are a great many others which any manufacturer or distributor wishes he might have help in which are beyond the power or province of any news sheet. The fact that has impressed me most about the BALTIMORE SUN is their willingness and desire to be helpful in every way open to them, and I feel that your staff here has almost invaded the field of "impossibles" in some instances.

What I do want to say to you is that I have been thoroughly convinced, almost against my will, of the value of newspaper co-operation, and the attitude of your staff here has been and is so friendly in its readiness to put shoulders to the wheel and push with our salesmen that there is no doubt in my mind today that they can be of tremendous assistance in putting across anything which is salable at all.

I'm mighty glad to have had this experience with them, and if this word from me will assist in carrying on the good work, use it for all it's worth.

Yours very truly,

will be pleased to receive inquiries from any manufacturer or advertising agency who is planning a sales campaign in the Baltimore territory.

The unsolicited letter reproduced here tells what the district manager of a large national advertiser thinks of our "helpful" service.

Baltimore is growing in all directions; growing in factories, in homes, in prosperity. May we help you participate in this prosperity by analyzing the local situation in its relation to the profitable distribution of your product?

The Baltimore Sun publishes regularly more advertising than all other Baltimore papers combined municipal docks built, streets paved and in many instances parked.

Baltimore has always been a city of "owned homes," but in the period of its new life it has become also the city of better homes. Its suburban development has been remarkable. The city is by no means restricted to the small space of Baltimore city proper.

The metropolitan district of Baltimore contains 184,660 acres, of which but 19,-290 acres constitute the area of Baltimore. The census bureau estimates the population of Baltimore, in 1918, at 579,-593, and that of metropolitan Baltimore at 113,663, or a total for the city of 693,253. Local estimates place the total population to-day at about 800,000.

Twenty-one different industries in Baltimore in 1914 reported products valued at more than one million dollars. These ranged from clothing, with products valued at $44,482,136 down the line to men's furnishing goods, with products valued at $1,142,429. There were 14 individual establishments, not included in the 21 industries mentioned, having annual outputs exceeding one million dollars each.

Baltimoreans are properly proud of their wonderful system of public parks, the largest being Druid Hill, covering almost 700 acres. The parks are not supported by direct taxation, but from 9 per cent. of the gross receipts of the street railroads. This affords nearly half a million annually.

Seat of the most famous of American hospitals, the Johns Hopkins, Baltimore lives up to this distinction through the maintenance of every scientific safeguard that can be established against disease. A rigid system of food inspection, extensive welfare work in the prevention of tuberculosis, strict sanitary regulations—these contribute to the high standard of health shown by the city.

Few Labor Troubles

The city has always attracted investors from the fact that it has suffered but little from labor troubles. The field or market for Baltimore products includes the whole of the South, in which its trade is tremendous and constantly growing. The metropolis of the South, it is natural that Baltimore should dominate its wholesale trade.

Manufacturing implements, such as machinery, apparatus, mechanical tools actually employed in manufacture, are not taxed in Baltimore. Power, fuel and light are cheap.

The Baltimore industrial district, 15 miles square, contiguous to and including the city proper, produces annually manufactured products to the value of $365,000,000.

As vessels travel, Baltimore is 174 miles from the Atlantic. It is on the estuary of a tributary of Chesapeake Bay. The harbor channel is 27 feet deep and 600 feet wide. Steamships of 20,000 tons enter Baltimore harbor.

The city is noted as a shipping point for export grain. The railroads have built terminal elevators with facilities for the rapid unloading of cars. These elevators can place 2,000,000 bushels of grain on board vessels in one day.

5,000,000 tons of coal are exported yearly from Baltimore.

Thirteen transatlantic steamship lines maintain regular sailings from Baltimore, while seven lines take care of Baltimore's trade in Pan-American countries.

A City of Homes

The percentage of families living in dwellings without other occupants is about 72.6; while 20 per cent. live in two-family houses and 7.4 per cent. in houses occupied by three or more families More than one-fifth of the private dwellings in the city are owned, unencumbered, by their occupants.

Two hundred building and loan societies have offices in the city, and home ownership is made possible for practically all wage earners.

Baltimore has practically no tenements, as this term is understood in other cities. Of the 107,427 private dwellings in the city, about half are two stories in height and modern in every detail. While essentially a city of attractive homes, of comparatively moderate cost, Baltimore has its quota of stately mansions and an environment of wealth and dignity. Some of the finest homes in America are to be found in the environs of the city.

Baltimore's famous markets, supplying fresh vegetables and all other eatables, are owned and controlled by the city. They have contributed much toward suppressing profiteering in foods.

Hagerstown is the second city in the state as measured by the value of products, reporting $7,412,397 for 1914. The city has a variety of industries, including railroad repair shops, flour mills and the manufacture of furniture, silk goods and organs.

Cumberland had an increase of 56.9 per cent. in the value of products and 45.5 per cent. in average number of wage earners from 1909 to 1914.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF BALTIMORE HARBOR

The city has been an important seaport for a hundred years. Long before the advent of steamships Baltimore's sailing vessels dotted the seas and ships from all parts of the world were to be found in her harbor.

NAVY SOLD TO NATION BY ADVERTISING

Recruiting Above Normal Despite Adverse Conditions — Future Campaign Depends on Press, O'Shaughnessy Says

Entire satisfaction with the results of the $300,000 naval advertising campaign, which will conclude about the end of November, has been expressed by officials of the navy, James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the A. A. A. and of the Advertising Agencies Corporation, which placed the advertising, told EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week.

"In a time when recruiting for the navy should be below normal, far more than the usual number of men have passed through the enlistment offices, and advertising is responsible. When the campaign started in September and in October many young men had just been or were being discharged from service in the national forces—and they would not be the kind of men the navy wants if they did not desire to stay at home for a while before getting into the service again," Mr. O'Shaughnessy said.

"Nevertheless, a steady flow of recruits continues and the naval officials are more than satisfied with the results of the advertising campaign, and they believe the newspapers should receive the credit for its success."

"Will there be future campaigns by the navy?" Mr. O'Shaughnessy was asked.

"Surely there will be," he replied. "The navy is going to continue and the advertising should continue also. There is no more reason for the navy to stop advertising now than there is for any other successful national advertiser.

"The primary object of this campaign through every one of the newspapers on EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S subscription list was not the securing of recruits, but the selling of the navy to every household in the United States. It has been accomplished, and future campaigns will increase its success.

"This is the biggest thing that has ever happened for American newspaper advertising, and I think the newspapers realize it. The best thing they can do is to sell to their Congressmen on a business, not political basis, the idea of advertising for all Government departments, not merely in their own papers but in newspapers generally. If this idea is carried out steadfastly by the publishers they can safely leave the placing of the business to our organization.

"Every publisher knows at least one of our members and knows that we can be relied upon to treat the country's newspapers on a fair and square basis. Politics must be kept out of the Government's advertising relation to newspapers or failure will result, as politics and advertising do not mix in any way."

EDUCATIONAL WORK NEEDED TO BUILD AND HOLD LITTLE ADVERTISEMENTS

THE promotion manager of a newspaper was asked to prepare copy for a folder to be distributed to classified advertisers who had property to rent. This folder was to instruct the advertisers in writing rental copy. Then the housing problem became so acute on account of war conditions that rental ads greatly decreased in volume; therefore, it was decided not to issue the folder. The idea might have been rewritten to fill some normal classification With the thought that some classified managers can use the idea profitably the promotion manager's copy is given herewith:

WHY WE ARE ANXIOUS TO HELP YOU PREPARE EFFECTIVE ADS

Classified advertisements of rooms, homes, flats and apartments to let serve two purposes:

1. They help the owners get paying tenants for their property.

2. They make the paper of service to people who are looking for a place to stay.

Everything which helps make ANY of these advertisements more effective, helps make ALL of them more effective. The more reliable, complete, accurate the columns are, the more people will consult them, and the more rentals will be made through them.

The more truthful, the more complete, the more helpful and the more compact each advertisement is made, the more EFFECTIVE the whole page becomes, and that makes each advertisement more effective.

DON'T BE STINGY

Advertisements of this sort should not be too long. We value our space just as much as you do the money. It's a waste of money. Present the facts BRIEFLY. Remember that people do not RENT from an advertisement, they only come and LOOK. Select your BEST points. Never exaggerate or misrepresent.

DON'T BE STINGY

One day's rent of the average apartment, even of one room will more than pay the difference between an incomplete advertisement, that attracts no attention, and a complete statement, that brings a renter.

YOUR SELLING POINTS

You have something to SELL. You will have to present it and sell it on its MERITS. The first thing to do, in preparing an advertisement, is to go over it in your mind and decide what ARE your strong points. The following classification may help you arrange your ideas. They are the considerations which the BUYER is likely to have in mind:

1. Price.

2. Location, Environment, Car-lines etc.

3. Accommodations.

4. Equipment, Elegance, Comfort, Convenience, Privacy, etc.

It is not intended that an advertiser should frame up his want-ad in this exact order. But classify your offering dreide what one of these is the STRONGEST point, and use that to lead off with.

PRICE

Everybody knows that price governs quality, to a large extent. MOST people have in their minds a pretty definite idea of what they intend to pay. It is far more important that you should get into touch with a few people who are willing to pay what it is worth, for what you have to offer than that you should have arguments over the telephone with many people, attracted by your advertisement, but unwilling to pay your price. If you intend to CUT your prices, cut them in the advertisement. That is where a reduction will count most.

Some offerings are made of a grade that appeal to people to whom the price is no object. In such a case, it is not essential that the price be in the advertisement.

LOCATION, ENVIRONMENT, CAR-LINES, ETC.

A large proportion of the people who are looking for rooms and apartments are NEW in this city. Make it clear just where you are located. Tell what car-line reaches your place. "Walking distance" is a very valuable point—if True—but don't overdo it. If your place actually is inside reasonable walking distance, explain in what direction from town—north, west, east or south. Is it the neighborhood quiet? Say so. Is it a specially nice neighborhood? Say so. FREQUENT car service is a good point. Any one of these takes but a word or two to tell, but they are the material from which an inquirer can form a DECISION, and it is DECIDING which rents property.

EQUIPMENT, CONVENIENCE, PRIVACY, ETC

Does your rate include linen, laundrying, steam heat, light? Say so. Are the rooms "outside"? Say so. Are they sunny, Say so. If you have special appointments—nice kitchen, laundry tray, gas grate, a restaurant handy, open fire, gas grate, maid service, trunk storage, telephone facilities—any or all of these are "talking points." Put them in your advertisement.

ACCOMMODATION

Tell HOW MANY you can accommodate. Some families are of two persons, some of four or more.

There is a difference between a "Flat," and "Apartment" and "Rooms for Housekeeping."

A flat implies a complete unit, for housekeeping, with its separate front and rear entrances.

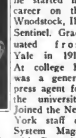
An apartment means a complete unit usually including a bath, and generally a kitchen or kitchenette, but which may have neither an independent front or rear entrance, but opens upon a common hall.

Rooms for housekeeping are just that —rooms that are wholly private, bath room and halls shared with other people in the same house.

CLASSIFY your advertisement RIGHTLY. You gain nothing by getting in the wrong classification, and you may lose the customer who is looking for just what you offer—and who is lonking in the right classification.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

Consider the name, the address, the price as the primary requisites of your advertisement. The classification, if RIGHT, saves you a lot of description. Then consider which are your most IMPORTANT points, the things which people consider when they rent from you. Pick them out, and present them, at the beginning of your advertisement in just as few words as possible.



The reason why no model or form advertisement is given herewith is because it might make the advertisements sound too much alike. Be original. Be truthful.

Some Idea of Instructions That Should Be Given Patrons of Classified Columns Is Contained in Following Article, Third of a Series.

BY C. L. PERKINS

"100 P. C. Increase Rudey"

Meet "Rudey," more formally known as R. E. Seiler, classified advertising manager of the Los Angeles Examiner. At the age of 12 he started his career on the Woodstock, Ill. Sentinel. Graduated from Yale in 1915. At college he was assistant press agent for the university. Joined the New York staff of System Magazine in July, 1916, and in December of that year went to the New York American as want ad manager and later had charge of the real estate and resort advertising departments. Since January 1, 1919, he has been at the head of the classified department of the Los Angeles Examiner, during which time its want ad volume has increased nearly 100 per cent and is now the largest in the history of the paper.

R. E. SEILER

Yes, he is happily married and has two sons, one three years and another three weeks old. Father will have both of them selling classified in a few years.

Good Telephone Service Is Success Necessity

Reducing the number of errors made in receiving classified advertisements over the telephone is one of the problems in practically every newspaper office which takes business over the telephone. The reduction of these errors is more than a matter of saving the revenue lost in credit allowances or the space taken by advertisements run "Dead Head" in correction.

It is a question of service and good service is a great aid in building customers and building good will. Advertisers who cannot speak English plainly, advertisers who do not enunciate distinctly, advertisers who are in a hurry, advertisers who do not know how to use a telephone and careless advertisers of all kinds give their advertisements over the telephone. Added to the failure of the advertisers are those of the telephone company in often providing poor service and nf the advertising operators in becoming careless. Still further cause for trouble is the English alphabet in which certain letters sound alike, especially over the telephone. All of these causes combined create errors and according to the advertiser they are always the fault of the newspaper.

As an aid in reducing these errors the Cleveland Plain Dealer has printed and given to all persons taking advertisements over the telephone a card as illustrated herewith:

KEEP THIS CARD WHERE YOU CAN SEE IT

When in doubt as to the correctness of an initial or word, give the name for the letter or letters in question.

Always spell back a proper name.

This will prevent errors due to the phonetic similarity of different letters over the telephone.

Alike in Anna		Alike in Nellie
B	Boston	O	Oscar
C	Chicago	P	Peter
D	David	Q	Quaker
E	Edward	R	Robert
F	Frank	S	Sugar
G	George	T	Tom
H	Henry	U	Union
I	Ida	V	Victor
J	John	W	William
K	Kate	X	X Ray
L	Lincoln	Y	Yale
M	Mary	Z	Zero

Since these cards, which are printed on white cardboard about 4 by 6 inches, are put into use the errors have been greatly reduced in number. The words on this card are those used by the Western Union in its work of receiving messages over the wire—and have been proved by experience to be easily understood over the telephone.

Classified Advertising a Vital Force

By ROBERT H. WILDMAN
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING MANAGER OF THE BALTIMORE SUN

What definite relationship has classified advertising to the display value of a newspaper? To what may be attributed the indisputable fact that a newspaper with classified supremacy almost invariably occupies a parallel position—in its display field—from a standpoint of both the volume and efficacy of the advertising it carries?

Let's start through the annals of advertising history—to the embryonic stages of newspaperdom—when the thinking public dismissed with a bow the faithful "town crier," and clime in his stead the powerful, virile voice of publicity. Those were the "teething days" of advertising—when copy writers were content to "copy"—when "Bet Days," half-tones and mortises still lay hidden in the realms of the "yet unknown." Then was all advertising classified—though classified advertising exclusively were the wants and offerings of the public made manifest.

But with the advent of the process of engraving we realized that in certain instances an advertisement could be more forcibly presented if accompanied by illustrations and "cuts." Slowly—by gradual steps—"general" advertising, therefore, assumed a new and different aspect — single-column advertisements became of two, three or even eight-column measure; six-point type became sixty-point type, and white space found its best expression in a judicious use of black.

And yet the interesting phase of this remarkable development is the fact that

LITTLE INTEREST SHOWN IN 2ND CLASS RATES

Hardly Fifty Per Cent of Publishers Express Views on Congressman Mansfield's Questionnaire—Legislators Disappointed

Washington, D. C., Oct. 31.—Members of Congress who have been endeavoring to bring about changes in the second class postage rate system to suit the majority of daily and weekly newspapers of the country express keen disappointment about the co-operation they are receiving from publishers.

They are especially bitter at this moment over the fact that hardly 50 per cent of the publishers took the trouble to reply to Congressman J. J. Mansfield's questionnaire recently sent out for an expression of opinion on whether the present zone law should be retained or changed.

Out of the 12,152 daily and weekly newspapers to whom the Mansfield questionnaire was sent, only 5,789 replied. Of this number 3,835 registerd themselves as in favor of the present zone law and 1,954 wanted a change.

Already Congressmen who have interest in second class postage are saying they will let the matter take its own course, because so few publishers are giving them any help whatever. They take the ground that the information brought out in the Mansfield questionnaire is valueless in view of the comparatively few publishers who answered.

Green Guiltless of Libel

Concordia, Kan., Nov. 1.—Ray Green, editor of the Blade-Empire, who was sued for criminal libel by Rev. E. R. Beery, a local Baptist minister, because of an article on the minister's proposed disposition of funds from a lecture, was found "not guilty" by a jury in the district court. The trial of Fred Cook, former editor of the Jamestown Optimist, on a similar charge, will go over to the January term of court, but it is thought that it will never come to trial.

An Army of Giant Industries Marching in New Jersey

With steady tread and firm resolve, great industries are on their way to locate in New Jersey.

Already the home of national giants, this State, wedged between the greatest producing states and the Atlantic Ocean, is attracting more and bigger factories, the number growing so rapidly that real estate men are in a mad scramble for sites to accommodate them.

Who can picture the future of New Jersey, the country's natural eastern gateway to South America and Europe?

A state notable for its fine home communities, a state unsurpassed in its resorts, a state rivalling any in the quality of its agriculture, a state with skilled labor in every trade, a state presenting unsurpassed facilities for enterprises of every character—this state we point out to the advertiser and urge him to use

EDITORIAL

WHAT IS BEST FOR "ENTIRE ADVERTISING INDUSTRY"

IN his interesting interview for EDITOR & PUBLISHER as to the motives and purposes of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, of which organization he has just been elected President, Harry Dwight Smith says:

"Our prime motive has been to consider the welfare of the whole field of advertising. . . . Whatever is right and best for the entire advertising industry will be right and best for each factor within the industry. . . . It can never be a question of what is good for agencies or for newspapers, or for any other group of advertising interests, but rather what is good for the whole course of constructive advertising and for its permanent benefit."

There is not, in fact, any conflict between this view and the purpose and mission of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to educate national advertisers to the full recognition of the daily newspaper as the mightiest of the factors in the advertising field.

If the interests of "the entire advertising industry" are to be served this must be achieved through making advertising yield to the manufacturer and merchant the largest possible results. If the advertiser, either through tradition or unsound advice, spends his money chiefly for forms of advertising which cannot, of themselves, produce adequate results, economic waste occurs, and such an advertiser is inclined to question the economy and value of all advertising.

Until recent years there was a pronounced tendency on the part of national advertisers to rely upon those forms of advertising whose use involved the "least resistance"—that is, the minimum of detail work in the preparation and carrying out of a campaign. There was a widespread delusion that daily newspapers presented a difficult and expensive channel for advertising—and it happened frequently that appropriations which should have, from every consideration of results and profits, been concentrated on newspapers were diverted to magazines, periodicals, billboards, car cards and multiplied forms of direct-by-mail appeal.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER does not question the value of these forms of advertising, when used in connection with dominating campaigns in the newspapers; but it is obvious to all that they cannot be relied upon, independently, to achieve the full results sought. Years ago EDITOR & PUBLISHER saw in the existing trends and tendencies a drifting away from sound advertising policies, and inaugurated a campaign of reason—based upon the primacy of the daily newspaper for all advertising purposes, and large expenditure for advertising which is directed into media of a supplemental kind, ignoring the basic medium, the daily newspaper, is detrimental in the long run even to the forms of advertising thus employed. The common interests of manufacturer and of the sellers of advertising are served only through campaigns in which the dominant medium is utilized to the full extent of its value in relation to the supplementary media.

Newspaper advertising is unlimited in its selling appeal—all other forms of advertising have sharp and serious limitations.

In the motive and policy of the A. A. A. A., as stated by President Smith, the interests of all factors in the advertising field may well be safeguarded —not through favoring any form of advertising irrespective of its potential and actual value, but in educating advertisers to a keen discrimination as to media. In any campaign which benefits advertising as a whole, daily newspapers will naturally dominate. Thus, as EDITOR & PUBLISHER views the matter, its uncompromising advocacy of the daily newspaper as the great primary medium is, in the last analysis, distinctly in the interests of all sellers of advertising, of whatever form or kind.

THE Wisconsin Daily League is on record as favoring a minimum of 15c a week for a daily newspaper. As it is presumed that this applies to six-day issues it is a step toward the three-cent paper which, in the view of such authorities as S. S. Carvalho, must help to solve the newsprint problem.

REVIVING WAR-TIME REGULATIONS

PUBLISHERS are urged, by the Paper Committee of the A. N. P. A., to put into force again the restrictions as to the use of newsprint which they themselves framed and voluntarily adopted during the war.

When the work of the Paper and Pulp Section of the War Industries Board was ended, after the signing of the armistice, it was suggested that the regulations for paper economies which had helped to avert disaster to many newspapers, should be continued in force. If this had been done it is likely that the present situation would not be so serious.

For the most part, these regulations were merely the application of common sense and enlightened business management to the problem of meeting a paper shortage. That shortage is more acute now than at the time this program of economies was formulated.

The Chicago Tribune has fixed an arbitrary size of 32 pages for its daily issues. This will mean the turning away of advertising—a thing unthinkable to the publisher of yesteryear but frequently a necessary step with newspapers today.

The Houston Chronicle is now limited in size, saving about ten per cent. of newsprint. Only sixty per cent. of advertising can carry the Chronicle above standard size, but Editor Foster has decided that he will find it more profitable to limit advertising volume than to be forced into the spot market for extra tonnage.

The market for spot paper is a shambles. Extra tonnage sells for as high as seven and a half cents a pound. Under existing conditions this price is prohibitive, but publishers who have inadequate supplies distrustful of their contracts and play the game of the profiteer. Obviously the remedy is to use less paper. Rates for advertising and subscriptions must be so readjusted that smaller issues will not mean smaller revenues. That remedy may seem a hard one, but just now no alternative is in view.

If publishers, by united action, can take away from the spot market all the allurement it now holds for the speculator the result will be far-reaching. It will hasten the return of a competitive newsprint market.

A conservation policy is always constructive. In saving newsprint a publisher needs not undo any of the patriotic work of years. He need not sacrifice those factors of worth in his newspaper which gives it distinctiveness. His newspaper may still tell the news—fully and clearly. But intensive editing will conserve white paper—while producing a better newspaper.

THE coal strike—an act of war against the people of the United States—places upon our newspapers the immediate duty of keeping clear in the thought of their readers the essential facts of this unprecedented situation, that there may be an overwhelming public opinion in support of the President in any measures he may take in the defense of the nation.

LOOKING TO THE FAR EAST

THAT so many of our newspapermen should at this time, in spite of the "nagging" of daily problems close at hand, find time and inclination to focus their attention upon the great problem of closer press relations with Japan and China is proof of the potency of that broader vision which has come to them as an aftermath of the great war.

The Inland Daily publishers and the Wisconsin Daily League, at their recent meetings, urged the need for more favorable cable and radio rates on news matter transmitted to and from our far eastern neighbor nations. Through an ample interchange of news, unguarded by intervening censors, they see the best possible way in which to prevent both political and economic wars.

Keen observers, familiar through first-hand knowledge with present conditions in the Orient—such as Emil M. Scholz, whose views after his recent trip have been published in these columns—agree that the future expansion of American trade and commerce in that quarter of the world depends largely upon the establishment of a better mutual understanding between the Chinese and Japanese and ourselves. This can be achieved only through a fuller exchange of news.

The Japanese newspapers do print American news—but it is confined chiefly to our race riots, strikes and industrial unrest. In China very little American news of any kind finds publication. This situation, out of which arise many puzzling and dangerous disputes, may be remedied only by the co-operation of the Government with the American news services and newspapers in so adjusting tolls that an ample flow of news to and from the Orient may be assured.

Thus what may seem to be a problem for the newspapers to solve is, in reality, a Government problem—and of far-reaching import.

"EDITORIAL ASTIGMATISM"

HON. W. B. COLVER, of the Federal Trade Commission, says that the Chicago packers have spent so much money in advertising as to cause editorial astigmatism.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER believes so strongly in the integrity and the independence of American editors, as a body, that it cannot admit the justice of such a charge, even when made by one of our most courageous public men.

News affecting the interests of the packing industry, whether favorable or otherwise to that industry, has been printed quite as freely in our newspapers since the packers were under investigation by the Federal Trade Commission as before.

Mr. Colver's admirable zeal in the public service, his passion for the principle of fair play as between the strong and the weak and his uncompromising opposition to autocratic methods on the part of the rulers in business, have made for him a warm place in the affections and esteem of a majority of Americans. EDITOR & PUBLISHER defers to nobody in its admiration for the man and the official, realizing the strength of the sinister forces sometimes arrayed against him and his fellow commissioners. But we contend that this charge against editorial integrity cannot be sustained.

To assume that public service corporations may use advertising to bribe away the independence of the press would be to surrender all hope and faith in that institution which is the mainstay of democratic government. It would mean that "malefactors of great wealth" could buy immunity from the scourge of public opinion. If the time ever comes when our newspapers become so venal that this is possible it will mean goodbye to free institutions. But that time will not come.

HERBERT HOOVER'S splendid tribute to the "squareness and dignity" of the American correspondents abroad, an exclusive feature of a recent issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, should make every newspaperman a little more proud of the craft to which he belongs.

WALSH KNOWS BUYING AND SELLING SPACE

TO meet a real live wire, just call on J. E. Walsh, helter known in the advertising world as "Jack Walsh." It's a safe venture to say that there is not a busier man in New York, for he holds the position of space buyer for Frank Seaman, Inc., of New York

J. E. Walsh

This agency is one of the largest in the country and only a man of brains, personality and "pep" could hold the job Walsh has. Mr. Walsh first opened his eyes to the light of day in New York, and so well did he like it that he has not yet been tempted to try other fields.

Just ten years ago, to be exact, he began his advertising career with the H. E. Lesan Company, where he remained for six years as space buyer. He did business on an immense scale, handling the space for the New York Central Railroad, National Cash Register Company, Knox Gelatine and other firms known from coast to coast.

Then Walsh went to Verree & Conklin as a special newspaper representative, covering agents and advertisers in the East.

"This was the most valuable experience I could have possibly had," said Mr. Walsh, "for it gave me the viewpoint of the man buying space. When I came back into the space buying game myself, I was far wiser than before." Mr. Walsh praised in warmest terms the service departments of the big newspapers for their splendid co-operation.

Mr. Walsh began his connection with the Seaman Agency in June, 1918.

A. Warren East, recent addition to the advertising staff of the Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Tribune, has bought a home in Cheyenne.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

INTERNATIONAL PAPER COMPANY STATES SALES POLICY FOR 1920

Price of $4.50 f. o. b. Mill Set for First Quarter—Contracts Must Be Adjusted Thereafter—November 15 Is Deadline.

THE following letter has been sent out by the International Paper Company to its customers concerning the sales policy for 1920 newsprint:

"We make the following offers to supply you with our standard roll newsprint paper after January 1st, 1920:

Contracts for Quarter Year Only

"1st. To contract to supply such paper at a fixed rate of tonnage per month in accordance with the agreement with the Attorney General dated November 26th, 1917, from January 1st, 1920, until the expiration of said agreement, after which a new contract may be negotiated if we then have tonnage available; or in case you prefer to make a contract for a fixed price for a definite period we offer in lieu of the foregoing:

"2nd. To contract for the period from January 1st, 1920, to December 31st, 1920, for a fixed tonnage for the year, the price for the first quarter to be $4.50 per cwt., f.o.b. mill, and the price for each quarter thereafter to be fixed by mutual agreement thirty days in advance.

Must Waive All Claims

"This offer No. 2, however, is open only to those of our present customers who may voluntarily agree to waive all claims for readjustment of price arising from any cause whatever, except quality, at any time heretofore or hereafter prior to January 1st, 1920, in return for which waiver the International Paper Company will also waive any claims to any increase in price which may be awarded hereafter in any proceedings under the agreement with the Attorney General, the intention being in the interest of both parties to start with a clean slate upon a definite basis from January 1st, 1920.

"If a contract is made under either of the above offers, any tonnage to which the purchaser may be entitled under the existing contract of 1919 which remains unshipped on January 1st, 1920, will be considered part of the tonnage to be furnished during 1920, but the price for tonnage equivalent to such unshipped tonnage will be the price which the purchaser is entitled to under the 1919 contract.

"If the 1919 contract price is subject to readjustment under the agreement of November 26th, 1917, the price for the tonnage unshipped during 1919 which is shipped during 1920 shall be subject to readjustment under said agreement of November 26th, 1917, provided, however, that in case offer No. 2 shall be accepted, any readjustment of such price shall be waived by both parties.

Must Agree by November 15

"The acceptance of one or the other of the above propositions must be received before November 15th, 1919, and contract must be executed by the purchaser before December 1st, 1919.

"We think it proper to inform our customers that during 1919 we have furnished many thousands of tons of newsprint paper under the agreement with the Attorney General at no profit, and that the average profit on newsprint paper for the year will fall far below the amount determined by the Judges of the United States Circuit Court to be a reasonable profit.

"In order to meet to the best of our ability the exeessive demands of 1920, and avoid dropping a large number of customers or making a drastic horizontal eut in the tonnage to be furnished, it will be neeessary for us to run, at an inereased eost, a number of machines on newspaper which were intended to be run on other grades.

"We ask for the co-operation of our customers in reducing their consumption of paper to a minimum between now and the end of this year, and we advise extreme conservation in the use of paper next year, especially by the larger newspapers, to the end that no newspaper may be foreed to suspend publieation from lack of paper. Tbis obligation rests on fellow publishers and not on the paper manufacturers.

"Yours very truly,
"International Paper Co.,
"by
"CHESTER W. LYMAN,
"Viee-President."

Dealer Copy Must Be So Marked in Louisville

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 1.—Effective action against Louisville "gyp" dealers in various lines, who masquerade as private householders when they use classified advertisements in newspapers, has resulted from a recent conference of the advertising managers of the daily newspapers.

At the suggestion of the better business bureau of Louisville, the newspapers agreed that in the future that every such dealer would be required to identify himself as a dealer.

Too Good to Be True

BALTIMORE, Nov. 1.—Advertisements in local newspapers which tend to picture banks and other investment houses as "profiteers" by stating that a local department store would pay $51 in cash for each $50 Liberty bond, were recently stopped by the better business bureau of that city.

Should Have Been 49 Per Cent

Through a typographical error a per cent sign was omitted in the Detroit News advertisement published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of October 16. The text should have read: "The Detroit News has a Sunday circulation in Detroit 49% greater than its only Sunday competitor."

Canadian Paper Body Moves

MONTREAL, Nov. 4.—The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association has moved its offices to the Drummond Building, corner of Peel and Catherine streets.

ALBERT PRAISES N. Y. PAPERS

King Regrets He Hasn't Had Journalistic Training

King Albert of Belgium, on leaving the city last week, paid high tribute to New York's newspapers and American newspaper methods. He said:

"I cannot speak too highly of your newspapers. They are so big and have so much news in them, and I must say they are well got up. I am a great newspaper reader, and have read the progressive and enterprising papers published here with a great deal of interest."

In response to questions about the report that the King himself had served as a newspaper reporter on his first visit to this country, before he became King, Albert said:

"I am sorry to say I never was a newspaper man, but I often regret I was not able to get some journalistic training. I know it would have helped me in later life. It is unquestionably one of the best ways of getting a broad vision, which is bound to help a person in any endeavor."

Crowell Moves Up Again

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Nov. 1.—A. H. Crowell, who two months ago became assistant managing editor of the Evening Call, has been made managing editor following the death of the editor, Andrew J. McConnell. Mr. Crowell is a former city editor of the Brockton (Mass.) Times and at one time was associate editor of the Sanford (Me.) Tribune.

Ad Men Hosts to Des Moines Ladies

DES MOINES, IA., Nov. 3.—The Advertising Club held its annual ladies' night banquet last week. Reports of the New Orleans convention and the recent Iowa State Advertising Club convention were given and the prizes in the Ad Club golf tournament were distributed.

Topeka Mailers Get $6 Raise

TOPEKA, KAN., Oct. 31.—The Topeka Mailers' Union has signed a contract with the State Journal, the Capital, and other publications for an advance averaging $6 a week. The contract can be re-opened by either party at the end of three, six or nine months.

BUREAU CHIEFS SHIFT IN WASHINGTON POST

Small Joins Washington Post and Wile Succeeds Him—L. T. Martin Takes Place of Milford.

(By Telegraph)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 5—Changes in two important news bureaus became effective this week. Robert T. Small resigned as chief of the Philadelphia Public Ledger bureau and Morton M. Milford terminated his connection with the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, which he had represented here for several years.

Mr. Small has joined the staff of the Washington Post. He is doing special writing and is understood to have agreed to assume an executive position as assistant to the editor of that paper.

Mr. Milford leaves the Bingham papers in order to become editor and publisher of the Fort Myer (Fla.) Press, which he acquired some weeks ago. Mr. Milford has been in Washington for a number of years, his initial connection here having been with the Indianapolis News.

Frederick William Wile, who has been in this country for a brief visit, has returned to London to submit his resignation to Lord Northcliffe, with whom he has been connected for about ten years, in London and in Berlin. He is expected to become chief of the Public Ledger bureau.

Lorenzo W. Martin, who was assistant to Mr. Milford, has been made chief of the Courier-Journal bureau. He is a young Kentuckian. He came to Washington about three years ago.

Mr Wile, born in La Porte, Ind., and graduated from Notre Dame University, first became connected with the Chicago Record and was sent to Europe at the outbreak of the Boer war as its London correspondent of the Record and the Daily News. He reported the death and funeral of Queen Victoria, the coronation of King Edward VII, was sent to Sweden and Norway in 1904 to investigate the famine, revisited the same countries in the following year to report the secession crisis and obtained from King Oscar II, the first interview for publication ever given by a European monarch to an American newspaperman.

From 1906 until the beginning of the war Mr. Wile was the chief correspondent in Germany of the London Daily Mail and affiliated newspapers, and Berlin correspondent of the New York and the Chicago Tribune.

At the outbreak of the world war he was the first man in Berlin to be taken into custody by the police on the charge of being a British spy. He was dragged out of the lobby of the Hotel Adlon, beaten by a mob, thrown into a taxicab and hurried off to police headquarters. He remained in custody for two hours, when he was released upon the request of Ambassador Gerard.

During the war Mr. Wile made speeches throughout England on behalf of the various British war loans, lectured throughout the kingdom on German war conditions and on trade schemes after the war. He is the author of "Men Around the Kaiser."

New Jersey Firm Cleared of Disloyalty Charge

Full page advertising was used in New York newspapers this week by the Forstmann & Huffmann Company Passaic, N. J., to quote a letter from former Attorney-General Lewis exonerating the firm from all charges of disloyalty during the war and stating that his previous actions against the firm had been based upon an insufficient knowledge of the facts.

Mr. Lewis's letter may have an important bearing upon libel suits which the Forstmann & Huffman Company has filed against the New York Tribune Frank A. Munsey, the Curtis Publishing Company, Attorney-General A. Mitchell Palmer and Alien Property Custodian Francis P. Garvan, asking damages aggregating $850,000.

Colorado Editor Faces Indefinite Stay in Jail

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., Nov. 3.—E. H. Joslyn, editor of the Labor News, a weekly paper published here, has been confined in the county jail for contempt of court, following the decision of the Colorado Supreme court upon his refusal to reveal the authorship of articles in his paper criticising the personnel of a recent grand jury.

According to local authorities, the editor cannot be permitted to give bond and will remain in jail indefinitely. He has stated that he did not write the articles but will remain in jail all his life rather than reveal the identity of the author.

Delegates to Prison Congress

HARTFORD, CONN., Nov. 4—Charles Hopkins Clark, publisher of the Courant, W. O. Burr, publisher of the Times and Norris D. Osborn, publisher of the New Haven Journal-Courier, are among those appointed by Governor Holcomb to be delegates to the American Prison Congress in New York this week. Messrs Burr and Osborn are directors of the Connecticut State Prison and Mr. Clark is a director of the State Reformatory at Cheshire.

Editor Cleared of Fraud Charge

PONCA CITY, OKLA., Nov. 4—Nels Darling, former editor of the Blackwell (Okla.) Tribune, was completely exonerated of all charges connecting him with the Eagle Aircraft Corporation, Oklahoma City, in the suit against the incorporators of the corporation, of whom Mr. Darling was one. The incorporators had been charged with conspiracy to defraud, but the case against Mr. Darling was dismissed without prejudice.

Paper Retracts Charges

HOUSTON, TEX., Nov. 4.—The Chronicle has retracted the charges it made against ex-Governor Ferguson during the gubernatorial campaign of 1918 and the suit for libel instituted by Mr. Ferguson against the Chronicle have been withdrawn. The Chronicle published its retraction prominently in the issue of October 15.

Cheppelow Agency Expanding

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Nov. 3.—The Chappelow Advertising Agency, of St. Louis, has opened an office here, in the Volunteer Building, with Stephen Doughton in charge. All territory south of Nashville will be handled from this city. Mr. Doughton was formerly connected with the Chattanooga office of Nelson Chesman & Co.

"Dere Mable" Creator Marries

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Edward Streeter, author of the "Dere Mable" stories, which he wrote while an officer in the 27th Division, and Miss Charotte Lockwood Warren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warren, were married on October 29.

Iowa

The school record of a territory is bound to exhibit its tendencies in using its money and the depth of its purse!

Take Iowa comparatively!

Iowa has over 500,000 pupils, nearly 30,000 teachers and spends over $30,000,000 per year on education!

What do you say to THAT in a state of about 2,300,000 inhabitants?

Moral:

Compute the purchasing power for your goods of these families who support these institutions, and know that to reach them by daily newspaper advertising will cost you little more for a whole years' advertising than the price of one letter to each family head.

Advertising success comes from knowing the territory and acting accordingly.

EMPLOYES PURCHASE COLUMBIA RECORD

R. Charlton Wright, Publisher, Heads Company — Directors Will Be Chosen from Stockholders on Staff

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 1.—R. Charlton Wright has purchased the entire holdings of Edwin W. Robertson, president and controlling stockholder of the Columbia (S. C.) Record. He is now editor and publisher of the Record and will become president upon the election of new directors this month. Associated with him are William O. Boger, business manager; Lawrence F. Davis, advertising manager; Walter E. Duncan, associate editor, and J. Harvey Shull, cashier.

Mr. Wright is a native of Savannah, and did his first newspaper work for Georgia dailies and weeklies. He first became connected with the Record as an editorial writer and in November,

R. CHARLTON WRIGHT

1911, was elected treasurer of the Record Publishing Company, managing, publishing and editing the Record in 1912. When the paper was re-organized in 1913, he became secretary-treasurer and resumed its management in 1916. Upon the purchase of a large block of stock in 1917, he became publisher and has since served in that capacity.

The New Owners

Mr. Boger, a native of Nashville, entered newspaper work with the Asheville (N. C.) Citizen and, after eleven years' service, was advertising manager when he became business manager of the Columbia Record in January of this year.

Mr. Davis has done all his newspaper work on the Record, which he joined in 1907. He was in the real estate business from 1912 to 1918, when he returned to the advertising department of his old paper, becoming advertising manager shortly afterward.

Mr. Duncan has been connected with the editorial staffs of the Atlanta News, Savannah Morning News, Baltimore American, Washington Times, Augusta Chronicle and other papers. He is editor and owner of the Standard at Aiken, where he has resided for nine years. Following a year's service as secretary to Governor Manning, he became associate editor of the Record in February, 1919.

Mr. Shull is another product of the Record organization, starting as a circulation collector in 1911. He has been in the business department ever since, becoming cashier in 1917.

Other officers and the entire board of directors will be selected from the employes of the Record, who own stock in the company, 94 per cent of which is held by Messrs. Wright, Boger, Davis, Duncan and Shull.

The Record was started as a six-day afternoon paper in 1891, under the name of the Daily Record. In 1913, it was re-organized as the Columbia Record and a Sunday edition was added. Its equipment has been improved during the past two years and its composing room battery now consists of six linotypes, with another on the way from the factory.

The Record has the news service of the Associated Press daily and of the United Press on Sunday. It is a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, American Newspaper Publishers Association and Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

McNUTT WITH UNITED NEWS

Collier's Star Writer Joins United Press Morning Service Staff

William Slavens McNutt, one of Collier's famous war correspondents and general reporters, has joined the staff of the United News Service as a feature writer and is at present covering coal strike developments at Washington.

Mr. McNutt's connection with the United will not interfere with his work for Collier's, to which publication he will continue to be a regular contributor.

Mr. McNutt has been well known to readers of fiction since 1909. His work for Collier's Weekly, first a series of stories on the National Guardsmen, starting at Yaphank, and later stories from the Western Front, attracted wide attention. Although a thorough newspaperman, he has devoted the last five years to magazine feature writing and fiction and his last work for a daily was done on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Guests of Pittsburgh Writers

PITTSBURG, Nov. 3.—Thomas W. Morris, manager of the Associated Press in Pittsburgh, Andrew S. McSwigan, former K. of C. assistant overseas director, and Robert W. Egan K. of C. director of publicity, were guests of honor at a dinner the other evening in the Pittsburg Press Club, attended by nearly 100 active and former newspapermen of Pittsburg. Mr. Morris was stationed in London with the Associated Press, and was detailed to accompany the King and Queen of Belgium on their trip to the United States.

They Let No Idea Escape

A new plans committee has been formed by the advertising department of the New York Tribune to discuss advertising ideas and plans which may originate with any member of the department. It consists of Edward Aertee, chairman; Godfrey Hammond and Archibald Seixas, with Mrs. Ogden M Reid and F. Porter Caruthers ex-officio members. Anyone suggesting a plan becomes a member of the committee while his plan is under discussion.

Prevents Theft of Newspapers

COFFEYVILLE, KAN., Nov. 2.—As a protection to its regular subscribers, the Morning News carries the following "box" on the front page of the papers for the route carriers: "This paper is intended for a regular subscriber and no one is authorized to sell it except the subscriber. If offered for sale by any other than the subscriber it is stolen property."

New Orleans Item Publishes Snappy Retail Paper

Devoted to Helping Wholesalers, Merchants and Buyers in City's Territory

"Merchandising & Advertising"—the newspaper issued by the New Orleans Item for retail New Orleans, has a circulation of more than 6,000 among the merchants and buyers whose influence are controlling in the New Orleans territory. The mailing list includes every grocer, druggist, dry goods man, tobacconist and cigar store man. It goes to wholesale dry goods dealers, wholesale druggists, grocer jobbers and to all of their buyers and salesmen, being in evidence everywhere at the recent convention of the A. A. C. W.

The October number of this mighty interesting little publication carries the award of the judges in the Item's advertising contest. The judges were William C. D'Arcy of the D'Arcy Agency, St. Louis; Rowe Stewart, advertising manager of the Philadelphia Record, and Stewart O. Landry of the Chambers Advertising Agency.

The committee hade to wade through 15,000 inches of paid display advertising. The first prize of $250 in cash was won by the Hotel Grunewald for a page advertisement in the Item of September 21st, written by Miss Vera Morel, of the service department of the Item.

The first prize for the best advertisement in the foreign field, prize $250 in cash, was awarded to James O. Adams, vice-president of the Corman Company, for writing the advertisement of Mennen's Shaving Cream, signed by "Jim Henry, Mennen's Salesman."

Honorable mention for local advertisements was awarded Gus Mayer; Merchants' Coffee Company; National Shirt Shops; Pokorny's; Beekman's; Duggan, Inc.; Gulf Manufacturing Company; Hartwell's; Werlein's, and the Canal-Commercial Bank.

Honorable mention was awarded to foreign advertisers as follows: American Sugar Refining Company; Voss Bros.; Atlanta Georgian; Oklahoma City Ad Club; "Mazola"; Chicago Tribune, and Morris & Co.

A lock-out affecting 11,000 printers has been declared in Christiania. It does not include newspaper offices.

Pershing Grateful for Scrap Book

James Schermerhorn, publisher of the Detroit Times, has received a letter from General John J. Pershing thanking him for the "great scrap book" of the general's achievements and activities during the war, prepared by Mr. Schermerhorn from clippings from newspapers all over the country. Mr. Schermerhorn has expressed his gratitude for the co-operation extended, in a letter to every publisher who contributed to the scrap book.

Novel Features in Des Moines

DES MOINES, IA., Nov. 3.—The Tribune is inviting its readers to write short letters telling about their "pet peeve"—anything of local interest that does not exactly suit the reader. Another feature just introduced by the Tribune is a daily caricature made up of the initials of some prominent person's name. In short article accompanying the drawing the business of the person is told and readers are asked to identify him.

Iowa Weeklies Discuss Costs

OTTUMWA, IA., Nov. 1.—Publishers of newspapers in the seven counties adjoining Wapello County, of which Ottumwa is the county seat, met in Ottumwa at the call of Senator O. Cassell, secretary of the Iowa Newspaper Association, to discuss job work, local advertising and legal printing. The meeting, attended by twenty-five publishers, most of weekly newspapers

Ends Forty-seven Years' Service

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Nov. 1.—George A. Haggett, for the past eleven years foreman of the Woonsocket Call composing room, was presented with a leather traveling bag by the mechanical and business departments of the paper upon his retirement last week. He has been in the newspaper business for 47 years.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A WEEK

One of The Times' advertising representatives walked into the office last evening wearing a smile that provoked inquiry.

"What's it all about?" someone asked him.

"Only this," he said. "Contracts with five of my customers expired this week. And they all renewed, with four at increased space. And, say, but it's a cinch now. You don't have to sell them. They know the goods, because they've tried them. There's no doubt about it—The Times has arrived."

Very Prosperous

George K. Holmes of the I. N. S. is the only New York news service worker who wore a clean starched collar each day during the laundry workers' strike.

Good Old Emporia

Elbert Severance, former Kansas newspaper man, now in New York, has written to his father, John Severance, that wants him to send some sugar to New York, by mail. Elbert also says he has his laundry done in Emporia, Kansas, which is quicker when New York is in the throes of strikes.—Concordia, (Kan.) News Note.

A Bar Historian

LAWRENCE, KAN., Nov. 5.—One of the "star" attractions at the recent stag convention of the Kansas W. C. T. U. here, was the mirror of the bar last ever used in Lawrence, the present property of Mr. C. Simons, owner and editor of the Journal World. Mr. Simons recently purchased the building at which the first bar in town had been located, and the mirror was still in the room. Mrs. Simons told the members of the W. C. T. U. the history of the bar.

MANHATTAN, KAN., Nov. 8.—As a means of identification, the students of the journalism school of the Kansas State Agricultural College here, have adopted the wearing of a moustache. None but journalism students can wear them, they have decided. Men and women alike wear them on the campus.

The Ad Man's Inspiration

Not from my form proceeds the brief bunch
Wherefrom I build the dope that drags the bunch.
Not from the flushings of my brilliant mind
Come forth the fetching pleas you daily find
In all the publications in "our space"
No high-brow sets my psychologic pace.
From sounder sources emanates my lore
From common, buying folk who fill our store.

They are the ones who do not theorize.
They merely notice what I advertise.
Then come and look. Once let that throng be fooled,
And no whole page with blackest border ruled
Will hold their eyes a moment when they see
The name of those who bite ignoble me.
No words of mine will make them crowd our door
When once they'd been mistreated in our store.

Therefore I linger 'round and listen well
To their remarks on goods we have to sell
And on our prices. From the things they say
I learn what ought to fill "our space" next day.
Theirs is the language that I must employ,
Terse, full of meaning's gold, without alloy.
Each day some things I'd never known before
I learn from common folk who sell store.

Objection Sustained

The Portland (Me.) Daily Press in its Pats and Knocks column, under the caption "We Object," says:

"The Old Lit Digest is coming out this week printed from photographic plates instead of typewritten copy. But we never notice here and now that we shall insist that the Colyume typed by the typesetter. He may err and err, but the new plan deprives us of the typographical error alibi when it's us."

"Pop" Price Joins

Bide Dudley, who has accepted the appointment" of press agent for Frank Price, of the New York Telegraph, during the latter's political activities, wrote the following contribution with painstaking care and succeeded in having it printed in his own column in the New York Evening World:

Frank J. Price, who writes heavy financial reviews and light editorial paragraphs for the Morning Telegraph, informs us we are joining the Rotterdam, N. J., Democratic Club. I have a recollection that Pop, as he is known, cast his first vote for James Buchanan, but a search of the records would likely show it was both Jeffersons. We are informed that Rotterford is a Republican stronghold, but Pop is a majority wherever he happens to be. His only fault is that he invariably raises on two pairs.

In the list of guests at the wedding of Miss Virginia Hylan, daughter of Mayor Hylan, and John F. Sinnott, the New York Evening Journal very considerately placed General Coleman Du Pont between Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst and Gov. and Mrs. Alfred E. Smith.

A German Laugh Maker

Special Cable to the New York Times

BERLIN, Oct. 28.—Sometime ago the "Ost Publishing Company, Berlin," sent out a hundred thousand bills soliciting subscribers for a new funny paper "Holunzi" or "Court Jester" which was to make the Republican Government ridiculous. As many as 20,000 reactionary persons sent in the yearly subscription fee of nine marks in advance but waited vainly for the first number. Yesterday the "Ost" Publishing Company was raided by the police. Ross Saloomon was found to be the proprietor of the printing establishment. He had paid himself a salary of 20,000 marks as manager, her husband 12,000 marks as editor and similar yearly salaries to other relatives. There were but a few hundred marks of the collected money left. Among the subscribers fooled by "Holunzi" was the notorious Reventlow, who caused the Saloomons' arrest.

A Certain Eight Counties

The Idaho Falls (Idaho) Daily Post has issued a peace and prosperity number that will be read with interest by every lover of the out-door West that it reaches. It is just a little better in every way than is usually the case with special editions. It is printed magazine size, contains 96 pages well bound inside, an art color cover and sold for 50 cents the copy. In its pages are told, in an instructive manner, the story of the eight counties that comprise the Snake River Valley District. Home interest is probably centered in the pages given to pictures and sketches of the lives of the sons of the eight counties who made the great sacrifice in the World War.

Tip for Circulation Managers

L'Avenir, the well known Paris Journal, which recently changed its name by a vote of its readers from Oui (becoming The Future instead of Yes), has found a novel way to attract subscribers. It offers to sell to every old subscriber and every new one who sends 10 grams of sugar for eleven francs, that is eleven pounds of this rare substance for a little over what represented two dollars, at pre-war exchange. L'Avenir points out that it really gives this sugar to subscribers as anyone buying its issue every day spends 36.50 francs, which at a subscription amounts to 25 francs which with 11.5 francs for the sugar makes 36 francs a year.

ELLIS HEADS COMPANY

Succeeds E. E. Harris as President of Lackawanna Journal

LACKAWANNA, N. Y., Oct. 27.—Charles W. Ellis, vice-president of the Ellis-Joslyn Publishing Company, Inc., publisher of the Journal, has been elected president of the company to fill the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of Elmer E. Harris.

With the exception of the interest held by John R. Joslyn, formerly managing editor of the Buffalo Evening News, Mr. Ellis now owns the entire stock of the publishing company. Mr. Ellis will continue as editor of the Journal.

Opies Buy Out Opposition

STANTON, VA., Nov. 4.—After fifteen years' competition, the Morning Leader and the Evening Leader have purchased the Daily News, the only opposition paper. Hereafter the papers will be published as the Evening Leader and the Morning News. The chief owners are Major H. L. Opie and Captain E. W. Opie, both of whom served through the war. Captain Opie is still in France.

Neals Sell Interests

NOBLESVILLE, IND., Nov. 5.—Edward E. Neal and Charles S. Neal, who held the controlling stock in the Noblesville Daily Ledger, Lebanon Daily Reporter and Frankfort Crescent-News, have disposed of their interest in the Frankport paper to George H. Healey and Louis Hamilton, both of Rensselaer, who are now in charge. Mr. Healey is editor of the paper.

Gompers Upholds "Newsies"

SEATTLE, Nov. 1.—The Seattle Newsboys' union has been sustained in its recent controversy with the Central Labor Council, growing out of the refusal of the Daily Union Record to sign a contract similar to that accepted by the other Seattle newspapers, by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. The council applied for revocation of the newsboys' charter on the ground that the organization was dominated by those in control of the "vicious corner ownership system." The newsboys contended that they were first assailed because they "refused to become Bolsheviks and stand with the reds in the council, deciding to throw their lot with Americanism."

CONGRESS AID SOUGHT IN PAPER PROBLEM

print and publishing authority predicted that the coming new year will be the most serious in the history of American newspaper publishing.

"Nobody knows yet what the 1920 news print price will be," he pointed out, "but it is bound to be a big increase over this year. Many publishers will find themselves unable to make contracts at any price, which will drive them into the 'spot' market and will result in the survival of only the wealthiest."

At the same time highest labor wages will become effective and every other detail of overhead cost will increase. Hard as things are now, the real 'pinch' has not arrived. Wait until after January 1, 1920, for the real effects.

Not Paying Its Own Way

"The real crux of the whole situation is that newspaper advertising space is not being sold for the cost of manufacture. There is no earthly reason why newspapers should be using up news print paper that is well nigh unpurchasable to carry a volume of advertising that is not paying its way.

"The only remedy lies in increasing advertising rates and circulation prices to a point which will bring a respectable profit from the completed product. Cutting down news and reading matter is not the solution. The space taken up by advertising must be reduced as well."

Reports received from Canada this week are to the effect that the Canadian price of news print paper in the United States in 1920 probably will range from $85 to $90 a ton; the same selling in Canada for about $73.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is informed that there is Scandinavian news print paper on its way to this country that will sell at 7 cents a pound, laid down in New York.

With the shortage of news print coming to a head, a subscriber in 50 of the paper cities is reported from many parts of the country.

While the American Newspaper Publishers' Association at the Editor & Publisher went to press had not issued its bulletin on paper conservation, it was stated that such a bulletin is now being prepared, as reported exclusively in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of October 30.

New York Papers Holding Down

Statistics prepared by the News Print Service Bureau show that the New York newspapers for the week ending October 31 printed the following aggregate number of pages daily, Sunday excluded:

American, 19; Herald, 20; Sun, 21; Times, 30; Tribune, 21; World, 27; Globe, 22; Journal, 24, and Post, 21.

New York publishers have declared themselves for sane methods in use of news print. Walter G. Bryan, publisher of the American, said:

"Both the American and the Evening Journal are leaving out many columns of advertising daily. The Sunday American of November 2 left out 44 columns, the Evening Journal of October 31 left out 40 and the Evening Journal of November 3 left out 16 columns. We are compelled to omit advertising in order to print the number of copies required by our circulation with the print paper available. We are doing all we can to conserve white paper and if it comes to a question of sacrificing advertising or circulation, we will sacrifice the advertising."

Times Sets Minimum

E. S. Friendly, assistant business manager of the Times, stated that the Times had not gone over 32 pages during the past week and that it would endeavor to stay within that limit on week-days during the coming week. On Saturdays, a limit of 24 pages will be maintained.

Victor H. Polachek, publisher of the Sun and Evening Sun, said: "We are only doing what any sane man would do to conserve our white paper. The Evening Sun is limited to 32 pages and the Morning Sun to 24 daily."

In Chicago, the Tribune issued the following statement on November 1:

"By reason of the severe shortage of news print throughout the country and the consequent obligation of newspapers everywhere to conserve paper, commencing Monday, November 3, the Chicago Tribune will restrict the average size of its daily issues to 32 pages until the need for conservation is past.

"The 32-page average will be maintained each week, and should any week-day issue exceed 32 pages, other issues in the same week will be correspondingly reduced in size to secure the average.

"The enormous volume of advertising published in the Daily Tribune makes this step a hardship upon the Tribune and its advertisers alike. The Tribune hopes, however, that with the co-operation of its advertisers the reduced amount of their advertising space the present emergency may be soon passed and a return to normal conditions assured."

Weeks ago the newspapers of St. Louis began to conserve news print, realizing the shortage in the supply, and this policy is being followed consistently. Actual measurements of the space in the five daily newspapers of St. Louis show to what extent the conservation is being practiced. On October 31, for instance: The Post-Dispatch printed 296 columns, 70 per cent. advertising; Globe-Democrat, 160 columns, 59 per cent. advertising; Republic, 126 columns, 37 per cent. advertising; Star, 192 columns, 66 per cent. advertising; Times, 126 columns, 47 per cent. advertising. In order to carry out this conservation, the newspapers are rejecting advertising, one paper refusing 37 columns on a recent week-day.

Texas on War Basis

C. B. Gillespie, business manager of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, said:

"We are rejecting all advertising beyond certain limits and holding all week-day issues down to 18 pages, except Friday, when we carry 22 Sundays, we stay within 50 pages."

T. R. Colgan of the Houston Press said:

"We are conserving in every way possible, have cut out all extras and will

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX DEAD

Poetess and Newspaper Writer for Forty-nine Years

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 30.—Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, author and poetess, died at her home in Branford to-day. Mrs. Wilcox had been ill for several months, following a nervous collapse while engaged in war relief work in England.

She was born in 1855 a few miles from Madison, Wis. The Frank Leslie Publishing House was the first buyer, giving her $6 for the poem "Life," when she was 15 years old. Before her 'teens were passed she had published "Drops of Water," doing with the total abstinence, which brought in $50.

Among the magazines to which she frequently contributed were the Atlantic Monthly, Harper's publications, Demorest's Magazine, the Century, Peterson's Magazine, the Galaxy. Of recent years she was a regular writer for the New York Journal and the Chicago American. Her autobiography, "The World and I," appeared in the Cosmopolitan.

The book that gained her the greatest fame was the collection of poems published in 1883 under the title "Poems of Passion." Wide discussion followed, much adverse criticism being directed against the book's title. The general effect, however, was to enlarge the circle of her readers and to give her a certain faithful following.

Two years before the appearance of "Poems of Passion" Miss Wheeler had married Robert J. Wilcox, a business man of Meriden, Conn.

The illness which ended in her death was brought on by her exertions during the war. With characteristic energy, she gave her aid to the Red Cross and visited from camp to camp in France, lecturing to the soldiers on sex problems.

Julian C. Austrian, the owner and editor of the Fur Trade Review, New York, died at Kempton, Pa., on October 31.

ALASKA DAILIES QUIT AS GOLD DECLINES

Jnnaau Dispatch Editor, Long a Daily and Recently Weakly, Gives Up and Moves to Seattle

SEATTLE, Nov. 5.—Alaska, once the scene of wild stampedes after pokes of riches, with resultant boom times in the cities and camps whose population would multiply overnight, is travelling fast on the downward trend. This is accurately reflected in the large number of newspapers of Alaska that are gradually going by the board—newspapers that once enjoyed exceptional prosperity, although with but limited circulation and equally limited facilities for gathering news over their extensive fields.

The last of the old Alaskan newspapers to suspend publication is the Juneau Dispatch. Ed C. Russell, who published the Dispatch as a daily newspaper for twenty years and since May 1, 1919, as a weekly, has made arrangements to move his printing plant to Seattle, where he will publish a weekly paper for circulation throughout Alaska. L. F. Shaw, for several years editor of the Anchorage Times, will be associated with Mr. Russell in the new undertaking.

The Dispatch was at one time Alaska's leading daily newspaper. The only daily in Juneau now is the Daily Empire.

Depreciation in the value of gold, resulting in mining operations being almost entirely halted, is the chief cause of the great exodus from Alaska to "the outside." While everything else doubled and trebled in price, the value of gold has remained unchanged. Mining men declare that gold has actually depreciated nearly 50 per cent in value in the last four years.

R. C. McPherson, manager of the Alaska Bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club, declared today that the exodus from Alaska, already lacking greatly in population, will continue as long as the government continues to withhold encouragement from the pioneer.

The Alaska newspapers, says Mr. McPherson, have made a valiant effort against great odds, to encourage the development of Alaska and as they thin out, one of the greatest assets of the Northland will wane in power.

MURPHY SUES EVENING POST

Politician Angered by Comment on Action Against Hearst

Charles F. Murphy, Tammany leader in New York, has followed his libel suit for $1,000,000 damages against William R. Hearst and the Evening Journal with a suit for $250,000 damages against the New York Evening Post because of an editorial article commenting on the break between Mr. Hearst and the political leader, in which Mr. Murphy sys his integrity is impugned. The suit followed a letter from Mr. Murphy's counsel to Rollo Agden, editor-in-chief of the Evening Post, indirectly threatening suit unless the objectionable statement in the editorial was retracted.

When seen by a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER Mr. Ogden said that the Evening Post had no comment to make either on the editorial nor on Mr. Murphy's attitude toward it.

ago and had been advertising manager of the Times-Picayune for several years He is 29 years old.

John F. Tims, Jr., who has been advanced to fill Mr. Van Buren's former post, has been foreign display advertising manager of the Times-Picayune since the consolidation of the Picayune and Times-Democrat in 1914. Prior to that he had been on the business staff of the Picayune since 1907 Mr. Tims is 28 years old.

Rhode Island Hits Billboards

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 4.—Billboard advertising on buildings and other public places in this city is opposed by the League of Improvement Societies of Rhode Island, which has named a committee to take the matter up with State and city officials. This form of advertising was considered necessary during the war, but is now declared to be objectionable and inimical to numerous plans for beautifying city property.

Sport Writers Hosts to Hughes

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 4 — Eddie Hughes, sporting editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, was the guest of the newspaper sport writers at Springfield, during his visit to his sister, Mrs John Howell, here. He is a Missourian by birth and renewed old friendships among the fraternity.

LIEUT. COL. SCRUTON HOME

Sedalia Editor Won Promotion on Firing Line

G. H Scruton, editor of the Sedalia (Mo.) Democrat, has returned home after two years' service in France. Editor Scruton enlisted at the age of 54, entering the military service as a Lieutenant with companies of volunteers raised in Sedalia before the draft. He returns a Lieutenant-Colonel, having won his promotion on the firing line.

"I find that I have been little missed in the Democrat office," Mr. Scruton tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER. While I have been overseas the paper has been making great strides. Now we must add to the mechanical equipment, and that is a pretty serious problem just now, as all publishers know."

EDUCATIONAL WORK TO HOLD LITTLE ADS

despite all innovations and recognized tendencies toward display the "first love" style of advertising has persistently maintained—and has consistently increased.

The public has always considered classified advertising as a directory—an informative guide to its wants and requirements—permanent, concise and dependable.

Classified advertising is sought—to satisfy the demands of the public—display advertising persuades by suggestion, and its attractiveness "thrusts" its appeal upon the reader. Each has its distinct and clearly defined function—each is an essential element of modern publicity.

But it is classified advertising, diminutive in size, yet vast in volume—that cultivates the "buying from advertising" habit—classified advertising that annually claims thousands of new converts to the infinite power of "printers' ink"—classified advertising that creates reader-interest, and thereby stabilizes circulation.

These are the principles that classified advertising serves to develop and encourage—the principles that govern the efficiency and production of a display medium—the principles that tend to make a newspaper—the great force in communal and industrial affairs.

Women Make Newspapers

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 4.—Women can determine the character of the newspapers that come into their homes, Professor W. G. Bleyer, director of the journalism course at the University of Wisconsin said in an address on "The Newspaper and the Home." "Since the value of most advertising depends on its reaching women, the purchasing agents of homes, every newspaper publisher desires to make his newspaper a home newspaper," said Porfessor Bleyer "Unless a newspaper goes into homes and is read by women it has little value as an advertising medium."

Another Road For Tigrett

JACKSON, TENN., Nov. 1.—Isaac B. Tigrett, part owner of the Sun, has been elected president of the Gulf, Mobile & Northern Railroad, a 500-mile line extending northward from Mobile. He is also president of the Birmingham & Northwestern Railroad and the Meridian & Memphis Railway and of a well-known bond company which bears his name, with offices in Memphis, Atlanta and Jackson.

I want to say that we have been very well satisfied with the service that has been given us by your concern. We have been entirely free from worries over checking copies as far as the New York field is concerned.
We are hoping that you will soon find it expedient to extend the service to Chicago. It is a great relief, indeed, to not only insure delivery of the papers to the advertising agencies, but it is also a relief to get away from the annoyance caused by carelessness within the agency itself.

HELPING COUNTRY WEEKLIES PUT ON REAL METROPOLITAN AIRS

GEORGE A. RILEY,
General Manager Publishers' Autocaster Company.

GEORGE A. RILEY is a newspaper executive who has shown on many occasions that he can "carry a message to Garcia," deliver it and come back with a receipt.

As business manager of the Newspaper Enterprise Association he demonstrated the dynamic energy and clear-cut vision with which he is endowed. The N. E. A. was conceived on original lines, embodying a new angle of service to newspapers, and it is due in no small measure to Mr. Riley's business ability that this new idea was developed within a few years into one of the essential factors in newspapermaking with hundreds of publishers.

Mr. Riley's experience in marketing the feature service of the N. E. A. impressed him with the great possibilities of a mat service of newsy features, cartoons, editorials, etc., for country newspapers. He could visualize a complete transformation of the small-town weekly which should find it possible to utilize he features which give variety and character to the average daily.

The one obstacle—and it seemed a controlling one—was the fact that country papers were not equipped with stereotype casting plants, and could not therefore use mats. Then along came an inventor, John McNaughton, a newspaperman, who had created a tabloid stereotyping machine, practical and inexpensive, so simple in operation that it could be installed and used in any office, no matter how small.

This seemed to Mr. Riley to be "the answer" to the problem which had long baffled him, and he was quick to appraise its possibilities. He saw how completely this little machine would revolutionize the small newspaper, giving it a metropolitan makeup. And he saw further possibilities of a no less alluring kind.

National advertisers have always found the problem of using the country weeklies with good effect a baffling one. The cost of shipping electrotypes to hundreds or thousands of papers mounted to big figures. If blanket orders for advertising were given to the ready-prints or "boiler plate" concerns the ads were perforce denied position on purely local pages.

So Mr. Riley argued that this stereotyping machine, which is called the Autocaster, would solve the national advertisers' problem of securing desirable position in the small papers without paying a premium for it. The Publishers' Autocaster Service Company was organized, growing out of the N. E. A., and Mr. Riley is vice-president and general manager of this company.

He has installed the Autocaster in nearly twelve hundred country newspaper offices, and the work is going forward as rapidly as the machines can be produced. He accepts advertising for the whole or any part of his list, sending the copy in matrix form and checking up insertions.

It has been demonstrated that the country papers get better results from using mats than the big dailies, for the reason that but one casting is required for their use as against three for the big paper.

CONGRESS AID SOUGHT IN PAPER PROBLEM

reduce the number of pages next week We regard the situation as serious."

A. C. Clarkson of the Houston Post said: "The Post is building its wartime schedule of conservation, with barely enough news to carry advertising, without extras."

Eric C. Hopwood, managing editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, said: "No change in size is contemplated as the Plain Dealer has been kept within 32 pages."

George F. Moran, general manager of the Cleveland News and Leader, said: "We have made no move for reduction in size, but will be glad to co-operate with other Cleveland publishers in doing anything to relieve the situation, if that course becomes necessary. We printed 801 pages in the News-Leader of November 2 and the evening edition of the News averages 30 pages daily. We have heard of no call for Cleveland publishers to take up the situation."

Atlanta papers are likely to take concerted action soon. No definite limit has been placed as yet upon the number of pages, but all the newspapers are cutting down advertising and news in order to print enough papers for their full number of readers.

E. W. Booth, publisher of the Grand Rapids Press, said: "The Booth papers are now practicing wise economies in news print because of the shortage. For a period of two weeks in two cities, sizes of editions were limited and advertising restricted The situation has been somewhat relieved and at present restrictions are largely removed."

Charles O. Taylor of the Boston Globe, discussing the situation with Editor & Publisher's representative, expressed the opinion that the Sunday Globe of November 2, was the tightest Sunday paper published in the United States, with 472 columns of advertising in the 92-page paper. The Globe some weeks ago found it necessary to place a check on Sunday classified advertising by declining to accept the same after 2 o'clock Saturday. Display advertising is accepted up to 5 o'clock on the day.

Mr. Taylor, as president of the Boston Publishers' Association, said that no general action had been taken by the association, the matter of curtailment being left entirely to the individual publishers. He declared, however, that the papers are running as tight as possible at this season, considering the very heavy volume of advertising. Among the dailies, he said, the size of the paper is usually governed by press capacity.

At the Boston Post, it was stated that while there is sufficient advertising to carry 40 pages daily, editions are kept down to a 32-page limit. The Post is always run on a close margin, according to the management, but that margin is as close now as it ever was, perhaps with the single exception of a short period last winter, when most of the papers reduced to a minimum of 10 and 12 pages.

NEW PRESSMEN'S SCALES

Halifax, Cincinnati, San Francisco and Other Cities Affected

New agreements and contracts signed by employers with the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union provide for the following changes:

HALIFAX, N. S. (Newspaper)—Voluntary increases in wages of about 5% per cent since August 1.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Increase of $4 a week for male cylinder pressmen and $3 a week for male feeders above wages paid on June 1, 1919, making minimum wages for June $29 and $27 a week. It also stipulated recognition of female feeders, with cylinder rates with minimum scales of $15 and $16 a week respectively.

CINCINNATI, OHIO—Four dollar increase and a new scale with a further raise in effect from January 1, 1920, to December 2, 1920. The latter scale stipulates increases over former scale, which expires December 1, 1919, of $6 a week for cylinder feeders, scoring machines on cylinders and feeders on scoring job presses, $6.50 for job pressmen on scoring presses, $6 for second drivers and for third rotary assistants, $9 for second rotary assistants and for press feeders on ruling and scoring machines, while foremen of embossing rooms will receive $10.50 a week.

SAN FRANCISCO—Day scales of $32.50 a week for cylinder feeders and for platen feeders and web pressers, of $27.50 for platen feeders and bookbinders, $30 for ruling machine feeders. Night scales are $3 a week additional to day scales, seven and one-half hours a maximum for first night shift, seven hours for second night shift.

SAN ANGELO, CAL.—Increase on September 1 of $4 a week, making scale for cylinder feeders $25 and for platen feeders $23 a week.

INDIANAPOLIS—Five dollars a week increase.

ATLANTA (Newspaper)—Bonus of $1 a day, making $5.75 a day or eight for men in charge of presses, $5.25 for journeymen.

WORCESTER, MASS.—Increase of $3 a week for journeymen, an eight hour day and a seven and one-quarter hour night shift.

WILMINGTON, MASS. (Newspaper)—Increase of $1 a week for men in charge and journeymen.

BOSTON SUBURBAN MERGER

Brookline Chronicle and Townsman Consolidated

BROOKLINE, MASS., Oct. 31. — This community's two newspapers, the Chronicle and the Townsman, have merged, and will be published as a single paper under one management. Walter D. Allen, managing editor of the Townsman, becomes treasurer and general manager of the Chronicle Company.

Walter C. English, former treasurer of the Chronicle, becomes president of the corporation, and Charles A. W. Spencer, for forty years connected with the Chronicle, as vice-president and managing editor of the publication, now officially known as "The Brookline Chronicle, incorporating the Brookline Townsman."

JOURNALISTS DESCRIBE WAR ADVENTURES

Birkmyre Tells of Imprisonment by Bolsheviists—C. E. W. Bean Gives News of Other Correspondents

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Only now that the war is receding into the limbo of the past are we getting the stories of some of the British war correspondents and their work and tortuous ways.

One of the best and certainly one of the most thrilling is that of the Daily Express Correspondent, Robert Birkmyre, who was captured by the Bolsheviists, in company with three other of his colleagues, and thrown into the Petrograss prison of Peter and Paul.

He describes his imprisonment as a "rest cure" and relates how he and his fellows, with a list of officials, were relegated to Cell No. 70, to find a new way of spending Sunday.

"We have done our best," he says, "to make our cell 'home from home' as clean and neat as possible, remembering our traditions for cleanliness—if not indeed godliness. It was one of the toughest jobs imaginable.

"No amount of solutions or disinfectants or insecticides seemed able to quell or discourage the lesser and really only legitimate tenants of the cell. Our first experience was on that memorable September Sunday were a series of blasphemous interruptions, followed by a sequence of improvised entomological expeditions in dim candle-light, with astonishing results:

Imperialiste Shot

"Then the next morning . . . outside the courtyard, under our prison bars, the sinister snap of rifles, a muffled moan, great melancholy, silence, and another of our companionships ceased from troubling Soviet Russia."

News of other British correspondents and their ways is given by C. E. W. Bean, official correspondent of the Australian forces.

"Philip Gibbs, of the Daily Chronicle, a pale, ascetic man, was an indefatigable writer of high-class material; brilliant, sincere, and accurate. It was the unsolved problem of the 'inky way' and the staff, how he managed to turn out such high-class copy day after day. He wrote as he spoke and felt. His story in the morning paper was past in the same mold as his chat at the afternoon tea of the previous afternoon.

Bartlett the Talker

"Ashmead Bartlett was the great correspondent in Gallipoli. He had a wonderful capacity for gathering his facts quickly, and for conveying a brilliant impression without too many words.

"Perhaps Bartlett's tongue was more notorious than his pen on the peninsula. He knew the inner workings of the army and navy, and he could be vastly entertaining, as those who had dined in the press mess at Lemnos knew.

Bartlett would talk most amusingly and satirically over cigars for a couple of hours. The staff had him as their chief anti, over on condition he put a bridle on his tongue only, he was allowed to remain on the peninsula.

"H. W. Nevinson was the oldest correspondent on the peninsula—a Radical —the champion of the lost causes—one who was ever against war, yet always the first to enlist. His private opinion was that all the fighting should be done by the old men; that the young men had too much to do in the world.

"Herbert Russell was Reuter's first correspondent, and Lawrence the second. He was formerly the Berlin correspondent of the Chronicle, and knew the German character thoroughly. He had no experience as a war correspondent when he came to Gallipoli, but before he left the peninsula had learned the game thoroughly. Afterwards he was Reuter's correspondent in France.

"Perry Robinson, the Times correspondent, always gave a straight story, but he hated the German tremendously.

"H. M. Tomlinson was correspondent to the Times and the Daily News, two strange bedfellows for a man to serve. Tomlinson was a Radical, a cynic, and something more. Some of his articles were so cynical that it was doubtful whether his readers altogether understood them.

"W. Beach Thomas of the Daily Mail was a tall, spectacled athlete, of rather academic appearance, an old Oxford half-miler. Thomas was a fine correspondent, always keen on his work and willing and anxious to assist his colleagues."

John H. Patterson and Governor Cox Will Entertain Ohio Press Delegates at Three-Day Convention

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 5—The program for the annual convention of the Ohio Newspaper Women's Association at Dayton November 7, 8 and 9, is one of the most interesting in its history. Delegates will be the guests of John H. Patterson, president of the National Cash Register Company. Sunday morning they will be the guests of Governor James M. Cox, owner of the Dayton News and Springfield News, at a breakfast at the Hotel Miami. Miss Anna Wilson, probation officer of Dayton's juvenile court, will discuss "The Federation of Business and Professional Women" during the breakfast.

The convention will open at 3 p. m. tomorrow with a joint meeting of the executive, membership and clearing house committees.

Saturday morning there will be a session in the assembly hall at the National Cash Register Company's plant a children's program of entertainment being rendered. A trip through the factory will be followed by a lecture at the N. C. R. school house and a luncheon in the company's "Officers' Club." During this luncheon Anna Lingo Hunt, of the Columbus Citizen, will speak on "Serious Service." "In a Happy Vein" —Cynthiana Gray, Betty Fairfax, Jane Hope, Susie Smart—will be the subject of a talk by John H. Patterson.

The Program

An afternoon session will follow in the N. C. R. school house, the program being as follows:

"Where You Are in the Boat"—Mrs. E. A. Day, Belleville, Manager. Discussion led by Mrs. Ethel D. Bryant, Willoughby Republican.

"Teaching English Through the Newspaper" Mrs. Margaret Brandenburg, Oxford. Discussion led by Miss Ruth Parrett, Columbus Ohio State Journal.

"Gathering News from the Small Towns"—Mrs. Charlotte Price Shea, Bellefontaine Examiner. Discussion led by Miss Elsie Berg, Wellsville Union.

"The Woman Behind the Newspaper" Miss Jessie Glasscr, Cleveland Plain Dealer.

An auto ride through Dayton will be given delegates by Mr. Patterson, followed by a reception at the "Hills and Dales" home of E. G. Burkham of the Dayton Journal.

During the evening a banquet will be held at the N. C. R. "Officers' Club." Mrs. J. W. Freeland, Marion, will preside. The speaking program follows:

"Our New Members"—Miss Pearl Helfrich, Bowling Green.

"Association Greetings"—Mrs. Edith L. Hall, President Dayton Women's Press Club.

Response—Miss Katherine Anson, Sydney News.

Address—Gertrude K. Lane, editor Woman's Home Companion.

Anne Lewis Pierce, New York Tribune Women's Institute.

The Sunday morning business session program follows:

"The Woman the Boss Wants"—Harry E. Taylor, Portsmouth Times.

"The Necessity of Women in the News paper"—Frank B. Dudley, Middletown Journal.

"The Best Old H. C. L."

"The Press Agent"—Mrs. Penlope Smythe Terrell, Dayton News.

"The Country Correspondent"—Miss Ruth Thomas, Sandusky Register.

"The Resort Reporter"—Miss Pearl Helfrich, Bowling Green.

"Editing Country News Letters"—Miss Winifred Butler, Findlay.

Officers of the association are: President, Miss Pearl Helfrich, Bowling Green; vice-president, Miss Ruth Parrett, Columbus; secretary, Mrs. Mary Preston Wilson, Lebanon; treasurer Mrs. Mary Young, Dayton; executive committee—Miss Katherine Amos, Sidney; Mrs. Zell Hart Deming, Warren; Mrs. L. M. Spencer, Milford; Mrs. Edith L. Hall, Dayton; and Miss Winifred Bitler, Findlay.

DAILY ADS HELP BANKS

Press Secured One-Third of Savings Held by Boston Company

Boston, Nov. 2.—The value of newspaper advertising in getting business for banks was discussed by G. Wallace Tibbetts, vice-president of the Exchange Trust Company, at a conference of the Associated Savings Trust Companies of Massachusetts, at the City Club.

Supporting his claim, he said that during September, 31 per cent of the savings accounts business of his bank was the result of direct mail or front page advertisements in the daily press, and that the same kind of business for this month has already risen 1 per cent over the previous month.

He said that his bank sets aside a certain portion of its earnings for newspaper advertising and declared that the return far exceeds the amount expended. He explained to the gathering that the essentials in advertising a bank are:

The name of the institution, its location, its slogan (if any) and trade mark.

Judson Started As Reporter

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Nov. 4—Frederick N. Judson, who died in St. Louis last week, was once a newspaperman here. Judson was a reporter on the Bridgeport Evening Farmer, now the Bridgeport Times, in 1861—turbulent times in the city. He was assigned to "cover" a flag raising, the occasion of the worst riot the city has ever known.

Mention Glynn for Governor

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 2.—The name of Martin H. Glynn, editor of the Times-Union and ex-Governor of New York, has been mentioned on several occasions for the gubernatorial nomination next summer. Mr. Glynn became Governor when William Sulzer was impeached in 1913.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., Nov. 3—Formation of a sales-managers' division of the Ad Club is planned. The work will be started at once. The Ad Club will revive its one night a week study system, followed last year.

URGES WATER POWER RELEASE BILL

Alaska and Pacific Northwest Contend They Have Untouched Spruce Enough to Make U. S. Independent in Pulp Wood

SEATTLE, Nov. 4—Will the rolls of news print on the presses of the newspaper plants of the United States soon be the product of the vast pulp woods of Alaska and the Pacific Northwest, heretofore untouched?

Realizing that the Water Power Leasing Bill, which has been passed by the House and favorably reported by the Senate, will open up these fields for paper production and result in the establishment of new settlements, erection of big plants, costing millions of dollars, and large payrolls, the Northwest and Alaska are vigorously backing the proposed legislation.

Cheap hydro-electric energy is one of the chief essentials of the news print industry. There is an abundance of water power and spruce and other suitable timber areas in the Northwest and particularly Alaska.

Danger in Delay

Close observers of the news print situation declare that unless the Northwest and Alaska pulpwood areas are opened the United States will be solely dependent on imported news print before many years.

It is estimated the annual growth of suitable timber in Alaska alone would supply half of the pulp used in the United States. In the Western country, however, the water power is withdrawn from entry and as a result no pulp mills have been installed. The water powers of the East were segregated from the government domain before the withdrawal order became effective.

Representatives of Eastern States, who formerly were opposed to the opening of the resources of the West and Alaska, are now ardently advocating the passage of the Water Power Leasing Bill and the development of the Western resources, for the news print situation has brought them to a realization of the fact that to use up the raw materials of the East and transport a large portion of them to the West, and later to transport the raw materials of the West to the East, is not true conservation, but on the other hand is decidedly wasteful.

Developed Pulp Wood

It was contended for many years that the Alaska timber had great potential value in the making of lumber, but the aircraft investigation decidedly supported that theory so far as aircraft lumber be concerned. It was found that the trees grow boughs from the ground up. Every bough makes a knot in the lumber and destroys its tensile strength. It is, however, ideal wood for the manufacture of pulp.

A permanent domestic supply of pulp, sufficient for the needs of the country, can be maintained indefinitely, it is believed, under a proper system of reforestation.

ADS FOR ALL CHURCHES

Newspaper Advertising Common Sense, Says Oregon Pastor

HOOD RIVER, ORE., Nov. 5—The Riverside Congregational Church has begun an aggressive advertising campaign under the direction of Rev. W. H. Boddy its pastor, who says:

"The advertising columns of the newspaper offer the most effective means of publicity. Common sense directs that the churches use it. I should prefer that my advertising attract people to all churches, rather than simply call attention to my own."

Paper Men Discuss Taxes

PORTLAND, ME., Nov. 4.—Pulp and paper manufacturers, lumbermen and timber owners are meeting here today and tomorrow at the request of the Eastern Products Association, whose headquarters are at Bangor, to consider the forest industries questionnaire sent out recently by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The questionnaire was designed to secure such data as may permit the bureau to deal intelligently with the income and profits tax returns of the forest industries; also to permit these taxpayers to put their case fairly before the Government, especially as to claims for depreciation deductions.

News and Ads Cut Fire Loss

BANGOR, ME., Nov. 4—A letter expressing his appreciation of the value of fire-prevention publicity through the news, editorial and advertising columns of the newspapers of Maine has been received by the editor of the Bangor Commercial from G. Waldron Smith, State Insurance Commissioner.

OHIO FIRST

"How are crops?" is the usual farmer-to-farmer greeting. The answer to that question is of interest to manufacturers—to those who plan advertising campaigns—to all who study market conditions.

The 1917 corn crop in Ohio was valued at $204,136,000; the wheat crop was valued at $83,926,000; oats at $49,984,000; rye, $2,608,000; barley, $1,558,000; buckwheat, $658,000; potatoes, $22,880,000; tobacco, $24,768,000; hay, $76,926,000; beans, $35,000,000.

Most people think of Ohio as one of the great industrial states—and it is, PLUS. In many industrial lines it is FIRST. But Ohio produces CROPS, too! The state ranks tenth in value of farm products—which fact indicates that the soil still figures as one of Ohio's dependable sources of wealth.

There are 270,000 farms in the state—not one of them too remote from a city to benefit by the regular visits of a daily newspaper. In fact, Ohio newspapers "cover" the state and make a thorough job of it. There is no "unresponsive" population in Ohio. The people are of a high average of education, home life measures up to the best and FIRST American standards and prosperity abounds.

The Ohio newspapers listed here are market-finders for manufacturers. They conform to the Ohio requirement—that the state institutions and enterprises must be of FIRST order! They have helped numerous manufacturers to win a place in Ohio and to hold it. THEY ARE AT YOUR SERVICE.

Important to Advertising Agents

Realizing the growing costs of doing business to advertising agents as well as to the manufacturers of advertising space, which in the case of the newspaper has been in a measure offset by increasing advertising rates and selling price,

THE NEW YORK GLOBE

Announces as effective on and after November 1, 1919, an increase of 2 per cent. in commission to advertising agents on general advertising.

On November 1, 1918, The Globe increased commissions from 13 per cent. to 15 per cent.

On November 1, 1919, The Globe announces an increase from 15 per cent. to 17 per cent., the 2 per cent. cash discount to continue.

In making this increase The Globe reserves the right to cancel the extra 2 per cent. in every case where the agent rebates it to the advertiser.

The Globe will continue its policy of absolutely protecting the advertising agents by refusing to quote net rates direct to others than wholesale buyers of space using upward of 50,000 lines per year.

HIGH-WATER MARK

The Net Paid Circulation of The Chicago Sunday Tribune November 2nd, exceeded

725,000

The demand was greater, but owing to the shortage of white paper The Tribune was unable to meet it.

This is the highest circulation in the history of The Chicago Tribune, and is the largest circulation of any newspaper in the world sold at the price of The Chicago Sunday Tribune.

On this same Sunday The Tribune set a new record in volume of advertising—732.01 columns. As a result 770 tons of white paper were used in printing this issue.

In line with its policy of conserving newsprint, The Tribune requests advertisers to restrict the size of their advertisements as far as possible.

Since November 3 the size of The Daily Tribune has been limited to an average of 32 pages—necessitating the rejection of a large volume of advertising.

You need not worry about PENNSYLVANIA

Just put your Advertising message into the daily newspapers and inspire your salesmen to stir up the distributors.

There is no need to go into all the details of Pennsylvania's wonderful prosperity because you can get from your mercantile agency all the business data, crop reports, steel and iron output, etc., needed to convince you that the time is NOW and the place—PENNSYLVANIA.

Labor unrest, unofficial "vacationists," calamity howlers and the un-American agitators are no more evident in Pennsylvania than in any other state in the Union.

You can be assured that the spirit of sane and vigorous Americanism in Pennsylvania will solve transient problems.

You can be assured that Pennsylvania's purchasing capacity represented in her vast and well paid industrial workers will average a higher per cent. this year than ever before.

And you can be assured that the only way to GET and HOLD Pennsylvania's business—to get your advertising story across in the shortest space of time to the greatest number of people—and at the smallest possible cost—is to use the daily newspapers.

Let us forget "reconstruction," "reorganization" and other trite terms by showing our supreme confidence in "Americanism" by starting something NOW. Present momentum always assures more progress for the future.

These newspapers can help you make your trade mark a greater indestructible asset:

ADVERTISING SERVICE IDEAS EXCHANGED AT BATTEN CLIENTS' CONVENTION

Eighty-six Non-Competitive Advertisers Find New Meanings in "Agency Service" and Mutually Benefit by Unique Experience Meeting—Automobiles and Elevators Shown in Exhibit of Advertised Products

HOW a really modern advertising agency keeps abreast and ahead of e times by constant endeavors to im- rove its service to clients and to inten- fy the sales results of their advertising as well demonstrated last week at the otel Commodore, New York, where 8 representatives of the 86 accounts George Batten Company, Inc., gath- red for a two-day convention as the ests of the agency.

A better appreciation among clients f how an agency serves the accounts nder its care and earns its commission om newspapers and other publications nd the face-to-face analysis of the prin- ples employed in merchandising a wide nge of articles, which, though non- ompetitive, nevertheless often appeal the same class of buyers—those were e two basic ideas of the convention, id according to Merrick R. Baldwin, a presentative of the Batten Agency and airman of its convention publicity ommittee, the agency executives and e clients were more than pleased with e execution of the ideas.

"The convention is unusual in its ture—perhaps unique," Mr. Baldwin id an Editor & Publisher representa- ve. "It is to be doubted whether ever fore have men interested in the manu- cture of stoves, face-powder, paper, soap, engines, stockings, paint, razors, mincemeat, automobiles, watches, shoes and many other widely dissimilar com- modities, gathered to discuss matters of common interest.

"These commodities seem at first glance to have little in common, so far as sales appeal is concerned, but you will note that many of them are in constant use by practically the same class of buy- ers. Take, for instance, stoves, face- power, soap, stockings, paint, mincemeat, automobiles, watches and shoes. All of them appeal to women buyers and a principle of advertising or merchandis- ing which sells one of them is probably applicable to another or to all."

The results of the conference were summed up briefly by President Wil- liam H. Johns of the Batten Company to Editor & Publisher as follows:

"The vital part of it was, of course, the four business sessions, at which 186 of the executives of the firms we serve sat in most interesting and, I think, profitable conference for two days. We are most gratified at the out- come of these sessions."

Four business sessions were held for the discussion of topics of common in- terest, relating to problems to industrial organization, research, production and merchandising. Among the addresses at the opening session were the following:

Other addresses were as follows:

"Industrial Research," Dr. Arthur D. Little, president, Arthur D. Little, Inc.; "Flexibility of Organization," John Younger, assistant to the president, Standard Steel Car Company; "Mechan- ical Transportation," William F. Morrill, president, Lamson Company; "How Big Should a Business Be?" Howard W. Dickinson, vice-president, George Batten Company.

"What is National Distribution?" E. J. W. Fink, assistant general manager, Mishawaka Woolen Manufacturing Company; "Intensive Merchandising," John S. Lawrence, Lawrence & Co.; "Human Relationships in Organization," Ernst R. Behrend, president and gen- eral manager, Hammermill Paper Com- pany; "Meeting Labor," Frank H. Will- lard, assistant general manager, Graton & Knight Manufacturing Company.

"Marketing a Raw Product," Bennett Chapple, publicity director American Rolling Mill Company; "Consolidating a Growing Business," Solon Wilder, presi- dent, Central Oil & Gas Stove Company; "New Functions of Salesmen," George H. Leach, secretary and general sales manager, George E. Keith Company; "Copy," William J. Boardman, vice- president George Batten Company.

Eighty-six booths occupied the floor of the ballroom on the first evening of the convention and afforded each of the guests an opportunity to see the products of his fellow guests. On another page of Editor & Publisher are printed photographs of one aisle of the exhibit section and of the exhibit of the George E. Keith Company, which is of special interest to newspaper advertising men in that it displays the "Walk-Over Shoe," the advertising of which is done exclusively in newspapers.

Among the 86 lines of merchandise on display were automobiles, tractors, gasoline engines, stoves and heavy ma- chinery—exhibits made possible by the Hotel Commodore's automobile elevator, which is its exclusive possession among New York hotels.

And speaking of elevators, the guests at the convention were reminded by the (Continued on Page 8)

WASHINGTON AWAITS COMPLAINTS FROM PUBLISHERS

Congress and Officials Interested in News Print Situation, But Have No Definite Policy—Plan to Stop Exports.

BY ROBERT T. BARRY

Washington, Nov. 11.

IT WOULD be pleasant to write from Washington this week that the Federal Government as a whole and Congress in particular is properly concerned over the desperate straits into which the American newspaper publishers are being plunged both in the matter of newsprint supply and prices, but it would not be true. Nothing but rank misrepresentation could describe alarm of a type that forecast real action.

Some members of Congress, many of them, in fact, are interested, but they confess a certain amount of impotence in the matter. Officials of the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice insist they are "watching the situation very closely" but they vouchsafe no encouragement for immediate action.

Interested, But Have No Definite Plans

Many officials were interested in the notice of the International Paper Company's price program for 1920 revealed in Editor & Publisher, but their sympathetic concern has yet to crystallize into some definite program of relief for the newspapers.

Federal Trade Commission officials declared that they had been in close touch with the developments in the newsprint crisis for some time, but they would indicate no prospect for action on their part. Asked if they did not view the 1920 contract proposal of the International as bordering upon a violation of the agreement of November, 1917, they withheld comment on the ground that the Commission occupied the position of umpire in the price controversy and would have to await a formal inquiry into the facts.

"I.P." May Transgress War Agreement

Copies of that agreement in the Commission's files were produced and the language read to aid unofficial comment to the effect that the new contract proposal appeared to transgress the spirit and letter of the agreement.

At the Department of Justice it was held that until the matter had been presented formally by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association no forecast of the probable action of the Attorney General as trustee for the publishers could be given.

Senator Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, is ready to assist the publishers both in the matter of prices and of supply should the newspapers suggest a course of action that can reasonably be expected to obtain the approval of Congress. One of the suggestions made to Senator Penrose was that the tariff rules on importation of paper be revised. Some publishers are inclined to believe that substantial importations from Norway would be possible if the duty free limitation were raised.

Treaty Holds Up Reed Inquiry

Senator Reed, of Missouri, is interested very keenly in the newsprint situation, but he has not been able to devote any time to this matter due to his unusual activity in connection with the Senate discussion of the treaty of peace with Germany. Since his recovery from his recent illness he has devoted little time to anything other than the treaty and has been on the Senate floor almost continually when not in conference over phases of the historic fight.

Representative Reavis, of Nebraska, has made a speech in the House last week demanding an investigation by the Treasury Department into the underlying causes of the shortage of news print, told Editor & Publisher today that he had two solutions to propose to meet the problems of the publishers.

Reavis for Paper Rations

"One remedy is to ration paper," he said, "so that the larger dailies will not get it all and the little fellows in the country districts none.

"The other will get at the heart of the trouble and save the country's paper supply. I propose that the Collector of Internal Revenue be instructed to make a comparison of the amount of advertising done before the excess profits went into effect and now and where it is shown by these comparative figures that an excessive amount of advertising space is being used in order to avoid paying the government its just due, that no allowance be made for expense accounts. This would cut down advertising down to its proper basis and would conserve the print paper supply.

"As I said before I have no quarrel with a newspaper's prosperity; I am in accord with the general view as to the usefulness of advertising, but I object to the method adopted to beat the government. The country press is feeling the real pinch of the shortage. I am still trying to get the Ways and Means Committee to take up this matter with the Treasury Department."

Would Stop Exportation

Mr. Reavis explained during the course of his speech in the House that the excess profits tax was a graduated tax that increases proportionately as the excess profit increases. An institution showing a profit of a certain sum must pay a tax of 10 per cent; if the tax is over the specified sum the tax is 12 per cent, and so on. If the profits are but slightly above the 12 per cent sum, expenditure for improvements on the plant and advertising will bring it below that sum and save the institution thousands of dollars.

This is why, Mr. Reavis says, advertising in all the papers is so heavy and that so much news print is being consumed by the larger papers.

Representative Christopherson, of South Dakota, introduced a bill last Saturday to prevent the export of newsprint paper as long as the present shortage continues, under penalty of $10,000 fine or 10 years' imprisonment. He would not discuss the new price issue but in explanation of his bill Mr. Christopherson said:

"The papers out my way are all complaining about the way the paper manufacturers are treating them. They say it is almost impossible for them to get enough news print to get out the paper. Whenever they write or wire to the manufacturers they are told there is an acute shortage and that is about all the satisfaction they get. Now I have looked into this thing and I find that 10,000 tons of newsprint were exported from this country during August. If there is such a shortage paper manufacturers should not be permitted to send any paper abroad until the domestic needs are met.

"My bill has been referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee and I am making an effort now to get Mr. Esch to grant hearings on it. I am hopeful of favorable action, not, however, before the regular session of Congress."

CAROLINANS CALL MEETING

January 8-9 at Greensboro Date and Place

CONCORD, N. C., Nov. 8.—J. B. Sherrill, secretary of the North Carolina Press Association, announces that the mid-winter meeting will be held in Greensboro, N. C., at the O. Henry Hotel, January 8 and 9.

A question box will be in place for the first day and will receive questions on all phases of business. On the second day this box will be dissected and the topics will be given the right of way. A banquet will wind up the meeting. Greensboro is well-located for such a gathering, as it is within easy reach of most of the editors of the state.

CHANGE OF NAME

But Old Wilmington (O.) Republican Still Is Memorialized

WILMINGTON, OHIO, Nov. 10.—The Journal - Republican Company has dropped the name "and" in now putting out the daily edition under the heading News-Journal. The weekly edition has been suspended.

The "Republican" for many years was one of the most influential weekly papers in Ohio. To prevent the complete extinction of the name "Republican," the company is using this line at the editorial mast head, "Consolidated with the Clinton Republican, established 1838."

MAKE USE OF WINDOWS

Are Most Valuable Auxiliary to Newspaper Advertising

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 7.—Make buyers come to your store by newspaper advertising, and then convey the final and decisive message by effective window dressing. This is the advice given to the members of the Junior Advertising Club of St. Louis by Ernest Calvin, window display manager for Werner & Werner, at a recent meeting. Calvin declared that "when a man sees a suit of clothes advertised in the newspapers attractively, the next day he goes down town to look the clothes over in the window before buying." He added that "the newspaper is the first message bearer, and the window advertising facilities are the second and final."

PALMER ELECTED PRESIDENT

Other Woonsocket Call Changes Follow A. J. McConnell's Death

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Nov. 10.—Following the death of Andrew James McConnell, editor of the Call and president of the Evening Call Publishing Company, Charles W. Palmer, business manager of the paper and Mr. McConnell's stepson, has been elected as the corporation's president.

Arthur Howard Crowell, until recently on the Providence Journal and lately assistant managing editor of the Call, has been promoted to managing editor.

James T. Davidson, for eight years night telegraph editor of the Providence Journal, is now with the Woonsocket Call as a new editor.

The general management of the paper will devolve upon Sampel E. Hudson as publisher and treasurer of the Evening Call Publishing Company, with Mr. Palmer as president and business manager.

More and Cheaper Pulp Wood

BANGOR, ME., Nov. 8.—The Great Northern Paper Company plans to penetrate the forests with a lumber railroad from a point on the West Branch of the Penobscot River, near Seboomook. It will extend 18 miles into the forest to the timberland, which is located in the St. John River basin.

This will make directly available the lumber located there for the company's pulp and paper mills at Millinocket. This will make available an added wood supply of many million feet for the two mills, and at a much less expense than it could be otherwise secured.

Newspapers Supply Buyers

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 10.—"The only advertising medium which does not have to be 'sold' people is the newspaper," said Edward Wolff, advertising manager of the David Alder & Sons Clothing Company, in an address before members of the Men's Wear Association of Milwaukee. "The buyer pays for the chance to read the advertising with the news, and gives his attention freely. It is only necessary to use the attention so secured to get results. In other methods of advertising it is necessary to seek out the buyer, attract his attention and sell the goods."

Offers Window Display Prizes

DALLAS, TEX., Nov. 7.—The Times-Herald has inaugurated a show window contest, in which three cash prizes of $25, $15 and $10 in gold will be awarded to the three best and most tastefully arranged show windows during the first week of the Dallas Fair. The Times-Herald has agreed to publish the pictures of the prize-winning windows with a full description of the display.

Journalism Students Increase

MADISON, WIS., Nov. 10.—More than 200 students have enrolled in the freshyear course in journalism at the University of Wisconsin. This is more than 50 per cent in excess of the largest number enrolled heretofore. E. Marion Johnson, a graduate of the school of journalism at the University of Kansas, has been added to the faculty.

ANOTHER WAR WOULD END CIVILIZATION —THE PRESS IS WORLD'S HOPE

Only Through Truth About Peoples, Heralded With Understanding, Can Nations Be Kept from Banding Against One Another, Sir Auckland Geddes Tells Journalists of Allied Nations Now Visiting England

BY HERBERT C. RIDOUT

THE British Government has not been slow to perceive the prominent part the press of the world must play in securing the success of the League of Nations and its first step in recognition of that has been to invite a number of Allied and neutral journalists to London as the guests of His Majesty's Government. The party is under the presidency of Louis Dumont Wilden of the Nation Belge, and M. Albert G. de Gobart of Le Figaro.

They met the Prime Minister, Lloyd George at 10 Downing Street, and took tea as his guests, receiving at the Premier's hands a personal welcome.

Representative Gathering

The following day they were entertained as the guests of the Government at dinner at the Carlton Hotel, with Sir Auckland Geddes, President of the Board of Trade as chairman, the party including Viscount Burnham, Louis Dumont Wilden, Colonel Sir Hamar Greenwood, Bt. M.P., M. Fernand Divoire, T. P. O'Connor, M.P., M. A. Arapu, Comte de Beatty, M. Schmitt, M. Taunay, M. Loper de Almeida, M. A. De Gobart, J. A. Spender, Madame Divoire-Brun, M. J. de Marsillac, M. Morf, J. Douglas, M. Peigne, Robert Donald, Madame Peigne Vignal, M. Albert Jullien, M. Serge Cande, E. F. Carnegie, M. Sadoge, H. A. Gwynne, M. Dichter, M. Seitz, M. O. Arapu, M. L. C. Moyse, M. Nordman, M. F. Soulier Valbert, Frederiek W. Emett, M. D. de Zubiaurre, M. des Gachons, E. A. Perris, M. Lapido, Colonel W. J. Galloway, M. Coltor, P. Villars, M. G. Dussol, M. L. Wloch, R. D. Blumenfeld, M. Savtchenko, R. J. Cru, M. Christian Sauerwein, M. Colin Grundy, M. Mocarzel, M. Heider.

International Power

Sir Auckland Geddes, as the mouthpiece of His Majesty's Government, said that before the war it was recognized that the press could be a great power for good or evil, that the press of a nation might fan the smouldering fires of national jealousy, of international dislike or might damp down those fires or help to damp them down. But he thought that few realized that the press was a mighty instrument of war, steadying its own nation, encouraging its friends, discouraging, disorganizing, finally disintegrating its enemies.

We realize now how great a power in international affairs the press of the world, the press of each nation could become, he said. Realizing that we realized the importance of such a gathering as that he was addressing, he regarded it as a great honor to be privileged to greet on behalf of the British Government the representatives of the Allied Press. He continued:

"We have before us now a period in which the power of the press will be almost paramount. While the war was still on, while the guns still roared, the press was second—powerful, it is true, but less powerful than the actual armies in the field. But now the clash of the nations is over. We who were banded together as allies or associates have won the war.

"We have still to win something much greater; we have still to win the peace, and it is only, I believe, through the press that peace can be won. I wonder, if all of us, even yet, realize the responsibility that lies upon the shoulders of every man who writes in a newspaper?

"Ill-considered words — perhaps hasty words—can do infinite harm, while considered words, true words, can do infinite good.

"To-day we look forward to the effective establishment of the machinery of the League of Nations, and, believe me, that machinery will never be effective unless the nations come to know each other far better, far more intimately, than they did in the past, for ignorance is the breeding-ground of suspicion.

"When we do not know people, when we do not understand their mode of thought, when we do not realize what their ambitions are, we are apt to ascribe to them quite different ambitions, quite a different mode of thought, quite a different national objective to those that are really theirs. Therefore, I am sure that every man who wishes well for the future of civilization which is inextricably linked with the League of Nations, must welcome the occasions which have led to such a gathering as this.

"It is a hard task that is laid upon the press of the world. It is not only necessary for the press to avoid speaking evil of other nations when that evil is untrue; it is just as necessary for the press of the world to avoid speaking well of other nations when that well is untrue.

"There is nothing more likely to lead to misunderstanding, nothing more likely to suddenly lead to a feeling of strife and antagonism than to believe that you are dealing with an individual of a nation which has got high ideals and ambitions, and then you suddenly discover, that the ideals and ambitions are less high.

"Upon you who are responsible for so large a seetion of the press in the different Allied and associated countries there rests now the greatest of all responsibilities. If you want the League of Nations to be a success you have got to tell the truth—the greatest difficulty that can face many at any time—and to tell it so that it is true to the man who reads what is said.

For Mutual Understanding

"It is easy enough to state facts. Many men say they have told the truth when they have stated the facts. You can state facts, and at the same time tell the most diabolical falsehood. That is the difficulty that lies before us all at the present time—that we have got to enter into an understanding of each other's lives and modes of thought.

"If we fail, the nthe League of Nations will have failed, and war will recur in Europe before many years are past. We shall see once again nation banded against nation, groups of nations banded against groups of nations, determined to kill and to destroy. If we get through this time we shall not get through next, and civilization will end. There is nothing less upon the shoulders of the press of the world at the present moment than the preservation of the civilization which has been built up by the work of countless generations through almost countless centuries.

Must Know the Truth

"But, before any of us can tell the truth we must know the truth. Therefore, yon have come to visit us in this land we welcome to-night. There is nothing more dangerous at the present time than what one sees in some papers in all the countries which were allied during the war. Yon see articles—well meant; the intention behind them is obviously of the best. You see the description of an Englishman or a Scotsman that is kindly in intention, that is almost fulsome in its flattery, but is untrne in fact, because it is giving a picture to another nation of a people that does not exist.

"One hears that a nation is composed of people who never think of anything but the good of others. I do not know that people. You hear a nation absolutely uniform—fine physiques, sportsmen, athletes, and so on. These things are not true. These are the difficulties that, lie before us—to get to know, to get to tell the truth so that the correct impression is conveyed to the readers—which is extraordinarily difficult whether one is writing or speaking—and to get the feeling of responsibility for the future of the world.

ADVERTISING SERVICE IDEAS EXCHANGED IN CONFERENCE

One of the six aisles where 86 non-competitive exhibits were displayed by the George Batten Company

Otis Elevator Company that the smooth-working lifts of the hotel that carried them up to the ballroom were a part of its exhibit, which also included a set of pen and ink drawings which traced the history of elevators from the early days of steam, through the hydraulic and into the electric eras.

Another exhibit of interest was the collection of newspaper advertisements which appeared during Governor Coolidge's campaign in Boston papers.

Purely social activities occupied the guests while they were viewing the exhibits. Clients of the agency, members of its staff and friends from the local publishing and advertising field hobnobbed on the floor and, after 9.30 p. m., danced.

A banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria on November 7 concluded the convention. Among the guests were Rosa Ponselle of the Metropolitan Opera company, Riccardo Stracciari of the Chicago Opera Company, and Tony Sarg, magazine illustrator.

Clients Want Another Next Year

That the convention had accomplished all and more that was expected of it was the universal testimony of guests interviewed by EDITOR & PUBLISHER. What agency service to the advertiser and publisher really comprehends is clearly visualized by those who attended the convention and they didn't hesitate to say so.

J. Paul Boyle of the Florence Manufacturing Company, Florence, Mass., manufacturer of the "Pro-phy-lac-tic" tooth brush, expressed surprise and pleasure at the gathering of men representing such wide diversity of interests and stated his belief that other agencies would probably follow in the footsteps of the Batten Company.

James S. Hinkley of the Geneva Cutlery Corporation, which makes Genco Razors at Geneva, N. Y., said:

"I am a man of few words, but I think the convention of clients is a success from start to finish and in my opinion it should be made an annual affair. Despite the fact that the program was widely varied, each address contains something of specific value to each client."

Newspaper advertising received many words of appreciation among the advertisers. C. W. Sanford, general manager and fi executive head of the Cliquot Club Company, of Millis, Mass., where it manufactures "Cliquot Club Ginger Ale," stated that his company was using an increased amount of newspaper space each year and that in three cities where newspaper advertising was used exclusively, the result was extremely gratifying.

"In Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, where a large number of farmers depend on the county newspapers for their information as on the day's news, our company uses these papers as its principal media."

Mr. Sanford was accompanied to the convention by H. Earl Kimball, president and principal owner of the Cliquot Club Company, and W. E. Boyers, sales manager.

Mr. Baldwin's untiring work as publicity chairman of the convention was favorably commented upon by representatives of the New York newspapers and magazines who covered the event.

ADVERTISING MANAGERS PLEDGE AID IN SAVING NEWS PRINT

National Convention of N. A. D. N. A. M. Emphasizes Fact That Newspaper Rates Are Too Low for Production Cost.

(BY TELEGRAPH)

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—In a strong address which made a deep impression upon the members of the National Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers meeting here for their annual convention today, John B. Woodward, advertising manager of the Chicago Daily News, warned that if the leading advertising managers of the country did not find a way of solving the newsprint problem as it related to their field, the Government might find it necessary to step in to protect the interests of the smaller newspapers.

Much attention was given to the newsprint shortage and methods of decreasing consumption, which included the curtailment of advertising schedules, more equitable distribution of space throughout the week and increased rates.

H. A. Ahern Re-elected President

Opinion was unanimous that present rates are too low and that increases have not been proportionate to the mounting cost of production nor to the increased prices in other industries.

President Harry A. Ahern, advertising manager of the New York Evening Journal, who was re-elected for a second term, is a strong advocate of higher rates and his stand was fully endorsed by the members. Various other subjects considered were discounts to agencies, particularly allowances to local service agencies, proportionate charges for displayed and classified advertising, closing hours for the acceptance of advertising copy, service departments and the extent to which newspapers should go in furnishing copy, art work, cuts and broadsides.

Mail order advertising received much attention, particularly in its effect on local advertisers. The experiences of members were given freely and are expected to be of inestimable value to others facing similar problems.

Mr. Woodward, E. W. Parsons of the Chicago Tribune, George M. Burbach of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Lafayette Young, Jr., of the Des Moines Capital discussed medical advertising for the general good of the members. It was decided that no rules were at present feasible, and that each manager must draw his own lines on what is acceptable.

Discussions brought out that the standard rate card was being generally adopted and no action was taken except to fully endorse its principle.

Local vigilance committees were commended in a resolution, as it was found that their work has been satisfactory and not the nuisance some feared it could be.

The flat rate is gaining favor rapidly and several members predicted its general adoption, those now working under it recommending it to others.

It was voted to affiliate with the daily newspaper department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, the vote containing a reservation to retain the identity of the Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers' Association.

Emery E. Hardwick of the Wichita Eagle advocated an extension of the association's work and asked that the Mid-West Newspaper Advertising Managers Association, of which he is also a member, be permitted to affiliate with the national body. The idea was received enthusiastically and the invitation will be extended.

Owing to the tremendous problems now facing newspapers throughout the country, the number of advertising managers present was particularly noticeable, considering that they had absented themselves from pressing matters at home and travelled long distances to attend. That the results fully justified the sacrifices was conceded by all who participated.

No formality attended any of the discussions, President Ahern starting the round-table talks as soon as he called the convention to order. Important matters were debated with the fullest freedom and the experiences and practices of leading papers were placed at the disposal of the members, who were unanimous in stating that no other meeting or convention so fully performed its function in this respect.

As an indication of the growth marked by this meeting, the members found it necessary to appoint a paid assistant secretary. He is David R. Carroll of the Chicago Tribune and his duties will be to attend to the increasing volume of correspondence, conduct a bureau for the exchange of information and ideas and to increase membership.

It is believed that the result obtained from this step will be so beneficial that no daily newspaper advertising manager in the United States or Canada can afford to remain outside of the association, as the information exchanged at the meeting could not be imparted except under just such intimate and confidential conditions.

Besides President Ahern, the new officers are:

First vice-president, Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia Record; second vice-president, John B. Woodward, Chicago Daily News; secretary-treasurer, E. W. Parsons, Chicago Tribune; directors, Lafayette Young, Jr., Des Moines Capital, chairman; Ralph Turnquist, Milwaukee Journal; George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Otis Morse, Detroit Free Press; Harry L. Young, Columbus Dispatch; Frank R. Hussey, Chicago Evening Post; H. W. Roberts, Cleveland Plain Dealer, and Messrs. Ahern, Stewart and Parsons.

Article VI of the constitution was amended to read that the annual meeting shall be held annually in Chicago, at which the election of officers will take place. This leaves the meeting date to be set for the most convenient season, instead of the third week in August, which has been found inconvenient for the majority.

In order to facilitate and abbreviate the deliberations of the directors, their number was reduced from nine to six.

Among other members present besides the officers and directors were:

William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript; Emery E. Hardwick, Wichita Eagle; Harry W. King, representing Omaha Bee; J. A. Dickson, Chicago Herald-Examiner; M. C. Meigs, Chicago American; Robert B. Philips, Gary Evening Post; H. M. Brodfuehrer and David Carroll, Chicago Tribune.

E. W. PARSONS OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE
Re-elected Secretary-Treasurer National Association Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers

FORM FIRST AUXILIARY OF THE S. N. P. A.

North Carolina Daily Publishers in New State Association—20 Enroll Out of Possible 33

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C., Nov. 10—Twenty publishers of daily newspapers in North Carolina met November 8th and formed the North Carolina Association of Dailies. A constitution and by-laws adopted and officers for the ensuing twelve months elected, including, president, E. B. Jeffreys of the Greensboro News; vice-president, Ed. Rollins of the Durham Sun; secretary and treasurer, Jos. Caldwell, Jr., Rocky Mount Telegram; and a board of directors of three, A. W. Burch of the Charlotte Observer; J. B. Sherrill, Concord Tribune; Josephus Daniels, Jr., of the Raleigh News and Observer.

The purpose of the organization is to improve and advance the interests of its members and to interchange information that may be of value in the publication of daily newspapers.

The start was even the more flattering than had been anticipated by the half dozen publishers of afternoon dailies who at a previous meeting had voted to supplant that association with an association of all the dailies of the state. Twenty papers were enrolled at the first meeting out of a possible thirty-three in the State.

It was decided that quarterly meetings should be held, the next to occur in January on the day prior to the convening of the mid-winter meeting of the State Press Association.

The secretary was empowered to issue a bulletin from time to time and a committee on membership directed to make a further canvass of the dailies of the state with a view to having all who would become members join also as also those without for the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, of which the association just formed is probably the first state auxiliary.

There was also a liberal discussion of matters affecting labor, news print, uniform accounting costs, etc., and some little constructive work and a wholesome exchange of views among the membership.

Included in the membership of the new association: the Greensboro Record, Greensboro News, Tri-City Daily Gazette, Leaksville, Greenville News, Charlotte Observer, Concord Tribune, Henderson Dispatch, Washington News, Durham Herald, Durham Sun, High Point Enterprise, Wilmington Dispatch, Greenville Reflector, Raleigh News and Observer, Rocky Mount Telegram, Hickory Record, Salisbury Post, Asheville Citizen, Asheville Times, Raleigh Times, Scotland Neck Commonwealth, Elizabeth City Advance, Charlotte News.

Call Wants Mail Privileges

Application was made in the United States District Court November 7 by the New York Call, the Socialist daily newspaper, for a writ of mandamus to compel Postmaster Patten to restore to the newspaper the use of the second class mails, denied the paper two years ago. Judge Learned Hand set the case down for a hearing one week from November 14.

44-Page Daily in Rochester

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 12—The Times-Union claims to have published the largest regular daily paper ever sold in the city or possibly in the state, recently. The edition comprised 44 pages of eight columns. Reading matter numbered 1,651 lines.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER COMPLIMENTED FOR RENDERING REAL SERVICE

Frederick J. Haskin Tells What It Is Doing to Establish True Economic Status of Advertising.

["Editor & Publisher" is the title and theme of the Haskin Letter as published in a long list of leading American newspapers October 26.

This most widely read of newspaper correspondents, whose weekly letters are confined to graphic interpretations of the significant trends and developments in our national life, found in the constructive work of Editor & Publisher a text for a helpful analysis of present-day conditions in advertising.

Quite aside from his highly complimentary references to the part this journal is playing in establishing the true economic status of advertising, Mr. Haskin's Letter is a valuable contribution to current advertising history. The data used by Mr. Haskin was gathered for him by one of the bright young newspaper women of his organization, Miss "Polly" Ferguson.

Editor & Publisher, conscious of the unprecedented distinction conferred upon it by this review of its service to newspapers and to advertising, can only tender to Mr. Haskin the most hearty thanks.—Editor]

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN

Every large business these days has its trade magazine. Some businesses, like the movie industry, have several. New ones are constantly springing into existence, and old ones are constantly growing fatter and wealthier, like American business.

A trade magazine usually consists of a detailed account of some past or forthcoming industrial convention, an eloquent denunciation of the most recent strikes, and several flattering obituary notices of late departed lions of industry, saudwiched in between extensive sections of advertising.

Month after month, this program varies but slightly, so that to the average citizen there is nothing more deadly uninteresting than a trade magazine—unless it represents his own trade.

But the newspaper business is unusual in this respect. We have a very good exceptional magazine, full of pertinent cartoons and comments, known as Editor & Publisher. We try to be modest about it, but sometimes our admiration gets the best of us, and we simply have to talk about it. For our magazine not only encourages us and writes sympathetic notices about us. It does big things.

Its most recent undertakiug, for instance, has been to prove by the laborious collection of nation-wide data that it is better to advertise in newspapers than it is to advertise in magazines. For a long time, most manufacturers had the idea that it was not—that they got more for their money from the weeklies and monthlies—and you could not convince them that they were wrong.

With the magazine people doing all that could be done to encourage this superstition, it was hard to argue people out of it. Then Editor & Publisher people had an inspiration. "We will make a market survey of the whole country," they announced doggedly, "and prove the truth of the situation."

This survey, begun with this one idea in view, has turned out to be a tremendous help to American business—not only in showing it how to obtain the most efficient advertising for its money, but in sobwing it how to distribute its products most systematically. In this way, a valuable service has also been rendered to the consumer, because the less it costs a manufacturer to market his product, the less it costs the consumer to buy it.

To illustrate: Editor & Publisher has just completed a survey of the state of Connecticut. It sent its men all through the state, collecting data and and canvasing business opportunities, and what this information it compiled into a chart, which is a veritable dictionary for any one who is thinking of doing business in Connecticut. A brief perusal of this chart, for instance, will tell you all about the state's manufacturing resources.

You see that, while it is the smallest state but two in the Union, only four other states exceed it in density of population; that it has fifty-two different industries; employing hundreds of thousands of people; that the income from these industries is over five hundred million dollars a year, over two hundred million of which is profit; that the leading industries of the state are metal products and textiles; that it has a large toy industry and a firearms and ammunition industry, which in peace time employs more than ten thousand men.

This chart also contains all the names of the gentlemen conuected with the various chambers of commerce, from whom you can obtain additional information. It tells you how many merchants, druggists and school teachers the state has; what its transportation facilities are, and even the state of industrial unrest within its boundaries.

Now, suppose you are a business man, the manufacturer, say, of a new kind of soap. If you went over this chart you could tell at once what the opportunities would be for selling soap in Connecticut. You would deduce that, being a somewhat clean industrial state, Connecticut would take very kindly to any kind of soap.

You would know the number of drug stores you probably handle. But there is a remote possibility that Connecticut already has enough soap. The chart, of course, cannot tell you that, but you can write the chamber of commerce, and get their individual opinions as to the soap situation there.

Suppose, then, that after considering all these facts, you decide that Connecticut is a good market for your product. You must next consider the problem of advertising it. Here again the chart helps you out. It gives you the names of all the daily newspapers of the state, together with their space rates.

Before charting New England state by state Editor and Publisher made its survey of the advertising situatiou and found the following facts: In New England there are 85 newspapers with 5,000 or more of circulation, making a combined circulation of over two million.

The advertiser can buy one line of space in any of these newspapers on a 10,000-line contract basis of $3.25 per line. To the same territory there are 21 magazines, having a combined circulation of one million, charging a joint rate per line of $8.61. In other words, the newspapers offer the advertiser a million more circulation at just half the cost.

It is true that there are a few staodard articles, such as kodaks and talcum powders, which yield better results from magazine advertising. But for the great majority of articles, the newspaper is the most valuable advertising medium. The average American reads his newspaper every day. It becomes as much of a habit with him as brushing his teeth or drinking a morning cup of coffee.

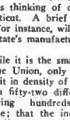
It is generally realized that the printing of dishonest advertising does not pay. It destroys the good will of the reader, and the good will of the reader is a newspaper's most valuable asset. It hurts the honest advertiser, too, so that no publication can afford to run ads in a paper which uses no discrimination in accepting advertising.

One large New York daily has a board of censorship to which are referred all questionable advertisements. Whenever there is any doubt as to the honesty of an ad, the advertiser is requested to appear and prove its merit. If upon the investigation the board, its representatitious turn out to be incorrect, the ad is promptly eliminated.

Since the need for cutting out the false ad has become recognized throughout the newspaper business, newspaper advertising has enjoyed a tremendous growth. According to James Wright Brown, president of Editor & Publisher, over eight hundred million dollars' worth of advertising will be placed in newspapers this year. Much of this is being distributed with the help of the charts compiled by this magazine, and in accordance with a new idea recently developed by its officials. This is the idea that products should be distributed first and advertised afterward.

For years, it has been the advertising policy to advertise goods first, thereby creating a demand for them, and to distribute them among the retail stores later. This method is now recognized as being wasteful, and must go.

"Because," says Mr. Drummond of Editor & Publisher, "here is how it usually works out: The other day I saw au advertisemeot of a new cigarette in a New York newspaper. My curiosity was aroused, I went and bought a box, and found that I liked it. A couple of days later I went ou to another city, attempted to buy the same cigarette and found that it hadn't reached there yet.



"So I bought another brand, and proceeded to forget all about the new one. If the makers of that cigarette had only distributed through the country before advertising it, then the sales would have had it when people asked for it and there would have been no advertising waste."

Of course, under this system, the manufacturer must distribute a part of his goods on the consignment plan, which means that the retailers pay for it after it is sold and not beforehand. But he is not taking much of a chance, because the effect of advertising is now so well known that it is usually possible to calculate its approximate returns.

Advertising is not yet an exact science, but it is fast becoming one.

TO SET MAINE PLANTS ON BUSINESS BASIS

It will be the aim of the Maine Press Association, during the comiog year's administration of President Charles H. Fogg, of the Houlton Times, to convince the publishers of Maine weeklies of the importance of conducting their business along business lines and as practically every weekly has a job printing department, to sell its product on the basis of cost of the manufactured article and not a little lower than a competitor

Charles H. Fogg

Steps were taken at the recent annual meeting toward employing a paid secretary of job work prices, whose duty it shall be to issue and keep up-to-date a price book on every class of work done in the job printing offices of Maine. As job printers are eligible for membership this means the placing of every job printing establishment oo a business basis.

A new innovation of the association is a monthly business letter, which will be sent out to members once a month to help each in every way possible.

Charles H. Fogg, president of the M. P. A., was born in Houlton, July 8 1866; was educated at Riverview Academy, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and graduated from Bowdoin College in 1889. He was in the mercantile business from 1889 to 1906, when he purchased the Houlton Times. He served as editor until 1910, when he became president and manager of the Times Company.

Pay-Day Philosophy

Members of the William H. Rankin Company organization receive, enclosed in their pay envelopes each week, a card containing a practical yet inspirational talk on how to achieve results in their work. The card for November 1 is headed, "You Are Our Representatives," and extols the value of pride in one's work and loyalty to one's organization. Many other firms have applied to Mr. Rankin for permission to use these cards.

Salvaging Metal

Findlay, Ohio, Nov. 12.—N. D. Hemiger of the Republican has designed and is making a sifter for salvaging metal from dross. He has operated the invention for some time in his own office and reports that results show from 25 to 30 per cent of the gross weight of dross can be reclaimed in the form of metal, which is exceedingly rich in tin and antimony and forms an added incentive to keep old metal in good working order.

WIDE DIVERGENCE OF OPINION EXISTS ON BREAKING COLUMN RULES FOR CLASSIFIED

Some Very Successful "Want Ad" Newspapers Have Varied Rules—They State Their Reasons Therefor in Fourth Article of Series.

BY C. L. PERKINS

ADVERTISEMENTS wider than one column are printed in the classified sections of some newspapers, while others do not break column rules. In considering the problem of broken columns in classified, the reader, the advertiser and the paper must be considered in the above order.

Some very successful papers permit classified advertisements of more than one column, as long as all classification, or in only certain classifications, such as real estate and used automobiles; others group broken column advertisement back of the regular classified and term it class display, and others absolutely refuse to break column rules.

S. J. Pickens, classified advertising manager of the Oregon Journal, Portland, Oregon, states their reason for not breaking column rules as follows:

"Our reasons for refusing to break column rules are: First, it spoils the appearance of the page; second, it makes the page hard to read; third, it gives one advertiser too much of an advantage over another, and tends to discourage the small advertiser without the favored one paying a sufficient price for the advantage so gained; fourth, it adds materially to the cost of setting and make-up; fifth, it is virtually selling display advertising with preferred position at classified rates, thus putting the display department at a disadvantage or cutting rates. Finally, it tends to destroy the whole theory of classified advertising, which is the grouping together of a number of small advertisements of a similar nature so that they will be easily found.

Why Is Advertising Classified?

"Many advertisers, and newspaper executives as well, seem to have an entirely erroneous impression concerning the reason for classifying advertising. They seem to think that it is due to serve the advertiser alone.

"The only legitimate reason for the existence of classified advertising pages is the convenience of the reader. Classified advertising is the nature of a directory, and the more convenient the directory is made and the easier it is for the reader to find what he wants without having to wade through a mass of matter in which he is not interested, the more will he come to depend upon classified advertising for his information. This means a proportionate increase of benefits to both the advertiser and the paper.

"This misconception upon the part of the advertiser frequently leads to demands for broken column rules, subclassifications, etc., to which he is not entitled, and irritation on his part when they are refused.

"Similarly, advertising managers, because of failure to thoroughly understand this principle, frequently find themselves floundering and unable to give logical reason for their refusal to grant the advertisers' demands. They simply fall back upon the old arbitrary answer: 'It is against our typographical rules,' and let it go at that.

"My own experience has been that advertisers almost invariably see the logic of this point when it is properly presented to them and go away satisfied that they are not being arbitrarily refused just because of a 'rule.'"

The Journal does, however, take out the column rules when the advertiser uses two or more full columns in one advertisement. Recently they ran a full page classified advertisement, in which they took out all column rules.

The Milwaukee Sentinel breaks column rules, but insists that all advertisements of more than one column be placed following all other regular classified advertising. William S. Broker, its classified manager, says:

"On the Sentinel we consider that classified advertising is the people's vehicle, and is used by the very smallest of advertisers, and that we would lose out on giving service to the great number of small advertisers, were broken column rules permitted.

"Classified advertising is not sold at the same rate as display advertising, and to allow an advertiser to break columns, and use big type, means that you are giving him the privilege of dominating the page which display advertisers must pay extra for."

About Advertising Rates

This last statement brings up another question: "Why should classified rates be less than display rates?" This will be discussed in a future issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

In reply to a query on the subject of broken columns, M. S. Knight, advertising manager of the Times Dispatch, Richmond, Virginia, writes:

"If the advertiser insists on using broken columns and type larger than agate or agate caps, his advertising is pyramided to the price of the regular classified advertisements under the heading, 'Display Classified.'"

F. G. Hamilton, advertising manager of the News and Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Indiana, writes:

"The News and Sentinel breaks column rules, the only restriction being that all boxes in a column wide must appear on the right hand side of the last classified page. We do this because we can see no good reason why the blanket rule should be upheld, refusing to break column rules any place on any classified page. We do not, however, believe that they should be broken in the general classified sections; for instance, would refuse to break one in the Help Wanted section to place a two-column ad."

Prentiss Bailey, president of the Utica (N. Y.) Observer, says:

"We do not break column rules in the classified page because we consider double- or triple-column ads as display, which have no place in the classified columns."

The Hartford (Conn.) Courant does not break column rules in classified, and Thomas A. O'Brien, its classified manager, states that reason as follows:

"The purpose which should actuate a newspaper with regard to its classified advertising section is to print as many small advertisements as possible, and be sure that in so doing each advertiser shall have the same opportunity of securing the necessary attention from the reader, so as to gain the required results. The moment a newspaper breaks the column rule in classified advertising, that moment they give to the two-column wide advertiser the advantage of attention, and take it away from the small advertiser. Right there they lose the spirit of classified advertising and make the entering wedge for further display advertising in the classified section.

"Keep classified advertising into single-column advertisements and also keep the type for the same as small as possible, so that all advertisers using this section shall be on an equal footing."

Herman Phillipson, director of advertising of the Dallas (Texas) Times Herald, infers that his publication will discontinue breaking columns. He says:

"At present the Times Herald breaks column rules on classified advertising to the extent of double column. However, we really believe that this tends to lessen the news value of the classified column which, of course, is essential. To our minds, the reader comes first on all matters pertaining to classified advertising and whenever the make-up of pages is broken up classified aspect is seriously disrupted."

The Directory Value

Although such newspapers as the New York Times, New York World, Boston Globe, Cleveland Plain Dealer, and many publications in other cities, permit advertisements of more than one column in all of some classifications, the concensus of opinion is that they destroy the directory value of the classified pages.

Thus, by making it more difficult for the reader to find the particular kind of advertisement he is seeking, results are lessened for the advertiser and the paper is therefore not benefited. The reason for running advertisements of more than one column is to increase linage. The Detroit News and Los Angeles Times are typical of a group of papers which prove that broken columns are not essential to classified linage.

Those publishers who permit broken colmnns and yet think that it is detrimental to the small advertiser may be able to solve the problem by placing the broken column ads behind the regular classifications, and then by education getting the advertiser to use the same space in single-column ads in the regular classified section.

BUILDING COUNTER BUSINESS

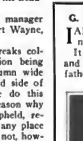
BY T. RINGWAY LONGCOPE.
CLASSIFIED MANAGER, WASHINGTON TIMES

The place where the public chukkes hands with paper is the counter.

Lasting impressions are made by little things. On one of my first trips to New York I went to one of the large hotels. On the morning I received a very courteous note from the manager personally addressed to me, saying he was glad to see me and trusting I would enjoy my stay while there. This impression was lasting. It stuck. I have always stopped at that hotel whenever I was in New York.

This little incident gave me an idea for the paper on which I was then employed. Like many other papers, we had a very inefficient counter force, indifferent and underpaid. When an advertiser came in they treated him as though they were conferring a favor on him. There was no attempt made to help him word his ad or make any one of a thousand suggestions to help the advertiser get results. The average length of time for which they took an ad was two days. The result was that ads got into the paper poorly worded and ran for such a short space of time that little or no results followed. At that time there were about two hundred and fifty people coming to the office each week and leaving ads. The average amount of money left by each advertiser was about fifty cents. In other words, we were doing about one hundred and fifty dollars' worth of want ad business at our counter weekly.

Here's how we remedied this condition. We took trained solicitors from our classified department and placed them on the counter. These people knew the value of a want ad, they knew from experience how hard they were to get and they could suggest an ad that came in voluntarily. The first week after this change was made we did over three hundred dollars' worth of business. In six weeks we reached the five hundred dollar mark.



The number of people bringing their ads to that office has increased from two hundred and fifty to over four hundred weekly. This is attributed to the fact that the public knows they can get intelligent service here. They get results and they tell others of this service. The average amount of money left by each advertiser now is $1.47.

Pasted on a blotter are samples of good ads of every classification. In a similar case are testimonial letters from advertisers who have received results.

G. B. Morgan's Autobiography

I AM the third Morgan to enter newspaper work.

It started with my grandfather, and we might use the term "Like father like son."

GEORGE B. MORGAN

Was born December 25, 1900. Lived in Nashville 'till I was ten years of age—moved to Jacksonville, Florida with my parents. In that city my father was connected with the Florida Times-Union. I went to school in Jacksonville and spent a great part of my time aronnd a newspaper office, where my attention was drawn to advertising.

Started in as office boy and attribute some of my knowledge to this experience.

About this time my father died and I was compelled to return to Nashville, where my mother's folks lived.

In 1916 I started to work in the classified advertising department of the Tennessean and American, and during the corase of three years I climbed to my present position.

I might add that I am now only 19 years of age.

A. N. A. NEWS AND VIEWS

A WEEKLY FEATURE COMPILED AND EDITED BY JOHN SULLIVAN

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF THE ASSOCIATION OF NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

A. N. A. ANNUAL MEETING

Daily Paper Will Be Issued During Lakewood Conference

FOR the last four weeks, at least, the "Editor & Publisher" men has been worrying about the program of the annual meeting of the A. N. A., which will this year be held at the Laurel House, Lakewood, N. J.

But his worry is as nothing to the worry of a program committee or of the man entrusted with making the program. A business meeting program, indeed, for the matter of that, every kind of program, has to be made on the basis of the "greatest good for the greatest number."

And, of course, regarding any program made on that basis, there is sure to be someone who will inform everyone he meets for the next two years that it was "a hell of a program."

Then, after selecting the subjects, speakers have to be obtained, and, afterwards, restrained; I remember one man —not an A. N. A. man, by the way— who was asked to speak for twenty minutes and who talked for an hour.

But, even before going after speakers, titles have to be invented. And a title may make a session well or ill-attended.

Out in Cleveland last May we had as title of a subject, "Style and the Woman Appeal in Advertising." A first sight that would not seem to suggest anything interesting to a cement man or a man selling a public service. They would probably decide to "can" that address and the resulting discussion. So we didn't tell anyone what the opening subject—it was the opening subject—was, and no one stayed away —with the result that men representing firms making every kind of nationally advertised product were congratulating themselves and one another upon having been present, while men who did not arrive till the afternoon session felt sorry for themselves.

One man said that he had gotten an idea from the discussion of this subject that showed his company had been on the wrong track and which reversed a four-year plan.

HAVE WE GOT A PROGRAM?

YES, we have, but we are not telling —yet. The only thing we can say at present is that we will work from 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. each day, including the lunch hour. No difficulty about that, because we have been doing the same for nearly ten years and have formed the habit. If we didn't keep A. N. A. men working all the time at Annual and Semi-Annual Meetings, they would kick and ask why they had been lured from their offices.

This annual meeting program will be like every other program we ever have had,—it will have to do with the practice of advertising and selling. It will enable us to make ourselves better fitted to serve our companies in marketing their products. We are not very likely to discuss portentously measures designed to reform overnight a wicked and Bolshevized world. Rather are we concerned about reforming ourselves—making ourselves fitter for our jobs. Probably unrest and uncertainty and the many evils from which we are told the world is suffering would be ended or cured immediately if the general slogan were, One man—One Reform, instead of looking so everlastingly outside ourselves for salvation.

WHAT IS THE KEYNOTE?

THAT'S a question that I am asked by advertising trade paper men in advance of or following an A. N. A. meeting. I know I'm going to be asked it this time, but I am presenting an alibi. Part of it is in the preceding paragraphs, and the remainder is that there will not be any keynote, as keynotes are usually understood. If any keynotes at all, they will be WORKING and LEARNING.

FROM LABOR TO REFRESHMENT

WHEN all the work is done, we expect to play, that is, on Saturday. The three days, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, December 3, 4 and 5, will be given up entirely to business. On Saturday morning we will play golf and indulge in trap-shooting, which is the kind of thing that many of us would do at home. But—Labor first; then refreshment.

"THE A. N. A. HERALD"

THIS annual meeting will be distinguished by an innovation in the shape of a newspaper published daily throughout the meeting. There will also be a preliminary issue in which will be announced the general details. The daily issues will either be handed each man as he enters the breakfast room or placed on the tables. Each issue will contain information as to the current day's sessions, with notes concerning the previous day's meetings. And there will, without doubt, be a good deal of facetiousness introduced by the large staff of editors and contributors.

This will be the first occasion of using this method to promote and further general meetings. It will have the advantage of novelty, and it will, incidentally, save a good deal of other printing and a fair amount of multigraphing.

OH WAD SOME POW'R THE GIFTIE GIE US—to see the relation between our little plans of publishing, finance, production, transportation, etc., and the people who, we hope, will buy, read, use or employ. A most common fault is that of being unable to see the other fellow's point of view—if not being able to stand off from one's own business and, establishing for the nonce identity with the man, look at the business from the public viewpoint, that is, the viewpoint of the prospective buyer. Whether it be a newspaper, a promotion prospectus, a factory, a railroad terminal—it is usually held so closely to the eyes that the reason for its creation—public acceptance and use—is hidden.

The Grand Central Terminal is one of the glories of New York City. It's an inspiration daily to the man to whom it can be an inspiration. The architects and engineers did a wonderful job; but, in one respect, at least, they did not consider the possible market; the exit ramps and doorways on the lower level are too narrow for the rapid dispersal of the crowds of commuters in the morning. Not because they could not have been made wider; but just because there probably wasn't an architect or engineer on the job who looked beyond his office or his little blue-prints and considered the prospective public need—in other words, the market.

Just the same with the subway arrangements—or, rather, disarrangements —at Forty-second Street; so occupied were the engineers with making of beautifully clever excavations that they never thought of coordinating them in such a way as to serve effectively a coordinated need.

Well, this is just another attempt to get sellers of advertising markets to place one eye at least outside the edge of their properties.

MARKET INFORMATION APPRECIATED

A GOOD deal has been said here about newspapers selling their markets as an effective way of selling themselves. Recently, in giving members of the A. N. A. information concerning newspapers in a middle west city, we were able also to supply recently-gathered details about the market served by the newspapers. The details covered population, families, dwellings, property values, nationalities, stores, factories and employes, advertising carried, rates, etc. distribution of newspapers.

One member who received the data wrote: "The reports on ..... and ..... are very illuminating, and we wish to thank you very much for forwarding a copy of this report. We are very much interested in obtaining this information."

WHY IS THERE SO MUCH ADVERTISING?

FROM time to time people pause for a while in intervals between strikes —the intervals are, of course, very short and ever hard to sense—to wonder why there is so much advertising space being used. They speculate considerably, and usually one speculation is as good as another. Frequently, the speculations have a sinister character, for it is very difficult for the lay mind—and the lay mind is often political or official—to impute purely commercial motives or to give entirely business reasons. It does not occur to these minds that big businesses are ever doing anything wise or relatively unselfish.

Suppose we try to state what appear to be a few reasonable reasons, just to help these negative minds to get on to a positive track—reasons which are not too speculative, at any rate:

1. The desire of manufacturers generally after the signing of the armistice quickly to re-establish communication with their markets, wholly or partially neglected in the matter of advertising during the war.

2. The doubling of American manufacturing capacity during the war, necessitating expansion of peace production or the production of new products, in the marketing of which advertising was naturally used.

3. New advertisers as a result of having newly-erected war production plants turned to peace production in order still further to profit from the investment.

4. Education obtained during the period bringing about more widespread appreciation of the function of advertising in the marketing of merchandise.

Of course, if yours is a negative mind, you will find a few other reasons, of a kind.

ORGANIZATION CHANGES

F. W. PRINCE has been appointed manager of the advertising department of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, New York City. Mr. Prince will serve as the accredited A. N. A. representative, in place of Ernest Coler.

Clarence F. Brown has been appointed the A. N. A. representative of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington, Delaware, succeeding George Frank Lord.

The following firms have recently been elected to membership in the association:

Permalife Storage Battery Company, Inc., Thomas C. Boland, general manager, Indianapolis, Ind.

F. S. Royster Guano Company, Robert G. Smith, advertising manager, Norfolk, Va.

The Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company, J. A. Bloch, first vice-president, 41st and Water streets, Wheeling, W. Va.

The Fairbanks Company, Paul Bruce Findley, advertising manager, Broome & Lafayette streets, New York City.

BAYLESS TO TEACH

W. N. BAYLESS, advertising manager of the Conklin Pen Manufacturing Company, Toledo, has been asked by the University of Toledo to take charge of their class in "Marketing —Advertising as it Relates to Selling and Merchandising." Mr. Bayless will act as instructor at least for the first semester and possibly throughout the year. This does not affect Mr. Bayless' work with the Conklin Pen people—where he has been serving as advertising manager for the last eleven years.

More Than Salesmen

About seven years ago we prevailed upon one of our newspaper publishers to turn his anemic semi-weekly into a farm paper. We saw no future for this semi-weekly which carried a scant amount of advertising and that typical of papers of its class. We did see possibilities for the right kind of a farm publication, though there were already strong farm papers in this state.

Objectionable advertising was discontinued. There was nothing left. Advertising did not come because the paper did not deserve it.

Then the publisher got a real editor, made a real farm paper, improved the typographical appearance and we had something to go out and sell.

Business began to come. Results were secured for advertisers. Circulation increased because of the character of the paper. Our competitors first laughed at us but later the joke was on them for they went out of business or changed hands.

Today, this farm publication stands in the van among state farm papers and carries a volume of local and national advertising that makes it supreme in its section of the country. It is acknowledged to be one of the best state farm papers in the United States.

This is indicative of our ability to co-operate with publishers, not only in securing national advertising, but in improving their publications so as to make them better, stronger and more desirable mediums in the eyes of the reader and space buyer.

We have a proposition for publishers who maintain their rates and guarantee their circulation and who are looking for an out-of-the-ordinary sales service which secures constantly increasing results.

ADVERTISING AGENT HOLDS MOST VITAL PLACE IN BUILDING NEWSPAPERS

Some Facts and Thoughts for Consideration of Publishers —How the Agency Earns Its Commission.

BY JASON ROGERS

ARTICLE XI

SEATED comfortably in his office chair in a distant city—we will say in Dallas, Texas—a newspaper publisher may be pictured as reading the offering of an advertising contract from a reputable advertising agent in New York covering the advertising of a firm of corset manufacturers, which we will say formerly used general mediums exclusively.

The proposed contract is at regular rates for the space desired, the request for position on optional days are not unreasonable, but Mr. Publisher is seriously considering how he can find a way to escape commission allowance to the agent.

To him it is a matter of indifference how much time and money the agent may have put in developing the account and he considers it "purely a matter of business," for does not the agent get 15 per cent on the total of outlay, net? So Mr. Publisher is quickly trying to get his gross rate for his net.

Not a Square Deal

Mr. Publisher thinks he is smart when for any reason he can get that 15 per cent higher rate and ignores all the bother and annoyance caused the agent in the circumstances. Numerous experiences of the kind very naturally make the agent prefer to do business with the magazines.

In many cases the publisher gets his chance to sidestep commission allowance when the agent places business to go over the signature of local dealers handling the line—the very best and most effective sort of advertising—and calls it local business on which he of course pays no commission.

Even where the business is to be paid for fifty-fifty, half by the manufacturer and half by the local dealer, the payment of commission to the agent on the half paid for by the manufacturer never impressed me as being a square deal to the man developing new business for the newspaper.

If all our newspapers sold advertising as commodity, at the same rate for like service to all comers, how simple the whole process would be, but it will probably take years of education to produce such a result.

Many newspaper publishers years ago decided that it cost them more money to handle foreign advertising than local which in many cases is not the true situation, and go blindly ou worshipping false gods.

Protect the Agent

If they would but draw the line for a start at a point where local wholesale purchasers of space start,—begin, say 30,000 or 50,000 line users on net rates —and bring local rates up to foreign gross rates and absolutely protect advertising agency service for the multiplicity of small accounts using less than 30,000 lines in a year, they would I am sure be taking an enormous step forward.

In recommending this I am not advocating anything that I have not demonstrated in real life by the New York Globe, with great success. Automatically and without design the process has worked out until it is now nearly proof.

It matters not to us today whether a big local advertiser buying space at wholesale rates desires to avail himself of agency service or not. If he buys direct he gets the net rate. If he buys through an agent, the agent pays us the same net rate and charges his commission on top of it to the manufacturer or advertiser.

We absolutely protect the advertising agent by refusing to quote a net rate to anyone using less than 50,000 lines a year. As a matter of fact we prefer that all local business, other than that of the large local shops, come to us through agents because in that way they secure the benefit of agency service, and we have a double financial responsibility back of the order.

If an outside account comes to us to be paid fifty-fifty by the manufacturer and a local dealer who is not a local wholesale space buyer trading on a net basis, or the customer of another agent, we will gladly pay the placing agent full commission on the business because we want to give the man who produces business for us full compensation for the service he has rendered.

If the newspapers of the country and particularly those in the larger cities were to make an accurate survey of what it costs them to develop and handle small local business, soliciting, the setting, re-setting, the pulling of extra proofs, messenger service, bad bills, etc., etc., they would find that it figured a higher percentage than they pay for agency service.

Besides this it is good business for us to put our houses in order against those advertisers smart enough to clear their business through local dealers at lower net rates than they can secure through the agent and special representative.

Just for a moment let us consider what the agent developing an account for us is up against and what he may spend on it or invest before he plants a line of copy and secures any compensation from the advertiser.

In the first place the account must be set on its feet, so to speak. That is after the prospect arrives, ready for treatment. The would-be advertiser must be shown that in order to start organizing a national campaign he is entering upon a serious business and that to enter the lists in a half-hearted way means probable failure to attain the results that are sought.

Before attempting to outline any campaign the well-equipped space-selling agency will carefully check up the prod

THE BALTIMORE NEWS

Than in Any Other Baltimore Paper

Six days a week The NEWS carried in September 2,152 columns of paid display advertising against 2,048¾ for the 2nd paper (evening); 1,065½ columns for the 3rd paper (morning); 743¼ columns for the 4th paper (evening) and 598½ columns for the 5th paper (morning).

Seven days a week The NEWS carried 2,717½ columns of paid display advertising compared with 2,525 columns for the 2nd paper (morning) and 1,446¼ columns for the 3rd paper (morning).

Not only that but The NEWS is gaining in total advertising more rapidly than any other Baltimore paper.

Six days a week The NEWS in September gained 1,014½ columns as compared to 975 columns for the second paper (evening); 611½ columns for the 3rd paper (morning); 177 columns for the 4th paper (evening) and 144 columns for the 5th paper (morning).

Seven days a week The NEWS gained 1,158¼ columns as compared to 951 columns for the 2nd paper (morning) and 326½ columns for the 3rd paper (morning).

Included in the figures of another Baltimore paper claiming leadership in the Baltimore field is its entire classified section repeated in its afternoon paper without extra charge—sold as ONE paper, counted SEPARATELY!

Also all National advertising sold as one paper measured as two. Also thousands of dollars' worth of medical and other advertising of a type which the News has refused.

Or, in the words of The Detroit News, commenting on one phase of this situation, a paper hundreds of miles from Baltimore but still near enough to feel misleading comparisons:

"NOTE.—The Baltimore Sun . . . are not included in the above list as their . . . lineage is the aggregate of two editions per day and largely consists of the same advertising duplicated and carried over from the morning to the evening edition or vice versa; . . . which makes comparison with other daily newspapers impossible."

24,773,122 LINES GAINED BY 89 NEWSPAPERS

Only One Shows Loss in 18 Cities During September—New York Gains 30 Per Cent. Over Past Six Years

Eighty-nine newspapers in 18 cities of the United States made a net gain of 24,773,122 lines of advertising during the month of September, 1919, as compared with September, 1918, according to the statistical department of the New York Evening Post. The total lineage for September of this year was 78,959,-524 lines, and last year's was 54,186,402 lines.

Of the 89 papers listed, only one showed a loss.

The statistics follow:

	1919.	1918.	Gain.
New York	15,818,819	8,745,834	3,572,985
Birmingham	2,231,598	1,450,992	780,606

New Orleans	2,941,414	1,661,401	1,279,928
St. Paul	2,132,266	2,244,240	1,076,074
Cincinnati	2,995,200	2,000,100	935,100
Totals	78,959,534	54,186,402	24,772,132

New Yorks' newspapers in making their gain of 3,872,985 lines, printed 11,496 pages during September, 1919, as compared with 9,104 last year. The New York Times led with 1,252 pages, followed the World with 1,126 and the Brooklyn Eagle with 978 pages.

Big Gain Over Past Six Years

September advertising this year has made a leap of about 33 per cent when compared with the totals for the month since 1913. Except that the figure for the New York Commercial are not included in the tabulation for 1913 to 1916 inclusive, the following figures are from the sixteen morning, evening and Sunday newspapers:

1919	12,618,819
1918	8,745,834
1917	8,908,226
1916	8,234,074
1915	7,852,313
1914	7,303,646
1913	8,499,182

All N. Y. Papers Show Gain

Evening newspapers in New York published a total of 5,964,181 lines during September, 1919, compared with 4,070,989 during the same month last year. The morning papers topped this with comparative figures of 6,620,638 lines and 4,674,845 lines for 1919 and 1918, respectively, and the Sunday newspapers brought up the rear with the modest totals of 3,081,172 lines for September, 1919, and 2,525,584 lines for 1918.

ANOTHER FOR GOULSTON

Will Have Full Charge of Hovey Company's Advertising

Boston, Nov. 7.—Under the reorganization of the C. F. Hovey Company, the direction of advertising has been given into the hands of the Ernest J. Goulston Advertising Agency, Inc., this city, Mr. Goulston acting personally as advertising counsel, with J. S. Batt in direct charge.

Miss Edna Foster, formerly engaged in an editorial capacity with Youth's Companion, has been retained to prepare copy. J. E. Robertson is in charge of layouts and production work and Miss K. M. Healy is doing the art work.

NEWMYER RECEIVES HANDSOME PRESENT

THE handsome silver service gift to Arthur G. Newmyer, associate publisher of the New Orleans Item, from the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which was presented in appreciation of his services as their Southern vice-president and as general director of arrangements for their splendid New Orleans convention last September, has been completed, and is now in the proud possession of the Newmyer household.

This is the first photograph of the service, taken especially for EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and should be especially interesting to all A. A. C. W. members, in view of the fact that they really voted to give Mr. Newmyer a loving cup. But after the convention, William C. D'Arcy, chairman of the gift committee, decided that a silver service, appropriately inscribed with the Truth Emblem of the Associated Clubs, would be more useful and appropriate. So the change was made.

Since the Ad Clubs' convention, the business men of New Orleans have also presented Mr. Newmyer with a chest of silver in appreciation of his efforts in bringing the convention to their city.

Several innovations in department store copy are being used, notably a standard border for all copy and an extensive use of full-pages in rotogravure. Louis F. Rivers is general manager of the Hovey Company.

WEB PRESSMEN PLAN NEW INTERNATIONAL

Boston Newspaper Press Hands Vote in Favor—National Convention Will Be Held in St. Louis November 17

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—Members of Web Pressmen's Union No. 3 voted yesterday to form an international union of web pressmen's unions of the United States and Canada. The newspaper pressmen are now members of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, which comprises also the men employed in magazine, book and job shops.

The new union was first suggested by the Detroit newspaper pressmen on September 8, and a referendum is being taken throughout the country on the question.

Laws for the new international union will be drawn at a convention of web pressmen in St. Louis on November 17.

MARYVILLE, Mo., Nov. 8.—Charles E. Kane, of this city, for the past two months city editor of the Democrat-Forum, will take up his duties on Monday as publisher of the University of Missourian. Mr. Kane was a graduate of the school of journalism of the Missouri University in 1915, and for two years was a member of the faculty. He then went to France as a member of the university ambulance corps.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A WEEK

October was another record breaker.

Told in the cold and exact language of figures, the advertising growth of The Times is represented by a gain of 180,930 lines in October over the corresponding month of 1918. This means a gain of 644 columns, or more than 20 columns a day.

It must be remembered, too, that The Times refused a considerable amount of advertising offered it—advertising that is objectionable in character of product or claims or that is apparently fraudulent. For example, in the first two days of November, The Times has declined nearly 6,000 lines of advertising that has appeared elsewhere in Washington.

I am strong for Baltimore because Baltimore is strong for me: 35,000 families own cars—one out of every four on a five-persons-to-a-family basis. In Maryland—second state in good roads—every fourteenth person owns a car. Building permits show Baltimore spent $1,129,762 (contractor's figures estimated 20% under actual) on 1912 new garages from January to September 30, this year. Baltimore is buying cars and everything that goes with them.

During the first nine months of 1919, I placed 61.1% of all my advertising in Baltimore with the Sunpapers—2.1 times as much with the Sunday Sun as with the second Sunday paper—3.6 times as much with the Morning Sun as with the second morning paper—a preference clearly indicating the Sunpapers' lead in results.

CIRCULATION NOTES

Walter S. Lang, the last member of the fighting family of the Houston Chronicle, has returned from overseas service and resumed his former position of superintendent of the mailing department.

Prizes aggregating $150 in cash and $250 in merchandise will be awarded at the cooking and home-making school being conducted in St. Paul, Minn., by the Dispatch-Pioneer Press.

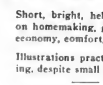
The St. Paul Daily News offers prizes for children of school age who will draw Thanksgiving pictures for the children's page.

The newsboys of Houston, Tex., will have reason to rejoice on Thanksgiving Day, for the social workers of the First Baptist church have invited them to a big dinner at the church.

The St. Paul Daily News offers prizes to children identifying the largest number of trees in the vicinity in a contest being conducted by the public library.

The Raleigh (N. C.) Times last week distributed a large part of its circulation on several days by airplane. John A. Park, publisher of the Times, accompanied the aviator on one trip.

John A. McNeil, former circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post and Telegram, has returned to Bridgeport to conduct a circulation campaign for the Post Publishing Company.



A committee of nine men and women has been appointed to formulate plans for the revival of the St. Paul Newsboys' Club.

Fred S. Stone, circulation manager of the Brooklyn Citizen, has been made chairman of the membership committee of the New York State Circulation Managers Association.

H. V. Parratt has been appointed circulation director of the Oakland (Cal.) Enquirer. Mr. Parratt was formerly with the Enquirer as a youngster and since then has been on the Alameda (Cal.) Argus, Oakland Tribune, El Paso Times, San Antonio Express and Salina Daily Union.

The approaching marriage of Patrick M. Derrick and Miss Elizabeth Ruth Lambert, both of High Point, N. C., is announced. Mr. Derrick is circulation manager of the High Point (N. C.) Enterprise.

J. Harrison Platt, Milwaukee, circulation manager for a Chicago newspaper, has been taken to an Escanaba (Mich.) hospital suffering from concussion of the brain. He was thrown from the sidecar of a motorcycle near Powers, Mich.

Short, bright, helpful chats on homemaking, good taste, economy, comfort, charm.

WOODSIDES OF WINNIPEG IS SON OF PLAINS

C. G. WOODSIDES, new circulation manager of the Winnipeg Telegram, is a son of the Canadian plains that are rapidly being turned into summer fields of golden grain, he having been born at Portage la Prairie, Man.

C. G. WOODSIDES

Portage la Prairie is only 56 miles west of Winnipeg, and it was there that he received his early newspaper training. That training was pretty thorough as is indicated by the many positions which he held all at one time during the five years he worked on the Daily Graphic.

He was acting business, circulation and advertising manager, and collector and attended to various other odd jobs about the plant. For one year after leaving Portage la Prairie he was on the advertising staff of the Henderson City Directories with headquarters in Winnipeg.

Through the efforts of R. S. Hamilton, then circulation manager of the Winnipeg Telegram, Mr. Woodsides was appointed circulation manager of the Regina Daily Province. Six years later he left Regina for Calgary to become circulation manager of the News-Telegram. He remained in that city three years during which time the News-Telegram changed ownership and name, becoming the Calgary-Canadian, and finally suspended.

Mr. Woodsides then went to the Edmonton (Alberta) Bulletin where he had been only a few months when the Winnipeg Telegram asked R. S. Hamilton, now circulation manager of the Toronto Saturday Night, to recommend some one for his old position. His thoughts immediately turned to the man he had sent up to Regina and Woodsides got the job.

THE NEWS

In Denver and the Mountain States

The name of one newspaper is always spoken whenever the city of Denver is mentioned.

It is the newspaper that was born and made its reputation in the days of the pioneers, and it has held its prestige to the present day.

Now that Denver and the Mountain States are a rich and prosperous section of the country, that newspaper stands supreme in the morning field in Colorado.

The reason is obvious; the interests of the community always come first, and its columns reflect cleanliness and just dealing to all.

Advertisers naturally wish to reach a class of people that are attracted by this type of newspaper.

GETTING STARTED IN NEWPORT NEWS

Company to Publish Daily Record Incorporates, Acquires Building and Is Installing Complete Plant

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Newport News Record, evening and Sunday morning, the preliminary plans for which were recently noted in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, will begin publication on or about January 1, at Newport News, Va. It will be published by the Record Publishing Corporation, with authorized capital stock of $100,000, and its officers are as follows: Allan D. Jones, president; C. G. Marshall, vice-president and editor; D. L. Flory, secretary-treasurer and business manager. These, with W. E. Barrett and D. H. Robishaw, constitute the board of directors.

Mr. Jones is a successful lawyer of Newport News, and a former vice-president of the Virginia Bar Association. Mr. Marshall was formerly news editor of the Southern Division of the Associated Press for many years and more recently a member of the Washington staff of the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Mr. Flory is vice-president of the Peninsula Bank and Trust Company of Williamsburg, Va. Mr. Barrett is a successful lawyer and director of the Citizens and Marine Bank of Newport News. Mr. Robishaw is a member of the ship chandlers firm of Robishaw, Winslow & Co., and has the distinction of being one of the first men in the United States to go in for flying as a sport, owning his own airplanes.

The Record has acquired its own building, and recently took over the complete plant of the Taunton (Mass.) Press, which is now being installed. It will receive the full leased wire service of the United Press Associations for both the afternoon and Sunday morning editions.

ADVERTISING AGENT IS VITAL TO NEWSPAPERS

uct from every possible angle, marketability, price, package, territories for most promising preliminary trial campaigns, competition and a score of other factors.

Successful experience in introducing other products forms a most valuable factor in effective agency service. After the preliminary survey, the next step in many cases is to make up an estimate regarding a budget to care for the proposed campaign for say three years.

Long drawn out conferences, frequent trips with car-fares, hotel bills and other expenses are usually necessary to convince those back of the product that they are in for a man-sized job and cannot expect to make heavy dent in an already crowded market by using putty blowers.

After the prospect has reached the stage of appropriating sufficient money to pay the piper, the second stage of the process is reached. The agent must then carefully consider possible improvement in package, price of goods, and other underlying merchandising problems, as preliminary to preparation of copy, dealer helps, distribution and other factors.

The agent must develop his campaign so that it will be sure-fire or he will lose the account to another who will. The agent can scarcely come out with a profit on one year's campaign His long range success is dependent upon establishing a group of profitable and constantly growing accounts. His success is tied up with the success of his accounts.

If the proposed advertiser is a large concern with fairly wide distribution in many cities, the agent has an entirely different proposition from that involved when the concern is smaller and will only appropriate enough money for a local demonstration.

Not one concern in fifty which has not advertised has a wide enough distribution to be started in the general mediums. Many have tried it and sunk fortunes trying to accomplish the impossible, with just enough breaking through through sheer force of merit and money to lure others to their doom.

Co-operation Necessary

If the agent is up-to-the-minute and the client provides the sort of co-operation that is required, he will when he has sufficient part of his campaign blocked out, through salesmen and special field men and investigators, cover territories where he thinks he can accomplish greatest results.

In these chosen spots he will make his contracts for newspaper space, localized over the signature of local dealers who have stocked up with the goods whenever possible, arrange for billboard, car signs, sampling and any other phase of supplementary promotional work that is decided upon.

Gradually in circle after circle the talent and merchandising organization erected by the agent and the manufacturer will secure and dominate every available basic market for the goods, leaving the smaller and less promising markets for the secondary step of the general campaign.

Not until the product has thus been introduced in at least sixty of the great natural market places and centers of population can the advertiser afford to start on the second stage, the use of general mediums to supplement and glue together, so to speak, all the previous efforts and reach spots and corners too remote for intensive stimulation.

Of course, there are products which may be more easily introduced through the smaller cities in various sections of the country, growing gradually strong enough to tackle the larger markets as a second stage, and then as a third stage made to include the general mediums for general publicity.

Meanwhile the agent is continuously on trial. He has invested time and money far beyond what his commissions will produce until he gets things going on a smooth keel, and is up against the sharpest kind of competition from other agents seeking to get the account away from him.

Under these conditions many newspapers of the country meet this concern that is honesty working to produce new business for them with the icy hand and every possible resistance, dubbing him as a parasite, an unnecessary middleman, etc., etc.

In the absence of the service performed by the advertising agents, I think I am safe in stating that it would cost the newspapers of the country twice as much money as is represented in commission allowances, which are paid by the advertiser as previously explained to accomplish a less satisfactory result.

After years of experience in the newspaper business, I know in many cases we frequently spend almost as much money to get certain new business as we get out of it, and yet many of us are finicky when men in the agency business ask a livable commission allowance on business which they bring us and guarantee.

If the agents handled only newspaper advertising they would be compelled to demand a larger commission allowance than they now receive from the advertiser to make both ends meet They make a much larger percentage of the commission earned on other forms of advertising than on newspaper advertising.

To me at least it seems absolutely ridiculous that we should seek to prevent the growth of an effective service between us and our customers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

BY JASON ROGERS

Q.—By what right do you assume the privilege of making up lists of newspapers and recommending their use by advertisers in preference to others? You are not a space buyer nor an agent. I can prove the overwhelming superiority of our newspaper over the one you have recommended and know of other errors in your list. A. A. A.

A.—This is merely the growl of one of the 1,800 daily newspapers of the country that I could not include is my list of 308 newspapers listed for the purpose of showing national advertisers the effectiveness of newspaper advertising.

If I had included every newspaper in the country, which I would like to have done, my list would have been too cumbersome to drive home my point. I started out to show how many newspapers could be used for certain combined rates.

If A. A. A. would but take the trouble to read my article in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of August 28, and to make himself familiar with the fight I have been making for many years in the interest of newspaper advertising for all newspapers he might forget selfish desires long enough to see straight.

NEW YORK STATE DAILY NEWSPAPERS

THE community spirit of almost all cities is reflected to a greater or less extent by the daily newspapers they support.

Most cities are cities because they are made up of people who are never satisfied—not dissatisfied, you understand, but not satisfied—people who are continually striving for more, for newer, for better things.

They have the community spirit—the glad hand for the stranger—the help one another idea—the get-together-and-boost feeling—and such feeling is reflected by one or more of the daily newspapers published in each such city.

Take, for instance, these daily newspapers published in the state of New York.

They are representative, progressive, alert, willing and anxious to welcome and cooperate with the stranger within their gates. They know and understand that this spirit, put into practice, puts their cities on the map.

These daily newspapers are joined together in an invitation to national advertisers to take advantage of the service they have to offer---to create and maintain markets---to make local advertising out of national advertising---to link up with "home folks" and become acquainted.

Look at these circulation figures. Look at these rates. Realize that, as merely bulk circulation this is a good buy---and with the cooperative spirit back of this circulation it is good business.

FACING THE SITUATION

THE special meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, convened by call of President Glass at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday, is as important to the American people as a whole as an extraordinary session of the Congress.

Indeed the problem which brings together at this time the publishers of the country may well be considered a national problem, for it has to do with a situation which threatens the very existence of hundreds of newspapers and the welfare of every newspaper in the land.

Readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER have been informed, week by week, of the growing seriousness of the newsprint shortage. They are aware that the consumption, throughout the year has been greater than the production, depleting to the vanishing point normal reserve stocks. It has been made plain to all that unless the publishers of the country should adopt common policies of conservation, thus arbitrarily reducing consumption, a paper famine was inevitable.

Yet, broadly speaking, the publishers have failed thus far to adopt common policies of curtailment. There has been a tendency among them to view the situation as one calling only for individual action. In other words, the publisher who believed that he had provided for his own newsprint requirements did not feel that the difficulties of his contemporaries were in any sense his affairs. This short-sighted attitude could but lead to such a condition as now confronts the whole body of publishers.

This narrow view, of course, has not controlled all publishers with an assured supply of paper. The Chicago Tribune, having its own mills and not under compulsion as to restriction in the use of paper, sets an admirable example by limiting the sizes of week-day issues to an arbitrary standard. This policy involved for the Tribune the omission from its issue of November 6 of 61 columns of advertising.

The Tribune calls upon its advertisers to temporarily entail space in the common interest, in order that all advertisers may be able to secure representation. This spirit and policy of patronage somewhat rare in the conduct of newspapers in the past, but after all amounting only to sensible discretion just now.

The special meeting of the A. N. P. A. should result in the adoption of definite conservation policies, on a standardized schedule, by every member of the organization. Ways and means must be found by which the service value of our newspapers shall not be seriously impaired, while permitting material reduction in the amount of paper consumed. As all costs are still mounting, revenues must be increased. This means three-cent papers and it means substantially higher rates for advertising.

Sensible restriction of sizes of issues, carried out in good faith by the dominant publishers of the country, will relieve the present shortage of paper. And that is an end which must be achieved without delay if disaster is to be avoided.

JAMES O'SHAUGHNESSY suggests that newspapers convert their congressmen to the plan of paid advertising for all Government Departments—to an advertising policy on a business basis and divorced from politics. Such a governmental policy must be formulated if we are to keep step with world progress. But experience shows that it will come about only through convincing the representatives in the Congress of its wisdom and necessity. The present Congress does not believe in a paid advertising policy for Uncle Sam. Its members have not considered the matter to be one of importance, or as touching national interests in any broad way. They should be educated by our newspapers.

ONE "bad actor" among a local group of publishers usually prevents the others from getting together as to common policies of paper economies. This presents a psychological problem—and the answer is: Ignore the waster and "get together."

A SIGN OF THE TIMES

THE Convention of Clients of the George Batten Company, held in New York Thursday and Friday of last week, at the Hotel Commodore, brought together representatives of 89 business organizations engaged in non-competitive lines.

The Batten clients represented fourteen states and one territory of the United States. New York stood at the head of the list with 31 firms, 22 of these in New York City; Massachusetts was second, with 24; Pennsylvania third, with 12.

The program of the convention was admirably conceived and carried out without a hitch. Morning and afternoon executive sessions were held on both days, and addresses were made by fifteen different captains of business and specialists in merchandising and advertising. The subjects were timely and vital, having to do with problems of the hour—problems which call for super-common sense in those dealing with them. Few of these addresses dealt with advertising primarily, while all of them had to do with advertising in its relations to industrial and business development.

A striking feature of the convention was the exhibit of products by clients of the Batten clients. This exposition was the most extensive ever made of nationally advertised goods—no two lines of a competitive character. It was a visualization of the manufactured products of leading American firms never to be forgotten by those fortunate enough to inspect it.

It would be difficult to properly appraise the full significance of this convention. It brought together in friendly conference men who spend many millions of dollars every year in advertising their products—men who think in big figures, who have made mistakes in their past and will probably make other mistakes in the future, but with whom errors of judgment or of policy are but transient things. These men came to this convention to give and to receive. They have long since outgrown the notion that a good idea must be guarded with all the resources of selfish secrecy. They came to exchange experiences and views, frankly, for the common good of all.

It will occur to some that this convention of clients was a master stroke of advertising by the Batten Company. That is true. But it is due to the executives of this firm to say that they were not governed by this consideration in the conception and realization of the plan. The broader objectives —the advancement of the interests of American business and the furthering of closer relations between men having common problems to solve—controlled the Batten Company, and were not at any time side-tracked.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER congratulates William H. Johns and his able associates on the splendid success of this new idea, which marks an important forward step in American advertising. It was a big conception, realized in a big way.

STAY out of the spot market for newsprint—if you can. If you can't, be prepared for shocks.

"TO START WITH A CLEAN SLATE"

THE exclusive publication in last week's issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER of the sales policy of the International Paper Company for 1920 has aided in clarifying to some extent the problem of contract relations between the big corporation and its customers for the coming year. And, as the sales policy of the International usually serves as a model for many other paper manufacturers, it may be assumed that this announcement will indirectly affect a majority of users of newsprint.

The International desires to start 1920 with a clean slate. To that end the corporation will require from patrons who desire to make contracts for a specified tonnage for the year a waiver of all claims arising from price changes involved in proceedings by the Attorney-General under the terms of the agreement of November 26, 1917. Patrons preferring to make new contracts subject to this agreement may do so, but it is pointed out that when the agreement shall end—doubtless within a few months—new contracts may be made "if when then tonnage available." Publishers will not fail to see the force of this argument in favor of a straight annual contract.

The price fixed for the first quarter of 1920 is $4.50 at the mill, subject to further advance at the beginning of each new quarter, will hardly prove a shock to publishers who have followed the price trends of late. While the price is high, and will force newspapers to increase selling prices and advertising rates as well as to curtail sizes of issues, many publishers would feel like accepting it without complaint if it meant an adequate allotment of tonnage for the year. If the International's sales policy should provide for the allotment of the entire product of its mills on a pro-rated basis, safeguarding against the diversion of large quantities to speculative markets, the company's customers would doubtless feel that it had made a real effort to protect their supplies.

The practicability of the sales policy, however, throws little light on the question of the amount of tonnage which will be sold to customers. Apparently this point is to be decided by individual negotiation, rather than by any definite plan of prorating the output. It is to be hoped, however, that this policy will not rule, but that the company will show impartiality in fixing allotments.

It is good news that the company plans to open for new contracts during 1920, many machines which were intended to be run on other grades. This indicates a definite prospect of an increased output, through which the company hopes to be able to furnish all of its customers an ample supply for vital needs. Customers are asked to reduce the use of paper to a minimum between now and the end of this year, and to observe the strictest economies in the new year. This is sound advice, although it has an odd sound in a sales talk.

If these were not, indeed, strange times, it would be remarked that this sales-policy of the International reads less like a letter to customers than as a proclamation of policy and a promulgation of regulations for the citizens of a conquered city by the occupying military power. But—these are strange times!

EVERY newspapermaker will feel a natural thrill in the success of the Navy's big advertising campaign—for, while it will run until the end of November, its success is already assured. That the measure of this success shall be impressive of itself will be the aim of all newspapers from now until the close of the campaign to actively aid, through editorials, in "selling the Navy" to the young men of the nation.

AFTER an interval of uncertainty, American ideals are in the saddle. Reds and radicals are seeking cover. The clean-up which the Federal government has undertaken will have salutary results. It will help to purge the ranks of organized labor of anarchists, operating under the cloak of unionism to defy and overthrow government. It will help industrial peace and prosperity.

Mr. Lloyd's last newspaper work was in the capacity of librarian for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, a position he held two years.

John Nevin, until recently Washington correspondent for the International News Service, is now doing publicity work for Bernard Baruch in Washington.

"Bill" Nye, State Department man of the International News Service, organized the American party that met the Prince of Wales at the Canadian border and accompanied him to Washington on Monday.

THE BUSINESS OFFICE

George A. Mixer, advertising manager of the Milwaukee Sentinel for five years, resigned to become general manager of the Tribune Company, which was organized recently to publish the Tribune, a weekly newspaper devoted to the north and northwest sides of the city.

Miss Ruth Hartley, cashier of the Cohoes (N. Y.) Dispaten, will be married soon to William Kenoran. Miss Hartley has been connected with the Dispatch for some time and is personally known to many of the paper's foreign advertisers and advertising agents.

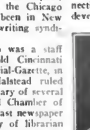
Hart N. Cardoza, formerly with the Gray Motor Company, has joined the service department of the St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch-Pioneer Press, under the direction of Luther Weaver.

A. H. Backus, of Pierce, has succeeded Lloyd Swain as business manager of the Columbus (Neb.) Telegram. Mr. Swain has moved to the Pacific Coast.

Loring G. Peele, who has been lately connected with the Latin American section of the New York Sun and who was formerly advertising manager at the Mereantile Bank of the Americas, has been appointed advertising manager of the Nautical Gazette, New York.

Paul C. Treviranus has resigned as business manager of the Des Moines Register and Tribune and has returned to his home at Milwaukee. Mr. Treviranus was formerly business manager of the Milwaukee Journal.

Andrew Miller, head of the syndicate department of the Toronto Star, is on a tour of western Canada, offering some new features to the prairie papers.



E. E. Beard, one of the best known newspaper men of Southern Washington, has become associated in Seattle with Pacific Ports, a publication devoted to export and import trade. Mr. Beard was the Vancouver Columbian some months ago, after editing and publishing it for fifteen years, the last ten of which it has been a daily.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

William Curtin, head of the Curtin Advertising Agency, Portland, Me., was seriously injured in an automobile accident, November 8.

KEY TO WRITE MUSICAL CRITICISM FOR NATION-WIDE AUDIENCE

PIERRE V. KEY, for the past twelve years music editor of the New York World, has resigned that connection and is devoting himself to the development of a New York music letter conceived on broad lines. Already many newspapers have contracted for the publication of this new feature.

PIERRE V. KEY

Mr. Key has won distinction as a musical critic who is able to "get over" his points to the reader who knows but little of musical terms. He write musical criticism in plain English, yet with distinction and authority. His style is chatty, lucid and unstilted.

Mr. Key's long newspaper experience in general reportorial and executive capacities doubtless accounts for his ability to get the popular angle of things musical.

New York is now the music capital of the world, and throughout the country there is a marked reawakening of interest in music and musical events and artists. In his letter he will interpret musical life and happenings in New York for the rest of the country, and sees in this weekly letter an opportunity to contribute greatly to the healthy growth of musical culture in America.

Mr. Key's music letter will be scrupulously free from "press agenting." It will turn the spotlight on artists, of course, but only when their work clearly entitles them to appreciation. He gathers personally his own material and preserves the attitude of eritic and chronicler, without bias.

"The opportunity offered to write for so vast a national audience is one impossible to resist," says Mr. Key, "and though I relinquish my long-held World post with regret, there is compensation in what is unquestionably a broader field."

Edward S. Moffat is the new advertising manager of the Universal Film Corporation, New York, succeeding Nat. G. Rothstein. For the past two years Mr. Moffat has been in charge of advertising for the Jewel productions, and previously was connected with the Aeolian Company, Street & Finney, Calkins & Holden and Frank Seaman, Inc.

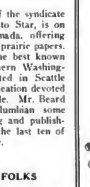
Miss Amie B. Brunn has resigned as advertising manager for the department store of Lipman, Wolfe & Co., of Portland, Ore., to join the advertising agency of Botsford, Constantine & Taylor of the same city. She is succeeded with the Portland department store by David E. Levy, of St. Louis, former advertising manager of the Stix-Baer & Fuller Dry Goods Company and B. Nugent & Bros.

Ulric C. Jones, for several years connected with the advertising department of the New Orleans Item, and later director of advertising for the Hibernia Bank & Trust Company, has joined the Chambers Advertising Agency staff in New Orleans.

Alfred Stephen Bryan has resigned from the advertising agency of Sherman & Bryan, Inc., New York, and has opened a copy service office at 665 Fifth Avenue, New York. He will maintain close relations with the Sherman & Bryan agency and with his old clients, whose copy he will continue to write. William Denny has been elected vice-president of the Sherman & Bryan agency, succeding Mr. Bryan.

J. B. Hazen, for several years in charge of the merchandising service department of the Hearst newspapers in Boston, and more recently with Maclean's Magazine, Toronto, has become associated with the Hamilton Advertising Agency, Hamilton, Canada.

E. C. Auld, of Chicago, familiarly hailed as "Doc," now has space in some fifteen newspapers to sell instead of one, having become associated of the Western office of Knill-Burke, Inc. Mr. Auld, who has been looking after the Western advertising interests of Eastern newspapers for the past few years, resigns from the New York World to take up his new work. He formerly reprcsented the New York Evening Journal and later the Boston American.



Harry E. Meyers, of Chicago, has joined the John Ring, Jr., Advertising Company, St. Louis, Mo. Meyers was general secretary of the board of the 1917 A. A. C. W. convention in St. Louis.

DO PUBLISHERS FAVOR OUT-OF-TOWN ADS?

Local Retail Merchants Should Protest Against Preferred Space Given Foreign Advertisers, Drygoods Man Declares

LANSING, MICH., Nov. 7.—Collective protest by local retail merchants against favoritism which, he said, was habitually shown by newspapers to foreign or national advertisers in the way of preferred positions, was urged by G. E. Martin, advertising manager of Gilmore Brothers, Kalamazoo, in an address here before the convention of the Retail Drygoods Association. He said:

"No doubt many members of this association have sought without satisfactory solution the reason for the very apparent favoritism shown by newspapers to 'foreign' advertisers. The merchant has learned that it is almost impossible in many papers to secure a desired position for his ads, even occasionally.

"Today he has an ad for some exceptionally fine merchandise that will make especial appeal to what is termed the society people of his city, and requests a position for it on the society page. When the paper comes out he finds ads for hair tonics, beauty creams, cooking oils, etc., on the woman's page, while his announcement appears next to the sporting page or the comics.

Say They Pay More

"The papers assert that these 'foreign' advertisers pay for preferred position. In some instances where the paper is sufficiently strong to make it stick, they do. In many cases they simply refuse to use space unless they have the cream —first following or alongside pure reading matter or top of column on some specified page.

"Local advertisers in most cases, pay dollars to newspapers where 'foreign' advertisers pay dimes, but are usually required to take 'run of paper' positions.

"The local advertiser cannot go elsewhere and advertise his wares. Only individual and collective protest will improve this condition, and this association can do its members immense benefit by seeking and applying a remedy that will cure this complaint."

In Bad Company

The speaker also protested against the habit which he said many newspapers had of placing objectionable advertising next that of reputable local business establishments.

"Many possible customers have been led to turn away from your advertisements because of the disgust they .felt at some other ad which was on the same page with it, and the character of the ads which are placed next, or near to, should be a source of deep concern to any thoughtful retail advertiser," he said.

"If the landlord of the building in which your store is located took in as tenants saloons, quacks, fake mining concerns, bucket shops and other undesirable neighbors you would strenuously object. Why should you calmly allow the newspaper to reduce the value of the space you buy and pay for by placing next to your ads undesirable neighbors? You know an ad by the company it keeps.

"If the merchants themselves will voice their approval of this change and their disapproval when a publisher will not see the light, there will be a more rapid improvement along these lines."

CIGAR ADVERTISING URGED

Philippine Manufacturers Want Assistance of Their Government

In order permanently to establish Philippine cigars on the American market, the Philippine tobacco manufacturers' associations are urging the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the islands to start a national consumers' advertising campaign in the United States, under the auspices of the Insular Government.

For every shipment of 1,000 cigars to the United States the Philippine exporter pays a tax of 30 centavos, (15 cents.) When the law providing for this collection was passed, it was with the understanding that when a sufficient amount had been collected it was to be used for the advertising of Philippine cigars in the United States. Now that the sum of $150,000 has been collected, it is thought that it should be utilized for the purpose for which it was originally intended.

"Bummed" Way into Fiume

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 12.—Thomas B. Morgan, former Pittsburgh newspaper man, has "bummed" his way into Fiume on an engine, according to a letter received here. He went to Europe during the war, and became a correspondent of the Associated Press soon after arriving in Paris. He was in Paris for some time, but finally went to the Rome office of the Associated Press, where he was stationed until the occupation of Fiume by the Italian rebel army.

VIRGINIANS CONVENING AT NEWPORT NEWS

News Print, Advertising Rates and Libel Laws Head Topics of Discussion at Today's Annual Meeting

NEWPORT NEWS, VA., Nov. 10.—Addresses on advertising rates, circulation, the libel laws of Virginia and discussion of other questions of importance to the newspaper workers of Virginia, will feature the special meeting of the Virginia Press Association to be held at Newport News, Thursday and Friday, November 13 and 14. All meetings will be held in the Warwick Hotel, which will also be the headquarters during the convention.

President L. E. Pugh and the members of the executive committee have arranged a program of general interest. Perhaps the most important message will be delivered by W. E. Thomas, general manager of the Roanoke Times and member of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association's committee on newsprint paper. Mr. Thomas has been assigned the subject, "The Newsprint Paper Situation and Its Bearing on the Dailies and Weeklies." He will make a special trip to various northern paper mills and will come to Newport News direct from the paper industries.

Budd and Machen to Speak

John Budd, of the John Budd Company, New York, has accepted an invitation to speak on "Uniform or Standard Advertising Rates," while Edward Percy Howard, editor of The American Press, will admonish the publishers to "Stick, Brother, Stick."

Lewis H. Machen, former director of the Virginia Legislative Reference Bureau, will give a review of "The Libel Laws of Virginia."

M. T. Harrison, editor of the Bedford Democrat, will tell "Why the Subscription Rates of Weekly Newspapers Should be $1.50 or More."

There will be a round table discussion of the proposed linotype instruction schools; the daily section of the Virginia Press Association, the newsprint committee and other subjects on Thursday afternoon. On Thursday night the "Question Box" will be opened and a discussion will follow.

Any one desiring any subject relative to the business discussed will be expected to drop the question into the big box which will be located at the entrance to the auditorium where the meetings will be held.

Brocklebank Creditors Win in Bankruptcy Case

Circuit Court Affirms Decision for $85,000 Against Minnesota & Ontario Power Co.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Nov. 8.—L. L. Losey, Jr., Chicago, trustee of the bankrupt estate of J. C. Brocklebank & Co., Chicago, a news-print paper brokerage firm, secured $85,000 for the creditors by a recent decision by the United States circuit court of appeals at Chicago. The firm for several years supplied paper to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and Star-Chronicle and the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Mr. Losey brought suit in United States district court at Minneapolis against the Minnesota and Ontario Power Company, Minneapolis, a creditor, charging that it had secured from the bankrupt $85,000 which should have been divided among all the creditors. He won in that court, and the defendant appealed to the circuit court, which affirmed the decision.

Similar suits have been brought against the Dells Paper and Pulp Company, Eau Claire, Wis., and the Cheboygan Paper Company, Cheboygan, Mich.

It is believed that if Mr. Losey wins the suits the bankrupt will pay 100 cents on the dollar. In this event, two Wisconsin paper concerns, the Combined Locks Paper Company, Appleton, and the Consolidated Water Power Paper Company, Grand Rapids, together will get $25,000.

Schuyler of Denver has offered a first prize of $50 and two second prizes of $25 each for the best editorials on public health which shall be published in connection with a forthcoming drive of the Colorado Public Health association. The only requirement is that the editorials shall be printed in a Colorado publication before December 15.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

The Country Papers' Predicament in the News Print Crisis

OCTOBER 30, 1919

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: We have just read with considerable interest two articles in the current issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. One informs us that at one time this month there was just four days' supply of paper for print on hand. The other, a strong brief for conservation of print by an individual local user.

The News is a country paper and its voice does not go far. But we are among the heaviest sufferers from print paper conditions. We got one car of paper in September paying about $2,500 for it. Another car received this week of exactly same amount, cost us $2,950. And as our jobber put it, price cuts no figure, if we can get the paper for you better take it, and we are now trying to get another car.

Our big city brothers are strong on editors to conserve, but how can the little go any farther. We print only six and eight pages, and in a six-paper have run as high as 70 per cent advertising.

The conservation that come from the big fellow, and the feelings of a country publisher, when he reads wise advice to conserve and make less, is the condition of a city paper containing anywhere up to 100 pages of oversized advertising, sandwiched in with about 40 per cent of slush reading that has very little value, either literary or entertaining.

If the big fellows would forget for three months the chase for the dollar and conscientiously make an effort to reduce consumption, the situation would quickly make a shift. In these days of paper shortage, there should be a limit to size of every edition and a suspension entirely of Sundays. Of course, this is good theory for the little fellow, but will get no response from the big one. But cannot some one speak up in meeting and talk to the only ones who can do anything to relieve the situation.

At least make it plain where the trouble is, and exonerate the country publisher from doing anything to cause the serious condition.

Detroit Against Organization

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8, 1919

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I note in your issue of October 25 reference to the St. Louis plan of organizing newspaper writers and editors and the progress organization has made in that city.

As a matter of fact the plan of organizing newspaper workers has made little, if any, progress in Detroit. At a meeting of the news staff of the weekly Labor News it was taken on the proposition to organize and a large majority voted against organizing another plan.

The writer was one of two delegates named by the News staff to discuss with delegates from the other three daily English papers the feasibility of organizing under the St. Louis plan. The other newspapers failed to name their delegates, so no meeting was held.

Soon after it became apparent that no other delegates would be named, the News staff met and voted down a plan to organize its own staff.

In view of your story in the October 25th number, I thought this information would prove of interest to you.

GEORGE W. STARK,
City Editor, Detroit News.

Radiating Influence from ILLINOIS

Illinois newspapers cover a tremendous territory outside of the State and exert a potential influence on the Great West.

The selected list here represented, which seeks the patronage of National Advertisers, has a circulation of nearly 2,000,000.

This circulation covers 242 cities in Illinois and reaches the owners of 251,872 farms and the active workers on the farm.

As Illinois buys, so buys the West---Illinois standardizes the West as New York standardizes the East.

If you would reach in Illinois alone 6,317,785 people; if you would have these people radiate their influence in the promotion of your sales to the West, the newspapers herewith listed will carry your advertising message unfailingly.

They have made thousands of advertisers prosperous and if you follow the example of these advertisers, using space regularly and consistently, they will make you prosperous also.

No other publications can compete with the daily newspapers of Illinois in influence and productiveness.

BARGAIN SALE OF I. E. A. MEMBERSHIPS

J. L. Sturtevant Gives Editor & Publisher Readers Complete Account of Activities of Organization's Representative Around Wausau

Reports received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER from various points in the West indicate that Clyde P. Steen and his associates and representatives in the International Editorial Association are still active and are meeting with some success, especially in Wisconsin.

The following self-explanatory letters have been received from J. L. Sturtevant, president and manager of the Wausau Daily Record-Herald. It will be noted that E. D. Underwood, who is referred to in the first letter, is city editor of Mr. Sturtevant's newspaper.

The letters follow:

Nov. 6, 1919.

"TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The latest activity of the International Editorial Association, a very complete write-up of which appeared in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for October 30th on page 10, is an attempt to hold a state convention of newspaper men in Milwaukee on November 29 and 30. This convention was originally called for November 21 to 23.

"Solving Industrial Problems."

"A young man named Ramsdell, who said he was working under the direction of Lampkins, state organizer, came to this office on November 4 and wanted my endorsement of the plan of going to local manufacturers and soliciting money for the purpose of paying the expenses of this convention, which would 'solve the problem of industrial unrest.'

"His credentials were upon a letter head of the International Editorial Association, giving the national officers, upon which appeared a list of Wisconsin members, among them being E. Underwood, city editor of the Record-Herald. Mr. Underwood disclaimed any knowledge of the association and had given no authority to use his name.

"Upon the list were three Wisconsin newspaper men who have gone out of the business, and names of several others to whom I wrote immediately said they immediately repudiated the plan and stated that their names were used without authority.

"Attached to his credentials was a list of manufacturing firms in Oshkosh, Menasha, Green Bay and Chippewa Falls, who Ramsdell said he understood had contributed from $15 to $25 each, which money he had forwarded to Lampkins.

Dingle Sends Out Letter

"Ramsdell, who appeared to be a very honest young fellow and recently out of the service, was very much surprised when I explained matters to him and did not try to do any soliciting in this city, leaving for Milwaukee that night. Yesterday I received a circular letter signed by C. R. Dingle, international secretary, the first paragraph of which was as follows:

"The first attempt in history to organize the entire editorial rooms of each newspaper in Wisconsin will be made in Milwaukee, November 29 and 30, when the International Editorial Association will form its Wisconsin branch.'

"Some time ago a Madison newspaper man told me the experience he had with one of these same men. I am not sure whether it was Steen or Kemp, who came to Madison in an endeavor to organize the reporters and editors on his paper into a union to be affiliated with either the International Typographical Union or the American Federation of Labor. He met with no success, and the last known of him he was seeking to borrow money with which to get out of town.

"Mr. Underwood thinks that from the list of Wisconsin members appearing on the letter head that Lampkins copied the list of members of the Wisconsin City Editors Association, which was affiliated with the National City Editors Association for a short time, but which is still in existence and expects to hold its usual winter meeting. John R. Wolf, president of the Wisconsin City Editors Association also repudiates the I. E. A.

"J. L. STURTEVANT."

Politicians Join

Nov. 7, 1919.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: "Supplementing my letter of yesterday, I have a letter from Henry C. Campbell, managing editor of the Milwaukee Journal, who states:

"I never sanctioned this use of my name, and it is wrong in every way. I am not even a member of the association. I am going to demand that this use of my name be discontinued.'

"Three men whose names appeared as members write me that they each gave the solicitor a dollar to get rid of him. No one of them authorized the use of his name. I understand that they are selling honorary memberships from $1 to $500 and that some of the Wisconsin politicians who ought to know better were caught by it.

"J. L. STURTEVANT."

PROF. BLEYER NOT IN I. E. A.

In the issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER of October 30 it was stated in a dispatch from Madison, Wis., that Prof. Willard Grosvenor Bleyer, director of the Course of Journalism, University of Wisconsin, was present at an organization meeting of the International Editorial Association held in that city.

The following statement has been received from Prof. Bleyer by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and is self-explanatory:

"In a dispatch from Madison, Wis., published in your issue of October 30, my name was mentioned in connection with the International Editorial Association. I neither have had nor intend to have any connection whatever with that organization.

"I was invited to attend what was represented to me to be a meeting of Madison newspaper men, by Mr. Kemp, the state organizer of the International Editorial Association. Only three newspaper men were present at this meeting, and I was soon convinced that I could have no relation whatsoever with the organization."

DIEGLE QUITS LEADER AND I. E. A.

Secretary of Clyde Steen's Organization Blames Publication of News in "Editor & Publisher" for Action

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 11.—Claude R. Diegle, for several years managing editor of the Milwaukee Leader, has resigned as a result of the publication in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of articles on the International Editorial Association, of which he was secretary. At the same line he said that he had resigned as secretary of the association because he had become satisfied that it was to be used to fight union labor.

The possibility that the articles in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER were to be made public in Milwaukee by the "capitalist" newspapers as an effort to discredit Socialism was given as another reason. In Mr. Diegle's letter of resignation he says:

"The publication in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of almost a page and a half of stories on the International Editorial Association, in which grains of truth were intermingled with pounds of innuendos, with the intent to show that a perfectly honest and four-square organization was attempting to finance itself by the use of dishonest methods, has cast a reflection on me as secretary of the organization, which the above-mentioned paper has attempted to stretch to cover the Leader.

"I have already tendered my resignation to the organization, not because I placed any credence in the reports of shady practices, but because I considered that the organization had prepared a program to fight the Newspaper Writers' Union—perfectly legitimate in the eyes of big business, but absolutely against the principles in which I believe.

"I want no possibility of any attack against me in the capitalistic press to be used as propaganda against Socialist principles, publication or political candidates, and I believe that this is the best means to remove that possibility."

Berger Denies I. E. A. Connection

WARREN, PA., Nov. 11.—Chare F. Berger, whose name appears on the letterheads of the International Editorial Association, of which C. P. Steen is managing director, has made the following statement:

"I am not president of the International Editorial Association, and I have nothing to do with its affairs."

[EDITORIAL NOTE—When the International Editorial Association was formed in Chicago on May 16-18, 1919, according from the National Association of City Editors, Mr. Berger was elected president. The above message is the first news EDITOR & PUBLISHER has received that Mr. Berger has quit the I. E. A.]

LEADS THE WHOLE WORLD

"The Sunday Times" Beat All the World's Newspapers in Volume of Advertising and News Matter Printed Sunday, October 26, as It Has Done Without Exception for Many Months.

Not only did the gigantic and unparalleled volume of advertising published in the Los Angeles Times on Sunday, October 26, 1919, exceed that printed by any other newspaper on earth, but on that date The Times printed, as it does every Sunday in the year, a greater volume of news, illustrations and feature articles than any other newspaper in America. IT WAS AND IS FIRST.

The steady, consistent increase in The Times' advertising patronage is positive proof that every copy of this paper is a selling force, and that the great majority of business men and merchants recognize that there is no more certain way of reducing the cost of distribution than by persistently exploiting their goods in The Times' advertising columns.

The following tabulation, containing the figures of the number of inches of advertising in the newspaper making the best advertising record on Sunday, October 26, 1919, in each of the several cities named, demonstrates The Times' surpassing superiority more eloquently than words can portray it:

	Agate lines.
Los Angeles Times	185,384
Chicago Tribune	90,497
New York Times	165,965
Detroit Free Press	182,000
Pittsburgh Dispatch	139,306
St. Louis Post-Dispatch	154,360
Philadelphia Inquirer	141,695
San Francisco Examiner	141,078
Boston Globe	117,036
Seattle Times	142,136
Portland Oregonian	88,956
Toledo Courier	100,000

That The Times' advertising record of Sunday, October 26, 1919, is not exceptional is indicated by its record for the four previous Sundays, which is as follows:

1919	Agate lines.
September 28	212,119
October 5	226,184
October 12	226,842
October 19	220,008

In its offerings of reading matter and its go-getting array of advertisements the Los Angeles Times is, by the official records, week in and week out, the GREATEST NEWSPAPER ON THIS PLANET.

WALES SENDS MESSAGE THROUGH PRESS

Heir Apparent to British Throne Confers Marked Honor on American Newspaper Men on Arrival in United States

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11.—The Prince of Wales and the British Government, speaking through its Embassy in Washington, conferred a real honor upon the newspaper men of Washington Tuesday night in having the greeting of the heir apparent to the throne to the American people delivered through the National Press Club.

Aside from his presence at the formal receptions arranged by the Department of State, His Royal Highness had no other public appearance in Washington than at the Press Club, a tribute to the prestige of the club and the standing of newspapers in public affairs.

Arrangements for the reception of the Prince of Wales were made throughout his visit in Washington with a view to the maximum of accommodation to the correspondents. Under the direction of Fred A. Emery, old Associated Press man, now acting chief of the State Department "Intelligence Section," every possible aid to the press was extended, beginning with his arrival in the capital.

Almost the first thing he did upon reaching the Belmont Home, where he resided in the capital, was to greet the correspondents in a manner lacking nothing in cordiality because of its informality. He followed this with his appearance at the National Press Club to express his message to the American people.

Foreign correspondents accompanying the Prince were the guests of Earl Godwin, the president, and the board of governors of the club at dinner. The club was decorated in an elaborate manner.

The correspondents accompanying His Royal Highness were: Gerald Campbell, the London Times; Everad Cotes, Reuter's; Warner Allen, London Morning Post; Douglas Newton, Daily Chronicle; William Massey, Daily Telegraph; F. G. Aldham, Canadian Press; Miss L. R. Doyle, Toronto Telegram; W. T. Bullock, London Daily Mail; and T. W. Wilson, London Daily News.

NEW EDITION IN SEATTLE

Times Launches Evening Edition Selling at 3 Cents

SEATTLE, Nov. 8—Unannounced, the Daily Times launched an evening edition today, coming out on the street about 9 p. m. The paper appears about the same time the Post-Intelligencer issues its first edition. The Times' new edition sells for 3 cents, although its regular afternoon editions sells for 5 cents.

Clifford C. Harrison, for two years news editor of the Times, has been appointed night city editor. Gus Stahl is night news editor. A new staff to handle the late copy had been acquired.

COMPOSITE PAPERS IN PARIS

Printers' Strike Results in Several World's Records

PARIS, Nov. 12—A printers' strike here is responsible for the creation of a new world's figure for the greatest daily circulation of any newspaper, 6,000,000 copies.

Following the calling of the strike the publishers conferred, the conservative and bourgeoise papers decided to join forces and bring out a composite edition under the title of Presse de Paris.

The Socialist journals also decided to bring out a joint newspaper.

This morning it became known that the Socialist journals had rallied for their organ, called La Feuille Commune, only five dailies, namely, Humanite, L'Oeuvre, Le Populaire, La Bataille and France Libre.

The Presse de Paris, the composite organ of the Nationalists, Conservative and Catholic press, however, displayed on its front page the names of fifty newspapers as its adherents when it appeared at the usual newspaper hour this morning.

The evening edition of the Presse de Paris appeared about 6 o'clock with the new list of newspapers it is representing numbering 53, consisting of morning and evening journals.

SERINE WINS COOPER CUP.

Gymkhana Also Held by N. Y. Newspaper Golf Club

Hiram Serine defeated A. F. Poinsette, 3 to 2, in the final round for the Cooper Cup in the tournament conducted by the New York Newspaper Golf Club at Van Cortlandt Park, Tuesday.

The newspapermen also held their annual gymkhana at Van Cortlandt, in observance of the end of the golfing season. W. C. Wood won the eighteen-hole medal play handicap with a gross of 83, which was cut to a net of 68 with a handicap of 15 strokes. H. L. Peres took the nine-hole handicap with 44—8—36 and E. F. Teague won the competition over the second nine holes with 43—10—33. Teague also tied with E. B. Davis for the hill holes handicap, but under the regulations could win only one trophy, and Davis took this contest with his score of 24—5—19. David Hall won the putting prize, having needed only 32 for the round.

NASHVILLE STRIKE ENDS

Printers Back at Work on Order of I. T. U. Officials

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

NASHVILLE, TENN., Nov. 12—Printers who walked out on the three Nashville papers several days ago are back at work. The strike lasted five days, during which no paper missed an issue.

Printers returned to work when local and international union officers threatened to take away their union cards if they did not fulfill their contract.

The men had asked for a fourth bonus above their contract, which was refused. They are now getting $1.25 a day over the contract and asked for a dollar more. Since the men returned the publishers have offered to arbitrate, using the regular scale as a basis and this the printers have refused. The printers say they will "get theirs" when the next contract is made January 1, 1921.

F. A. Robertson Buys Interest

WASHINGTON, N. J.,N ov. 12.—Charles L. Stryker, for almost 32 years sole owner of the Star, has sold a large interest in the property to Frank A. Robertson. The later, who now becomes general manager of he Star, has for the past four years been editor and manager of the Fitchburg (aMss.) Daily News. Mr. Stryker continues in active connection with the property. The transfer was effected through Harwell & Cannon of New York.

ARE YOU SELLING YOUR PAPERS AT A PROFIT OR LOSS?

BY M. J. BURKE

(Circulation Manager of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle and President of the N. Y. State Circulation Managers' Association)

THE following schedules show the difference between the cost of white paper at $85 per ton and the income from the sale of same at $1.40 per hundred and at $2 per hundred.

The schedules provide for circulation between 10,000 and 200,000. The pages in each paper are 12, 16, 20, 24, 28. The weight of the paper is derived from the weight of single copies of the Brooklyn Eagle, which is a 7-column page paper.

The weight of other papers will vary slightly according to the width and length of single pages.

The purpose of the schedules is two-fold:

(1) To enable the management to determine what circulation would be the best for the paper.

(2) To give the management a basis on which to intelligently fix advertising rates.

CONFERENCE CALLED IN NEW ORLEANS

S. N. P. A. Advertising Committee and A. A. A. Southern Council Will Meet on November 14-15

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 8.—The first meeting of the reorganized advertising committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will be held here November 14 and 15. The members of the committee are: A. G. Newmyer, chairman, New Orleans Item; J. S. Cohen, Atlanta Journal; Victor Hanson, Birmingham News; Charles S. Allen, one Montgomery Advertiser; W. A. Elliott, Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union; C. F. Gladicher, Louisville Herald.

On November 15 the Southern Council of the Association of American Advertising Agencies will meet in New Orleans and it is planned that the publishers' committee will have a joint session with the advertising agents on Saturday.

RESUMES NATIONAL SCOPE

Glenn Hutchinson Elected Secretary Western Advertising Company

ST. LOUIS, MO., Nov. 12.—The Western Advertising Company, which has controlled street car advertising in the St. Louis territory for the last thirty-one years, has resumed agency service for national advertisers, having discontinued it some years ago. The service will be in charge of Glenn W. Hutchinson, who formerly was vice president of the Gardner Advertising Company, and at one time advertising manager of the Frisco Railroad.

Daniel A. Hill is president, and Ewing Hill vice-president of the parent company. Mr. Hutchinson, who has been manager of the foreign department, has also been elected secretary of the company.

FIRST PITTOCK HEARING

Contest to Break Will Comes Up November 19

PORTLAND, ORE., Nov. 12.—The first hearing in the contest to break the will of Henry L. Pittock, late publisher of the Oregonian, brought by his daughter, Mrs. F. W. Leadbetter, will be heard November 19. It comes on a motion of O. L. Price, executor of the $8,000,000 estate, to strike out three assertions which form an important part of the contest petition.

Mr. Price would have eliminated the following allegations on which Mrs. Leadbetter seeks to have her father's will declared void: That (1) it gives the trustees unlimited discretion as to keeping the estate intact or selling many of the assets during the 20-year trust period; (2) it does not specify the beneficiaries with sufficient clearness, and (3) it is contrary to the statutes of the state and against public policy, particularly because it directs the trustees to vote the stock of the Oregonian Publishing Company owned by Mr. Pittock in favor of themselves as directors of the company for the period of the trust.

Candy Heads New Ad Club

HUTCHINSON, KAN., Nov. 9.—The Hutchinson Ad Club has been tentatively organized with William S. Cady advertising manager of the News, as president; Charles Claus of the Hutchinson Office Supply company secretary and L. Paul Rathfon, director of publicity. The men were called together by George Hipple of Hostutler & Hipple

Editors Petition Senate

DES MOINES, IA., Nov. 9.—Ratification of the peace treaty at once, with the League of Nations unweakened, is demanded of the Senate in a petition signed by Harvey Ingham, editor of the Register and Tribune; W. E. Barton-field, editor of the News; and Lafayette Young, publisher of the Capital.

Want Newsboys Exempt from Law

LONDON, ENGLAND, Nov. 9.—Exemption of newsboys from the provisions of the Education act is being brought by the Stockport Newsagents Society. The agents want the services of the boys from 7 to 8 o'clock in the morning and from 5:30 to 6:30 o'clock in the evening, "with such safeguards as the authorities may deem necessary for the welfare of the child."

Mutual Motor Truck Advertising Campaign In Daily Newspapers

Our entire advertising appropriation is being expended in two classes of publications:

1. Trade Journals
2. Local Newspapers.

By our contract with local dealers, we and they, each spend $150.00 per truck, in local newspapers, making the newspaper campaign alone aggregate $300,000 for our first 1,000 trucks.

As we will not look with favor on a dealer who is not strong enough to contract for 10 trucks, the minimum local newspaper campaign for each dealer will amount to $3,000.

Find a "10-Truck" Dealer For Us, and get this Campaign started.

We are proving to a million captains of trade and industry, thru our campaigns in 65 leading trade journals, that the Mutual is actually and have already created so active a demand, from manufacturers and wholesale merchants all around you, that the dealer will find it easier to sell 10 Mutuals than two or three ordinary trucks.

Send for folders to hand to likely candidates for the Mutual Agency.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Nov. 12—The life of an editor doesn't seem to be precarious enough to satisfy William E. Landan, editor of the Wilds (Wyo.) American, who has gone into company just organized for the manufacture of nitro-glycerine.

Probably Traveling by Mail

A year ago Leslie E. Edmonds, of the Topeka (Kan.) Capital staff, became separated from his baggage in France. After months of letter writing he received his bedding roll, or somewhere in the middle of October. Later he received word that his trunk locker was in New York.—News Note.

Brother Jonathan

Wheaton Valley and Silver Height were next door neighbors that lived to fight; each the sons of stiff-necked sires per stirring up hate's ancient fires, and were backed by press hostility— over, the Beacon, below, the Bee.

And in its middle name," the folk one twin town of the other spoke; and "middle names" went forth and back frontal, rear and flank attack.
ow war was waged in this foolish fray,
e Bee and the Beacon leading the way.

Often amid the battle fog parson, or priest, or pedagogue could rise and ask for a bit of truce with a view of ending the long abuse at the teacher's pica met a surly mood, and the pulpit polemics did little good.

Then, one summer a millionaire named Jonathan Tait came camping there, and Mrs. Tait, who was rather frail, ate fat and hearty within the vale,
while on the hill, where the landscape lured,
she's hay fever was quickly cured.

"That settles it," the rich man quoth,
"We'll stay where health invites us both,"
he liked the Valley, and he the Height, between the two, on a pretty site,
built a costly domicile,
Superb and unique in size and style.

Both Valley and Height claimed Tait; the Bee and Beacon took sides with energy; and "middle names" flew thick and fast in the magazine inserted the scribes at last!
said: "I'm Brother Jonathan Tait, and my 'middle name' is Co-operate.

Every dollar I've got I trace friendly feeling; the saving grace the grace of getting together, but you on't seem, as yet, to have proved that true;
a big stakeholder here today
must object to the game you play.

Bad blood in a luxury of hings bargained for in our schems of things;
ow, the Bee and the Beacon are going to sink their differences, and devote their ink boosting these Valley of valley and hill,
'll swamp you both with a paper that will."

Said, behold! forthwith, the Beacon and Bee reported a change of policy;
and soon the sons of stiff-necked sires used stirring up hate's ancient fires thanks to Brother Jonathan Tait, those "middle names" was Co-operate!

Something to Think About

Writing from the American point of view, Dr. Shepherd, the well-known American correspondent now at the Hague, has sent a Exchange Telegraph Company article which he says the representative of a German that the manufactures printing press me into Holland recently. He went to e office of a certain great newspaper. This newspaper had been surely in need of presses d had been negotiating with American manufacturers.

"I will sell you a press at pre-war prices," d the German. "I will charge you in marks, d the mark has fallen so low that you will ve a press now cheaper than before the r."

The press was delivered within a month d cost the Hollandhrs exactly two-thirds what they would have paid in America, counting freight rates.

The salesman spent three weeks in Little ehland, and when he returned to The ague he reported to his friends

"Well, I've taken enough orders to start our rotin factory full blast and keep it going r a year. That's a thousand Germans we've t to work, anyhow!"—Newspaper World, ondon.

A Bribe We Offer

If K. C. B. will fill this column next eek we will introduce him to a newspaper editor from Maine who knows just how to mix honey and rain-water and get results. Knowing how adverse Kenny is to having opportunity knock more than once at his door we are mailing a marked copy of this to the Pennsylvania Hotel by special delivery, Mr. Burleson being willing he should receive it not later than December 1—this year.

A Message Delivered

A certain English newspaper friend of ours carried the following full-page announcement in display type during recent labor troubles:

"If any reader of the ..... who finds that his local newsagent has not received his usual parcel this week will advise us by letter, a copy of the paper of the date referred to will be at once forwarded by post.

Barney Furay, South American editor of the United Press, wishes us to call the attention of his many friends to the fact that he is still collecting stamps and always appreciates contributions—Austrian issues preferred.

Police! Police!

The International Editorial Association is preparing to fight the American Journalism Association.—News Note.

"Fight" is the wrong word. If the I. E. A. continues the practices reported, journalists, from cub reporters to editors, will be discredited.

A Thought for Novmbar

Clyde P. Steen is managing director of the International Editorial Association.

Things Punch Notes

Punch very gaily notes the following very interesting stories in the daily press of England and the United States. The names of the journals that perpetrated them are very kindly suppressed by the censor of this column:

"The Duke does not wish his name published, is also driving a motor lorry, and masticating sandwiches with his grimy hands."

Perhaps when the anonymous Duke has practised a little longer, and can masticate sandwiches like a member of the Trade Unions, he may reveal his identity.

"The tanisch and motor car piled with luggage remain a familiar London sight. It is more surprising to encounter in the heart of London men and women carrying bags and packs and obvious strangers."

Very surprising for the strangers, we should think.

Another Sex-Problem

"On the peaceful cliffs of Cornwall new motor-cycles are presumably rare. The cow, luring of an inquiring turn of mind, wonders what has come to disturb his solitude."

The Lady-Killer

"Pershing Hailed by Cheering City

"Along the Parkway, school children hurled roses in his path. Two school girls presented him with a large bouquet of roses. "God bless you, my children, and thank you,' he said as he killed both girls."

A copy of the Ulster County Gazette, published at Kingston, N. Y., on January 4, 1800, and which carries an account of the burial of George Washington at Mount Vernon on December 20, is in possession of Edward Hahnen, deputy clerk of the municipal court of Des Moines.

Benjamin Healey, head proofreader of the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press, stumbled over a purse containing $2,000 in small bills. He received a $10 bill, in reward, when he found the loser.

Sloan and Leake McCauley of Dallas, Tex., who attend the University of Missouri, are said to have the distinction of being the only twin reporters on one newspaper. They work on the Columbia Missourian.

By the last Government Report Wisconsin had over $5,000,000 on hand at the close of the year and after expending over $20,000,000

Its public properties are valued at over $50,000,000.

The assessed valuation of ALL property exceeds $4,000,000,000.

Whereof, let us remark, that values are presumably on a 100% basis. THAT is the WISCONSIN method of undeception, its uncamaflouged way of understanding itself.

Almost anybody can draw a conclusion from these figures, to wit—that a population of under 2,500,000 with that amount of wealth can buy very freely and afford it.

There are thousands of things that Wisconsin does not make but buys outside and almost any well advertised specialty can do well in this market. The people are mostly all readers of these Dailies and get their information out of them, including the NAME of the goods they shall order.

INTENSE AMERICANISM IN WYOMING

State Editors Pledge to Fight Bolshevism—Ask Review of Printers' Compensation Act—Assessments

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

CHEYENNE, WYO., NOV. 10.—Before the close of its three-day session Saturday night, at Worland, the Wyoming State Press Association appointed a committee to ask of the next legislature an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act providing more equitable assessments against employers of printers in the state.

At present the assessments for the protection of employees are on a flat rate basis and are not graded in proportion to the risk of the employment. The association contends that the risk of accident to printers is low and that the assessments for the compensation fund should be proportionately low.

The association also adopted strong anti-Bolshevism resolutions and declared for an intense Americanism.

L. L. Neton, president of the Big Horn Basin Press Club, presided at the convention in the absence of President J. H. Walton. The attendance was good, especially from the northern part of the state, and the program was a winner, including as speakers Dean A. L. Stone, School of Journalism, University of Montana; H. C. Hotaling, field secretary, National Editorial Association; Fred G. Marvin, editor of the Mountain States Banker and the Mountain States Mineral Age; George T. Hasbrick, field secretary, Colorado Editorial Association; and W. W. Gail, manager of the Billings (Mont.) Advertising Company and editor of the Midland Empire Farmer. Mr. Gail, at the closing banquet given by the Alfalfa Club of Worland, was a "toastmaster de luxe with deckle edges."

The association members while in Worland were guests of the Big Horn Basin Press Club. W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of Wyoming, and editor of the Laramie Republican, took prominent part in the convention.

The next convention of the association will be held at Riverton next June. The new officers are: W. H. J. Bowry, of the Riverton Chronicle, president; T. F. Doyle, of the Douglas Budge, vice-president; Harvey C. Dutsch, of the Riverton Review, secretary-treasurer.

W. G. Johnston of the Worland Grit, and Mrs. Ruth Ireland of the Chugwater Record, were elected to the executive committee, which is completed by the officers.

THOMSON RECONNOITRING

Visit to Chicago Presages Ad Bureau Office There

William A. Thomson, director of the A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising, was in Chicago this week making plans for the establishment of an office of the bureau there. It is stated at the New York office that a definite announcement will be made upon his return here.

Plans for the San Francisco office are still in abeyance until the establishment of the Chicago branch, and it is thought that action will be held up until after January 1.

FIRST A. J. A. CHARTER ISSUED

Washington University Students Apply for Membership

ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 8.—The first application for a charter under the proposed organization of the American Association of Journalists was received today by President Richard L. Stokes. The application was for membership as an associate chapter, and came from the department of journalism of the State College of Washington, Pullman, Wash. Thirty-six men and women signed the application, with the prospect for more.

The officers of the chapter are: Chairman, Frank Thayer, associate professor of Journalism; vice-president, Miss Mildred Perry, a student; and secretary, J. L. Ashlock, teacher of industrial journalism.

SHEPHERD WITH I. N. S.

Famous War Correspondent Now Covering Reconstruction Stories

William G. Shepherd, magazine writer, whose name is well known among newspaper readers as a result of his dispatches during the war, in which, at various times, he covered activities on practically every front, has joined the staff of the International News Service as a special writer on big problems of the day from the seat of action.

Mr. Shepherd recently returned home from Paris, where he covered the Peace Conference, following the signing of the Armistice.

Tracy Wants Anglo-U. S. Amity

British-American friendship is the best guarantee of the safety of the world, Louis Tracy, British novelist, told the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents and other guests at a dinner in his honor at the City Club, New York, last week. Among the speakers were Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press; Alfred G. Gardiner, formerly editor of the London Daily News; Colonel John A. Cooper, of the Canadian Bureau of Information; W. R. Bullock, of the London Times; W. W. Davies, representing Australian newspapers, and C. Lonis Hind.

PRACTICAL STUDY PLAN FOR AD CLUBS

St. Paul Criers Launch "$10,000,000 Corporetion" and Will Plan International Advertising and Sales Campaign

ST. PAUL, NOV. 12—Every member of the Town Criers Club is a stockholder and director in the newly re-organized Minnesota Crockery Company, a $10,000,000 corporation, and will have voice and vote in a gigantic plan for an advertising campaign of international scope which is being projected.

This does not mean that the advertising men of Saint Paul all are rolling in wealth, as unfortunately the beautifully lithographed stock certificates which each one received a short time ago bear "not negotiable" in small type at the top. It is the outcome of a unique idea for consideration and discussion of a concrete advertising campaign at the semi-monthly meetings of the Town Criers Club, worked out by the educational committee.

Drews Largest Meeting

That the plan will be most successful is evidenced by the enthusiasm shown at the first meeting of the club this season, October 24, when the largest number ever present at a club gathering heard Mac Martin of the Mac Martin Agency, Minneapolis, discuss "The Function of Advertising," as applied to the business of the mythical corporation.

The plan in brief is that educational meetings of the club will take the form of conferences of the board of directors of the Minnesota Crockery Company. A discovery has been made by the company's chemist of a new annealing process by which crockery can be made practically unbreakable. This, of course, will revolutionize the business—old methods of distributing through jobbers will be inadequate and an extensive advertising campaign must be considered.

Trade Conditions Outlined

This was the condition at the time of the first "directors' meeting." Mr. Martin outlined trade conditions in the crockery business, explained the function of advertising and ended with a strong appeal that his agency be given the handling of the projected advertising campaign.

The discussion at the conclusion of Mr. Martin's talk brought out the real value of this novel scheme of the Saint Paul club. The "directors" took such a keen interest in the advertising campaign offered for their approval that the time for adjournment had to be extended to permit a full discussion.

Much of real educational value was brought out in this part of the meeting, while there was ampe opportunity for humor as the pseudo-directors hurled at Mr. Martin all the objections to advertising which had been inflicted on themselves in years gone by.

Educational Meetings

The entire series of educational meetings of the Town Criers Club this season will be conducted along the same line. At the second meeting J. W. Hatfield of the Corning-Firestone Advertising Agency, Saint Paul, appeared before the board with a detailed analysis of the Minnesota Crocker Company's product, with recommendations as to what line to advertise, labels, containers, trade-marks and trade names.

At the following meeting the market will be analyzed and at later meetings various methods of reaching the dealer and consumer will be presented by men of authority in each line.

This scheme of the Town Criers was originated by the educational committee composed of Edgar Tolson, chairman; J. H. Curtiss, G. N. Gunderson, C. B. Lawrence, A. L. Firestone, Mrs. L. W. Harms and H. Matthies.

The Town Criers have two education al meetings a month, preceded by a dinner. In addition there are held two noon luncheons at which advertising talk is barred and speakers on other subjects of interest are heard.

PRESSMEN QUIT WORK AGAIN IN N. Y.

Decide They Will Remain Out, With Paper Handlers and Compositors, Until Their Demands Are Met

After deciding to rejoin the International Union and settle their differences with the employing printers through recognized arbitration channels, members of old Pressmen's Union No. 51 of New York decided Tuesday to rescind its action and stay out with the paper feeders and handlers and compositors until their full demands for a 44 increase in pay and an immediate 44-hour week is granted.

After the pressmen had showed their inclination to return to work, a number of the printing plants endeavored to resume operations Monday, but very few succeeded to any marked degree. Many pressmen who had taken out cards with the newly formed local branches of the I. P. & A. U. were on hand to begin work, but there were no paper handlers nor feeders, while few members of the I. T. U. showed any desire to cut short their "vacations." This situation was followed Tuesday by the decision of the pressmen to remain out also.

Unions Issue Statement

No further conferences will be held with the employers on wages or hours until all the strikers are back at their posts, the Printers' League announced, with the refusal of the feeders and compositors to accompany the pressmen in their return to the printing plants.

A statement signed by eight presidents of local unions in the printing industry, comprising photo engravers, stereotypers, electrotypers, mailers, bookbinders and others has been issued supporting to give a true history of the inside facts leading up to the present struggle. The statement follows:

"In order that the rank and file of the printing trades unions of New York City may know the truth and the action during the year which is up to the present moment-forming excuses for the present existing strife between the printing trades crafts and the employing printers, the following facts which must be recognized before the appeals for a hearing and assistance which have been made can be entertained:

"At a meeting of the Allied Printing Trades Council held on January James Bagley, president of Franklin Union No. 51, was an unsuccessful candidate for secretary of the Allied Printing Trades Council. Since that time the Franklin Union has not been represented by any of the council's meetings and failed to pay a per capita tax.

Severed Own Relations

"Pressmen's Union No. 51 also has failed to pay per capita tax to the council during the year, despite the promise of its officers and delegates to pay same in order that their delegates seated at the recent convention of the Allied Printing Trades, the statement made at that time being to the effect that both the executive board and the regular meeting of No. 51 had orders that their per capita tax be paid, but that President Bernard Nolan refused to sign the cheque for same; that this matter again would be brought to the attention of the members of No. 51 at their next meeting and that if President Nolan still refused to sign the cheque for the per capita tax the Allied Printing Trades Council impeachment proceedings would be instituted, this per capita tax had not been paid to date as was the president impeached.

"It will be seen from the above that these men have through the action of their officers cut out the initiative in severing relations with the other printing trades unions in this city.

"At the instigation of Bagley and Nolan meetings were held in the Aldermanic Chambers and in Arlington Hall in March, at which efforts were made to consider and dispose of matters which rightfully belong to the Allied Printing Trades Council. The purpose of these meetings undoubtedly being to supersede the Council. The latter of these meetings ended in so much confusion as not to warrant any further efforts along that line.

"Whether Locals No. 51 and No. 23 seceded from the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, or whether their charters were revoked for non-payment of per capita tax is of little moment. The fact remains that these relations are severed. Instead of being inside fighting for what they contended is right and against all that might be wrong, they have deserted and disqualified themselves from either voice or vote in rectifying and straightening out their affairs.

Unwarranted Walkout

"The unwarranted and uncalled for walkout of the pressmen in the plant of the Publishers' Printing Company in violation of agreement and in addition to the assistance to work with pressmen who insisted on retaining membership in their International Union and certifying conditions over which is not known to need rehearsing.

"All members of the printing unions were and are in sympathy with the movement for a forty-four hour working week in the printing industry and wages in equity with the present cost of living. Unfortunately complications were brought about by leaders of the pressmen's unions which made it impossible to support this movement without supporting their action and encouraging a line of conduct which have ultimately led to the disruption of all the printing trades unions. As a matter of principle and as a matter of self-protection and unity for themselves but for the entire industry, the great majority of the printing trades unions have always stood against secession. This conclusion was arrived at as individual organizations, not by representatives standing or concerted movement, and the policy adopted will be persistently carried out.

"Cause of secession of unions opposed to secession have in any manner trespassed on the jurisdiction of any of the other printing trades. This is a policy which will be steadfastly adhered to by the Allied Council and will not act in any way to encourage or assist secession by a single organization in any manner. We reserve the right of working for and with those who are loyal to the printing trades and our policy and intention of organization.

"The activities and the attitude of the members of Typographical Union No. 6 in refusing to work with members of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union in various parts of the city, and also in favor of secession and the first move made by any of the local printing trades unions to be recognized by those whom they would work, then decided that they should only work with unions affiliated with the A. F. of L.

"The act and folly of the compositors in working with non-union stereotypers, as was done in the Martin B. Brown Company's plant, and of the latter in offering to furnish and have their members do bookbinding, cutting and electrotyping, as was done in the plant of Street & Smith's, is to be deplored, and will be resisted in every manner possible. The threat of the pressmen's unions to open and operate electrotype and photographing plants is ridiculous.

Opposed to Secession

"As we stated previously, the unions opposed to secession have not and will not attempt to work outside of their jurisdiction no matter what attempts are made to provoke them to do so.

"Appeals have been made for closer co-operation among the printing trades for the present and future. This is impossible until the pressmen reaffiliate with their respective international unions and thereby with the Allied Printing Trades Council, through which medium the most assistance and co-operation can be given. By this we do not want to be understood as condemning the officials in the international unions or other bodies. We do believe that if absent they should be rectified from within. To secede is to shirk responsibility and desert and leave to their fate solid and smaller sister locals. Bitter experience has taught that secession at its best has nothing to offer but chaos and confusion with ultimate defeat in regard to all.

"The pressmen and compositors must realize that the action of the members of 'Big 8' in carrying on their entertainment without or vacation against the wishes of their officers and against the instructions of the local unions, and the action of Nos. 23 and 51 in seceding, does not open the way for co-operation with compositors and pressmen in other cities.

"This is best demonstrated by the fact that an enormous amount of publications and other matter in this city is printed by these pressmen in other cities without protest. It is well known

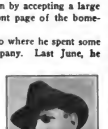
LITTLE TRAGEDIES OF A NEWSPAPER OFFICE



HAL PROBASCO, whose little feature "That's Different," is well known to the readers of more than fifty American newspapers, was "crowned." once.

The Mayor of a hustling little city that he then called home conferred that "honor" upon him and one of Hal's art gems was wrecked during the ceremonies. That was a great day—for the Mayor.

Hal was born in Binghamton, N. Y., about 23 years ago and started in the newspaper business at a very early age, having carried a paper route for the Binghamton Press for two years. It is not known just when his ambition to become a newspaper artist asserte itself but it was first recognized by Charles W. Baldwin, managing editor of the Binghamton Republican-Herald, who swung the young man into his future in a dazed sort of a condition by accepting a large number of his cartoons and printing one a day on the front page of the home-town paper so that all his friends could see and admire.

Wandering westward, Probasco finally landed in Chicago where he spent some time doing animated cartoons for a moving-picture company. Last June, he discovered "That's Different" and about the same time the Central Press Association, of Cleveland, O., discovered him and now he has a studio in the World Building, New York.

HAL PROBASCO

Being "crowned" was only an incident in his life, and as to tragedy, he tells the following himself :

"The biggest little tragedy of a newspaper office that ever happened to me occurre da few years ago when I walked into the editorial room of a well-known Indiana paper and inquired for the managing editor.

"He greeted me like a long lost brother and although his breath was not that of a total abstainer or his step as steady as it might have been, I took him at his word and agreed to report the next day for work as a cartoonist.

"The next day when I reported and inquired of the afore-mentioned M. E. where he wanted me to sit he seemed to have sobered up, for he swore that he had never seen me before—consequently I kept going West."

Hal believes in a pension fund for cartoonists.

OPEN SHOPS IN SEATTLE

Master Printers, After "Outlaw" Strike, Cast Out Unions

SEATTLE, Nov. 10.—Seattle's job printing shops, for years thoroughly unionized, have been declared on an "open shop" basis. Negotiations with the printers, pressmen and bookbinders who went out on strike a month ago, tying up the majority of the plants, have been broken off.

The strike was not authorized by the International Typographical Union and the representatives of the Bookbinders' International Union ordered the striking binders to work.

Compositors, pressmen and bookbinders are now receiving $7 per day for eight hours' work, the highest scale on the Pacific Coast. San Francisco pays $6.50 per day of eight hours, Tacoma pays $6.50. The unions were striking for $1 an hour for a seven hour day.

Broad Culture Is Invaluable to the Reporter

That and Other Points Stressed by Editors to College Convention in Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 12.—More than one hundred editors of college and high school publications held a two-day meeting in this city Friday and Saturday under the auspices of Sigma Delta Chi journalistic fraternity. It was the first meeting of the kind ever held in Ohio, the sessions being held at Western Reserve University.

The speakers included: Victor Morgan, editor of the Cleveland Press; Benj. Karr, of the Cleveland News; Erie C. Hopwood, managing editor of the Plain Dealer; Dr. Charles F. Thwing, president of Western Reserve University, and Sidney Wilson, treasurer of the university, and formerly president of the Cleveland Advertising Club.

Mr. Kerr discussed the "Editorial Writer," saying "we" embodied the personality of a paper, that an editorial is not always the work of one man, but often of several. Dr. Thwing published composition being a composite idea. He cited the editorial that made William Allen White well known twenty years ago, "What's the Matter with Kansas," as an illustration of what a striking headline will do.

Mr. Hopwood spoke on the "Training for Newspaper Work." He said the possession of broad general culture is valuable to a reporter because he must meet all kinds of people and should be able to meet them intelligently.

Mr. Wilson told the delegates that solicitors for advertising in college and university papers should seek patronage on the high ground of business, not on friendship or through charity.

Mr. Morgan discussed "How a Newspaper Gathers Its News." He said he believes there will be a new aristocracy —one, not of brains and money, but of service, a line of work in which newspaper workers do their full share.

AD MEN TO AID HOSPITAL

Wichita Club Raising $5,000 Besides Own Contributions

WICHITA, KAN., Nov. 8.—The Advertising Club plans to raise $5,000 from business men of the city to assist in the hospital drive to be launched in Wichita soon. The following have been appointed to carry ont the project: E. E. Hardwick, Henry D. Harper, Sydney D. Long and Hugh McVey. Besides the members expect to contribute themselves.

The Ad Club is also discussing a street fair while the drive is going on to help out in raising funds. Take-offs on some of the prominent men and historical exhibits, many of educational value, will form some of the attractions if the plans materialize.

EVENING EDITION REQUESTED

Readers of Kansas City Post Make Request

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 11.—Strong demands that the Post establish a morning edition, in addition to the afternoon edition, made by hundreds of its readers, was the unexpected development when the Post announced a contest for its readers for suggestions for improvement in the paper. A prize of $25 for the best letter of 300 words or less, with a second prize of $15, and ten other prizes of $1 each, were offered. The contest is for women only.

Practically every letter sent to the contest editor suggested the morning edition and the letters are coming in by the hundred daily. The Post asked the women readers to tell what part of the paper they liked, and what they did not, what could be improved and what improvements they would like the Post to make to better the paper. The Post requested criticism rather than praise.

that some of the officers of these unions while in this city not only sanctioned this work coming to their jurisdiction, but welcomed it, and also assured the publishers that the work would be completed without interruption.

Have No Sympathy

"New York publications are now being printed in Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Boston, Baltimore, Newark and Atlanta, all of whom are working under contracts which call for a forty-eight hour week, and, in fact, in any city to which it has been sent. The fact that these magazines are of the news variety is proof that the members of the typographical union and printing pressmen's unions in other cities are doing this work and do not support the New York situation either morally or financially.

"To bring about a satisfactory adjustment and to secure the co-operation of all the printing trades unions in this city reaffiliation with their international unions is the first and most essential step necessary to be taken by all seceding unions—this is urgent unless still more work is to be driven from New York City to other localities, where it will not only be executed by union men, but encouraged to remain permanently.

CALIFORNIA NEWS DRAMA

That Presentation of News Overshadows Individuals Shown

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—Probably the modern ery of the American newspaper, "the news first," has never been carried out under more dramatic circumstances than in the case of the San Francisco Bulletin during the last ten days.

Mrs. Fred J. Wilson and her brother, Frank McCormick, were arrested following the fatal shooting on October 31 of Charles Brown, a rancher, whose home is near the Wilson ranch at Marysville, Cal. Self-defense, it is said, will be the plea of the defendants when the case is brought to trial. The case itself is one of the most dramatic that the Pacific Coast newspapers have had to deal in many years.

Unlike the Call, its evening competitor, however, it has not used pictures.

Big Business in Des Moines

The Des Moines Sunday Register has been enjoying a phenomenal advertising gain. The advertisement on page 3 of this week's issue shows that the gain has been 93 per cent in thirty weeks. The figures in that advertisement show also that the circulation gain since April 1st was 6,675 copies per Sunday. That was gain up to November 4th. It is understood that the gain to date has been 8,680; that the average circulation for Sunday for November 2nd was 78,642 and for November 9th, Sunday, 78,778.

One of the distinctive features of the Sunday Register is a new 8-page photogravure section.

CHURCHES IN COMBINE TO ADVERTISE

Largest and Most Important National Public Educational Campaign Is Promised in Spring by Protestants

A national publicity campaign, involv- ing newspaper and outdoor advertising, will be commenced next spring by the Inter-Church World Movement of North America, according to Tyler Den- nett of New York, director of the pub- licity department.

It will be part of an intensive national educational campaign to explain to the country the purposes and program of the inter-church world movement, in which more than a dozen of the leading Protestant churches are associated for co-operation in religious, social and economic work, to enlist church work- ers and to aid in the raising of a united budget.

"The advertising campaign will be the greatest paid campaign ever undertaken by a religious organization or group of religious organizations, and will compare in size with the largest of the govern- ment's advertising campaigns during the war," Mr. Dennett said.

"THAT ADVERTISING GIRL OF PRIESTLEY'S"

The name, Jean Dean Barnes Advertising Agency, does naturally suggest a man, as the agency field heretofore has been almost solely man's kingdom. But in this instance the rule is changed. Jean Dean Barnes of New York is a woman—and a successful woman by a large majority.

Miss Barnes is said to be the youngest advertising agent ever recognized by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the second woman so passed upon in the history of that organization. She has been in the advertising business since 1900.

Ten years ago Miss Barnes had everything socially that heart could desire and no knowledge of the working world. But reverses came in the family fortune and it was then that she showed the stuff of which she was made.

She went to the office of the New York Times, applied for a job and was given a try-out as an advertising solicitor. She began getting some excellent contracts and became so encouraged that she decided to go into business for herself. Miss Barnes today has an acquaintanceship in the advertising field which any advertising man in the country might envy.

By traveling in the interests of her clients over the territory to be covered by advertising campaigns, Miss Barnes studied trade conditions and advertising mediums and met the buyers and advertising authorities. When she is ready to make her space contracts, in her New York office, in reality she is mentally off in the city which she has in mind.

Miss Barnes' most important account is that of B. Priestley Company, of Bradford, England, who advertise the famous "Priestley Cravanette Mohair Suits for Men" and she tells with keen enjoyment of the first business trip she made for this firm.

She had received numerous invitations from merchants and advertising men "to make my office your head-quarters," but when she arrived to keep engagements and they saw a woman, instead of a man, their confusion was most amusing. It was a new experience in the wholesale clothing trade to have a girl in the field and at first it was predicted it "wouldn't go." But when representatives returned to the home office from business trips, talking of that "Advertising Girl of Priestley's", they speedily changed their minds. The result was that after several years, other clothing firms sent out young women to follow in the foot-steps of Miss Barnes, who had "blazed the trail." Miss Barnes also handles the Priestley Cravanette account.

Miss Barnes says woman can succeed in merchandising and advertising, if they will work hard, take their business problems seriously and not get discouraged.

With a bright smile, she tells that the real secret of her success has been her mother, with whom she has always talked over business problems and who has always understood, as only mothers can. When Miss Barnes starts to talk on what newspapers do to help her link up the local dealer with her national advertisers, she waxes enthusiastic and points with pride, to five of her advertising campaign scrap books, filled with merchant co-operation ideas.

It has been truly said that the more a person does, the more she can do, and Miss Barnes is an excellent example of this philosophy, for she also holds the post of commanding major for Manhattan and the Bronx of the Women's Police Reserves. Under her able guidance and inspired by her tireless energy and enthusiasm, over 3,000 women are learning many things which add to a better citizenship. Miss Barnes wears, under the lapel of her coat, the badge of the police department, with the gold leaf, signifying her rank and she is always "on the job" when an emergency arises. Her work is entirely gratis, but she feels that she is truly being useful, and that is to her a keen satisfaction.

LOAN ADVERTISING OUTDONE

Newspaper Boom Results from Canadian Thrift Campaign

OTTAWA, ONT., Nov. 10.—Each successive war loan has exceeded the previous one in volume of advertising done, and the Victory Loan campaign now in progress is by far outdoing the last in lineage carried by the press of Ontario.

The Government and regular advertisers have given a great volume of lineage, and many non-advertisers in the regular way have placed large advertisements in support of the loan. In many cities, the papers have run special editions, in which every line of advertising has been devoted to the loan.

WANT MAGAZINES TAXED

Movement to Make Them Carry Canadian Supplements

COBALT, ONT., Nov. 10.—The local Board of Trade is the latest body to join the movement proposing that the Dominion Government impose a prohibitive tax upon United States' magazines unless they include a special Canadian supplement in which advertisers from this country could obtain space at "reasonable" rates.

This proposal had its origin in Brantford, Ont., where the Chamber of Commerce some time ago adopted a resolution to the effect in question and sent it to associated bodies throughout Canada. So far, the movement has not gained much momentum, comparatively few business men's associations having taken any action in the matter.

Moore Declares He Was Out of City During Riot

OMAHA, NEB., Nov. 8.—J. Harry Moore, reporter for the Omaha Bee, has been indicted by the special grand jury sitting in Omaha investigating the recent riot of September 28, during which a negro was lynched and a desperate attempt was made to lynch the mayor. He is charged with having assisted in carrying gasoline from the filling stations to the court house to fire the court house.

Mr. Moore declares he was in the state of Iowa until 10.30 the night of the riot and did not learn that a riot was on until long after the principal mischief had been done.

Maine Papers Swap Air Greetings

AUGUSTA, ME., Nov. 10.—Greetings were exchanged recently by the publishers of the Kennebec Journal and the Portland Express-Advertiser in the first delivery of mail by airplane in this state. The Kennebec Journal, a morning paper, received its envelope containing the forenoon "overlay" from the Portland Bureau of the Associated Press.

"I hope that this meeting will not be an isolated one, but will be one of a series of meetings, because the more we get to know each other throughout the whole world, the easier will it be for us to work together in the difficult days that are ahead. I hope that you will be able truthfully to say that you found the British people a fairly decent lot. Don't say more than that, because it would not be true—a fairly decent lot who are trying to get on with their job, believing professedly that in their duty now to do all that they can to secure a square deal between nations convinced that we have to get this organization, which we call the League of Nations, going in order that we may avoid in the future what we have had to face in the past."

The party was also entertained at the Times offices in Printing House Square.

SASKATOON REORGANIZATION

Appointments for Hooke, McGall, Hull and Dyer

SASKATOON, SASK., Nov. 8.—Since the controlling interest in the Northern Publishing Company, Ltd., owner of the Phoenix, was recently acquired by the publishers of the Regina Morning Leader, the Phoenix business and editorial staffs have been reorganized. Buford Hooke, managing director of the Leader Company, is likewise managing director of the Northern Publishing Company, while J. G. McGall, for six years accountant and office manager with the Leader, has been appointed business manager of the Phoenix.

Among the changes made in the editorial department are the appointment of J. T. Hull as managing editor and W. F. Dyer, recently with the Winnipeg Tribune, as news editor.

Where a Man's Home Is His Castle

"Is there still a Dixie?"

What a question!

The Southland of today is the realization of hopes built upon the faith, frugality and determined foresight of DIXIE!

You cannot lose Dixie in the NEW South, any more than the higher wages and better plane of living, which are permanent.

Once-upon-a-time luxuries have been adopted into the regular life, industries that convert the home products into manufacturers are here to stay.

It is worth noting that Southern cotton spinners this year have increased their purchases over twenty per cent, whereas other sections have gone behind!

Yes, there is still a Dixie, but it IS now a good business field for all sorts of national advertising.

Investment securities should be well advertised in the daily newspapers this autumn. There is money here for investing. Also, there is a fine new, growing field for all sorts of factory and office equipment.

Live and Let Live

In order to meet present day costs of doing business the newspapers have increased their rates and retail selling price to the reader.

The advertising agent, on the other hand, who is developing more business for us than ever before, has no way of meeting increased costs unless we give him increased allowance.

On November 1, 1919, the New York Globe increased its commission to agents from 15 per cent. to 17 per cent., continuing its 2 per cent. cash discount.

The increase is made with the distinct provision that The Globe reserves the right to cancel the extra allowance where the agent rebates it to the advertiser.

I advocate all daily newspapers increasing agents' commissions in the same way, and will be pleased to hear from publishers doing so.

PLAN CONSERVATION "THAT ALL MAY LIVE" AT SPECIAL A. N. P. A. CONVENTION

Paper Crisis, of Which EDITOR & PUBLISHER Issued Warning Last July, Must Be Met by Drastic Concerted Action—Regional Directors to Be Appointed—Publishers and News Print Manufacturers Work Together

FACE to face with the most serious conditions in the history of American journalism—conditions against which EDITOR & PUBLISHER issued its first warning as long ago as last July—the American Newspaper Publishers' Association meeting in extraordinary convention in New York yesterday decided to issue an appeal to all publishers of daily and weekly newspapers, whether members of the organization or not, to join in a standardized conservation of newsprint that all newspapers may live.

More than one hundred publishers were present at the meeting, for which a telegraph call was issued by President F. P. Glass on Saturday. Owing to the short time allowed for interested publishers to reach New York some of the Western and Pacific coast papers were represented by their Washington correspondents or New York representatives.

It is hardly fair to point to the resolutions adopted (printed on this page of EDITOR & PUBLISHER) as the sole practical fruits of this convention, for what many of those present regarded as its most significant phase was the informal conference between three representative members of the A. N. P. A. and three equally representative news print makers. The direct results of this conference are not of such an intangible character as to be premature for inclusion in resolutions.

Better Feeling Foreseen

Harmony was the keynote struck by President Frank P. Glass in his opening address and harmony was the keynote of the joint conference, at which both paper men and publishers laid their cards on the table and effected a movement which promises to end the squabbling and skirmishing that has marked the past fifteen years' relations between the newspaper and news print industries and put both again on a sound basis, whereby the newspapers will be assured of paper for years to come and the paper manufacturers a profit sufficient to attract capital into the business and thus provide a supply for future increased needs.

The American Association of Advertising Agencies will also be asked to co-operate in adjustments of advertising necessary for the conservation program.

Following the example of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, the A. N. P. A. empowered President Glass to appoint a committee on conciliation for the purpose of adjusting differences between publishers in competitive territories all over the country. Mr. Glass told EDITOR & PUBLISHER immediately after the convention that he would select for the committee men who were thoroughly familiar with the paper problem both on a national scale and in each of the country's geographical divisions.

During a meeting of the paper committee this afternoon, called by President Glass to aid in the selection of the regional committeemen, Elbert H. Baker, chairman of the paper committee, told Editor & Publisher that publication of the names of the new body would have to await the acceptances of the appointees. The committee was still in session when Editor & Publisher went to press.

It was recognized early in the day-long debate that any attempt to set rules for universal application would be doomed to failure from its birth and the decision to let each locality settle its own problems, with the aid of the conciliation committee if necessary, was reached after a short argument.

Governmental supervision of paper distribution during the next year was likewise frowned upon by the majority, following the suggestion by Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, and several other publishers.

Publishers Must Supply Remedy

President Glass in his opening address and in later remarks, reiterated his conviction that the publishers were far more capable of applying the only effective remedies of the paper shortage—reduction of consumption by strict limitation of news and advertising, and increased advertising and circulation revenues to meet the cost of production—than any Government agency.

His views prevailed and the only Government aid asked is that of Congress in passing legislation that will permit the development of the nation's water power and in urging the Canadian Government to repeal the order-in-council prohibiting the export of wood cut from crown lands.

As predicted several weeks ago in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, the association recommended the immediate establishment of the War Industries Board regulations for the conservation of print paper and that the full text of these regulations be sent to all daily and Sunday newspapers in the United States, whether or not they are A. N. P. A. members. These regulations were printed in full in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of October 30, 1919.

Adjustable Ad Contracts

Greatly increased advertising and subscription rates were advocated throughout the meeting and in the final resolutions, and a step further was taken in the recommendation that no newspaper make a yearly contract for advertising at a fixed rate, but make rates adjustable quarterly or monthly, and that the A. N. P. A. send out a standard form of adjustable advertising contract.

Hoarding of print paper was condemned by a number of speakers and was "strongly discouraged" by the paper committee.

SMALLER NEWSPAPERS, WITH ADJUSTABLE AD CONTRACTS, URGED BY A. N. P. A.

FOLLOWING is the resolution adopted by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, assembled in special convention at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, on November 12, to consider ways and means of meeting the menacing news print shortage:

"Paper manufacturers have told us that there is a world-wide shortage of paper. At the present rate of consumption the newspapers are using about 10 per cent more paper than is being produced. This means an annual shortage on the present basis of approximately 210,000 tons. Your committee therefore recommends:

"That the regulations of the War Industries Board for the conservation of print paper be strictly adhered to, and that the full text of all these regulations be sent to all the daily and Sunday newspapers of the United States, whether or not they are members of the A. N. P. A.

"That publishers everywhere be urged to materially increase advertising and subscription rates, and at the same time limit the size of their issues.

"That no newspapers enter into a yearly contract for advertising at a fixed rate, but make rates adjustable monthly or quarterly.

"That the A. N. P. A. send out a standard form of adjustable contract for advertising.

"That the paper committee strongly discourage the hoarding of print paper.

"That the white paper committee and the legislative committee of the A. N. P. A. urge the enactment of such legislation as will permit the development of water power so that our timber lands may be made fully available for the manufacture of wood pulp, lumber, and paper, and we also recommend that Congress be urged to take steps that will induce the Canadian Government to repeal the order in council prohibiting the export of wood cut from crown lands.

"We recommend that the President appoint a committee on conciliation for the purpose of adjusting differences between publishers in competitive territories.

"That the members of this committee be selected with the view to covering the entire country.

"That this committee formulate such plans and recommendations as will assist in adjusting existing differences so far as possible; that each member of this committee be given allotment over certain territory and be authorized to appoint sub-committees to deal with conditions in cities or competitive territories within that area.

"It is further recommended that this committee keep the print paper committee of the A. N. P. A. informed as to its problems and accomplishments, that the entire membership of the A. N. P. A. co-operate with this committee to the end that it may result in the greatest benefit to all most vitally concerned."

About 110 members were in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria when President Glass rapped for attention at half-past ten and outlined the situation for the past few months in the following words:

"I have called you together in a special convention at short notice because of the acute print paper situation with which you are all more or less familiar. I have taken this step after consultation with Mr. E. H. Baker, Chairman of your Print Paper Committee, because there has seemed to be a considerable demand for it, as well as a pressing necessity. The responsibility seems so large that your officers believe it best that the entire membership should discuss it, for in the multitude of counsel there is said to be wisdom.

Worse, Week by Week

"The conditions of the print paper market have grown more disturbing week by week, until today all papers are faced with a shortage of supply, and some with no supply at all for next year. There has been for some time actually an auction market. For the last three weeks I have been in the East and also in Canada.

"During this period I have come in contact with many of the print manufacturers of this continent, or with their representatives, and with brokers who in some cases have lately come into a very active print paper business. I have been told of some bids and of many sales, and I have heard one end of many telephone conversations between sellers of print paper and buyers. I have heard brokers refuse to give buyers options even for a few hours.

"Out of this considerable experience I have come to the distinct conclusion that publishers themselves are mainly responsible for this wild market, and for the short paper stocks which are behind this market. The unprecedented prosperity of the country, with the extraordinary volume of advertising enjoyed by the daily press particularly, has resulted in the consumption of the surplus stock both of the papers and of the mills. There is little doubt that this year's aggregate consumption of print paper by all the dailies will be more than 35% greater than that of last year. There are notable cases where the increase is probably fifty per cent. This great prosperity has brought a bitter with the sweet.

Apprehended Months Ago

"The present shortage was apprehended some months ago by some of the more sagacious and vigilant publishers, especially by some of the largest consumers. In consequence, there was a movement started to replenish stocks and to provide for next year's needs. Their activity in bidding for paper has steadily continued, and with it the price paid has steadily advanced.

"A prominent manufacturer in Canada last week told me he had received an offer some weeks ago for 30,000 tons through a broker at the price of six cents for the first six months with a provision for later adjustment. He said the offer was very tempting, but that after due consideration he had declined it, and has decided to protect his existing customers at a much lower price. He thought that was a sagacious policy for the future as well as a fair one, and who will not commend him?

"It is not surprising, then, that the smaller publishers have lately caught the fever that has been caused by the same prosperity and that they have gotten into the auction market with publishers of larger magnitude. For some weeks they have been bidding for 50 and 100-ton lots, until on Saturday the ruling bid was 7¾ cents, f.o.b. mill. I have been about as bad a sinner as many others, and confess to having paid 2½ and 2¾ cents for small lots in the last week. I am sorry to say, however, that I have not yet gotten the promise of tonnage for The Birmingham News for next year.

"Bad enough of the bad situation of which so many of you know too well. The pertinent question is as to the remedies. What relief can be devised?

"It is plain that all of us must come together in this common council, and use our best brains and utmost resolution for the common good. The general welfare must be considered. Sacrifices are necessary and must be planned with intelligence and fortitude.

"The larger papers in this association have a responsibility for the well-being of the smaller ones, especially. If the situation is not met with co-operation and sacrifice, it is certain that weaker papers will be unable to get supplies, will be forced to suspend, and by the weaker papers I do not mean those of smaller circulation only, but those which are weak financially. There are many small papers that are strong enough to weather the storm, while there may be bigger papers that are not strong.

"The cause of the exhaustion of stocks has been the big issues with unprecedented runs of advertising. The fault is not with the mills. They have maintained 100 per cent production, perhaps more than normal. We cannot look to them for prompt relief. We must depend on ourselves.

"Twice in the last six weeks your Board of Directors and Paper Committee have met in joint session to consider this situation. It has sent out warnings and urged various economies, which doubtless have been heeded to a certain extent in some quarters. But adequate relief has not come. The demand for print paper has steadily increased, and the spot market has rapidly advanced.

"It seems certain that more effective remedies must be devised, perhaps heroic ones. The cause being plain, the relief is equally plain. The sizes of our papers must be severely reduced. But how?

"Ordinary economies in reading space and in waste are not sufficient. It seems to me that knowing the chief cause of our paper shortage, heavy advertising and big issues, we must turn our attention to an arbitrary reduction of advertising for the adequate remedy.

"I ventured at the Board and Paper Committee meetings in September to suggest that radical remedy, but the suggestion met with little favor. However, I am pleased to see that one of the largest consumers of print paper, The Chicago Tribune, has lately reached the same conclusion, and now boldly advocates a policy of restriction of advertising. And this is not dictated so much by its own needs because The Tribune owns its paper mill and is more independent than most of us.

"How can we go about this restriction of advertising space? In two ways.

"First, by a heavy advance in rates. Daily newspaper rates have always been too low and are still too low in rates. Nearly all papers have made substantial advances in the last three years, but they are not sufficient for the present emergency. It is safe to assert that the cost of newspaper production have on an average increased 100 per cent in the past year, due to recent advances in labor and the present advance in the cost of print paper.

Ad Rates Problem

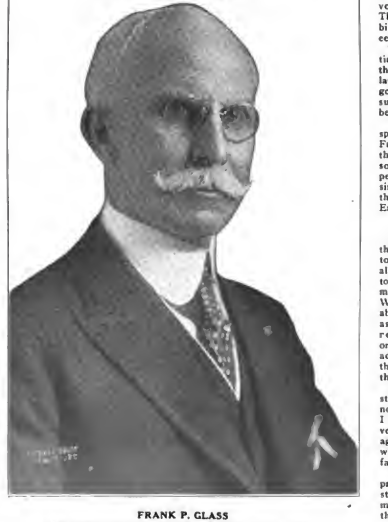
"Is it not plain that 25 or 30 per cent advances in advertising rates are not sufficient to meet the new costs of production? Radical advances should be made, percentages that will check the flood of advertising that has poured into our offices and bids fair to continue to pour during next year.

"How much is it likely that this remedy can be so generally and quickly applied as to produce the needed result. It is going to require time to put it into effect generally, if the papers in the country are to be able to obtain print paper supplies for next year.

"I am convinced that The Chicago Tribune proposition for a restriction of space is sound and to be approved. Every paper should decide and agree that it will cut down to a reasonable number of pages, both week-day and Sunday, by a considerable percentage, and then hold down its advertising volume to the fixed number of pages. This will probably necessitate an arbitrary reduction of at least 33 per cent in the volume of business.

"Most probably this bold proposition will cause a shock to many of the publishers present. It may sound laughable to some. But the emergency is unprecedented, and the result of such a policy is not going to be hurtful.

"Some of us had the privilege of spending some weeks in England and France that fall before the close of the war. We learned at first hand some startling facts in newspaper experience there. There is a marked similarity between some features of the present situation here and of the English situation then.



The British Plan

"The British Government rationed the supply of paper to their papers to a severe extent, but there was always a considerable margin of free tonnage and a consequent auction market just as there is here now. While the Government price was about 9 cents, the market ran up to as high as 26 cents a pound. The newspapers were cut down to about one-third of their size, but they so advanced their rates that most of them earned more profits than during the pre-war period.

"It is plain, then, that proper restriction of advertising space will not work any financial hardship here. I am confident that the bulk of advertising patrons and of advertising agents would cheerfully co-operate with the newspapers when all the facts become known to them.

"That, gentlemen, seems to your president the quickest, surest way to steady this unprecedented auction market. But it is not the only thing that is practical and expedient.

ADVERTISING TALKS

No. 2001-A
By William C. Freeman
511 Fifth Avenue, New York City

During the past ten years I wrote 2,000 Advertising Talks which were printed in New York newspapers, and paid for by them.

"Advertising Talks No. 2001" is the number given to the GUARDIAN ADVERTISING CORPORATION, which started business officially on October 1, 1919.

"Advertising Talks No. 2001" has been printed. This is Advertising Talks 2001-A.

The purpose of the talks originally was to stimulate readers to take an interest in the advertising columns and to show business men how to use advertising to their greater advantage.

I have been told, thousands of times by letter and by word of mouth, that these talks increased respect for advertising and influenced advertisers to recognize the greater pulling power of their advertisements when they made them truthful and human.

Henceforth, all Advertising Talks I write will be advertisements—just, plain, out-in-the-open statements of facts, about institutions, firms or individuals, whose standing in the business world justify their recognition by the people.

Advertisers wishing to use Advertising Talks will be given a number in sequence and under this number several talks may be written—just as I am doing for Hatch, the Salto-Nut and Candy man of New York, to whom has been given "Advertising Talks No. 2002," one of which has already appeared—2002. The second will be 2002-A; the third, 2002-B, etc.

The name GUARDIAN given to the GUARDIAN ADVERTISING CORPORATION, 511 Fifth Avenue, New York City, is very appropriate in these times and it means what it implies, in its application to this corporation, namely, guarding the interests of clients.

Everything any well organized advertising agency can do, the GUARDIAN can do—plus individual treatment given to clients through the personnel now connected with the Company.

This personnel consists of men who have won distinction in many branches of advertising.

As the business grows, other men of ability and force in the advertising industry will be added to the personnel of the Company.

The advertising industry, in spite of the intelligent forces engaged in it, is yet in its infancy.

For this reason, the GUARDIAN ADVERTISING CORPORATION feels that there is a place for it to fill and it will try to fill it with credit to its clients, and to the public and to the business of advertising.

ROBERT ADAMSON, President of the Guardian Advertising Corporation, whose training as a newspaper writer began in his youth (he was City Editor of the Atlanta Constitution at the age of 19) landed in a high place in New York journalistic circles before he was 25 years old.

His ability was recognized by two of New York's greatest Mayors—the late Mayor WILLIAM J. GAYNOR, whose secretary he was, and the late JOHN PURROY MITCHEL, under whom he served as Fire Commissioner.

Service to the City of New York delayed his getting into the advertising business, which he determined to engage in more than ten years ago.

He has always taken the keenest interest in advertising matters.

His business friends knew of this, therefore many of them called on him to advise them in their advertising campaigns.

He has written advertisements for many years and is as good an advertisement writer as any of the best in the country.

Besides, he is a very able business executive and has the faculty of getting at the root of things quickly and with rare judgment.

As Secretary and Treasurer of a $12,000,000 corporation he took so deep an interest in its affairs that he insisted on directing its advertising and sales plans. He wrote all of the advertisements, booklets and follow-up letters—a big job of itself—but he also guided the sales force, appreciating as all able advertising workers do, the tie-up that must exist between advertising and selling.

Mr. Adamson, therefore, is no novice. He knows as well as any man, the short cut to success by the advertising route.

Maybe some of you reading this story will wish him to take part in your business councils and advise you how to proceed with your publicity and sales plans.

He is the kind of man who will take a genuine interest in your problems and assist you in working them out to a successful conclusion.

JOHN A. HARRISS, one of the most successful business men in the United States, gave the Corporation its name. He knows the full meaning of the word "Guardian."

HE KNOWS AND APPRECIATES THE POWER OF ADVERTISING.

Why should Mr. Harriss, eminently successful and possessed of all the material needs of life, wish to engage in the advertising industry and to sponsor the Guardian Advertising Corporation?

I'll tell you why.

He was engaged in a very important and very necessary enterprise during the War. He put into this enterprise all of his great energy and ability. He was willing and anxious to serve the Government. Nothing else mattered to him during the war period except to see the United States thoroughly equipped to fight and to do her part in winning the War.

As we all know, things lagged a bit when it came to disposing of Liberty Bonds and getting the money necessary to keep things moving in real American style.

John A. Harriss, while always appreciating the power of advertising as a necessity in stimulating industry, nevertheless became most enthusiastic over the activities of advertising workers during the War.

He was among the first of the big business men in the country to express his appreciation of what advertising did to raise money and to stimulate the patriotism of the people.

That is why John A. Harriss is Chairman of the Board of Directors of the GUARDIAN ADVERTISING CORPORATION and takes so keen an interest in its affairs; it is why he is willing to finance it in a big way, and to assemble within the organization men and women who have made conspicuous successes in all departments of advertising; it is why he wants to take part himself in the further and greater development of the advertising industry, whose chief function is to benefit all other industries.

My association with this corporation is the ONE OPPORTUNITY that I hoped would come to me and now that it has come I will be able to give advertisers more general service than I have ever been able to give them before.

There is a general feeling that the Guardian Advertising Corporation, conceived, as it was, by business men who have come out of their contact with advertising, thoroughly sold on its power to bring success to industries, will quickly become an important factor in the advertising industry.

During the first month of operation it paid all overhead and returned a substantial net profit besides.

The second month of business is on its way to a duplication of the first month's success—and then some.

CONSERVATION "THAT ALL MAY LIVE"

"There must be steps taken to increase production, while we are restricting consumption.

"How is this to be done? Your Board at its last meeting passed a resolution asking Congress to take such steps to encourage the manufacture of papers in this country as can be done by legislation. There are two methods conspicuous.

"The first is the passage of the water power bill, to free the great powers now wasted in the Government domain. This bill was matured and offered by the administration, and no satisfactory reason to capital that the bill passed the House last summer by a large majority. It has been reported favorably to the Senate, and should be passed at an early day. The renewed activity of your membership with their senators in favor of that measure will bring about action. That act will hasten the building of mills in our country.

Lift Canadian Restrictions

"Another step which can be taken promptly at Washington is to bring about an arrangement with the Canadian Government by which its wood can be brought to American mills without prohibitive restrictions on the Canadian side. I am informed that some American mills are now paying $45 to $50 per ton for Canadian ground wood, whereas if the way was clear, the pulp wood could be brought in much more freely and cheaply.

"This is particularly true in the case of the International Paper Co., which owns extensive wood limits in Quebec, which it has not been permitted to get the benefit of because of that province's prohibition put on after the purchase of the limits. An official of the International has made the declaration that for every dollar his company can save on a cord of wood from Canada, it will give the publishers a reduction of $1.50 a ton on the finished paper.

"That, I submit, is a proposition attractive enough to enlist the activities of this body in influencing the authorities at Washington to make their best efforts with the Dominion and Quebec Governments to obtain the abolition of unjust restrictions. There seems to be a special equity in this program, because the Canadian mills are all dependent on the United States for their coal and their sulphur, on which there is no shipment restriction by our Government.

Time to Quit Fighting

"Then there is another larger and broader policy independent of legislation, lying entirely within our own province, which after all is the fundamental and permanent remedy for this situation where consumption has caught up with production and is about to exceed it, if it is not checked.

"There should be brought about closer, more harmonious relations between the two great print paper interests—the consumers and the manufacturers. The present is the opportune time for that course, and some of our officers and members believe success will follow an effort in that direction.

"I have discussed this program in an informal, unauthoritative way in the last week with several large manufacturers, both in Canada and in this country, and also with the representatives of others, and they have commended the idea and expressed sympathy with such a proposal.

"They argue that the policy of the publishers for years past has discouraged an increase of production, especially in this country, and that the present inadequacy of the mills to meet all the demands of the publisher for this year and next is a proof that publishers have blundered. It must be admitted that logic is on their side. Even in Canada, I found fair and intelligent manufacturers claiming that the course of publishers, there as well as here, had held back the erection of new mills and the addition of machines to existing plants. One manufacturer in Canada stated to me that his company, in spite of the war, could have gotten the money two years ago to put in two new machines, but they decided to hold back on account of the hostile attitude of publishers on both sides of the line.

"Now, gentlemen, it is a fact no matter what the cause, that few new machines have been put up on this side in about ten years, and certainly no great plants have been erected. We would all be better off today if we could have seen further ahead and have builded better for the future. The wisest man will admit that his hindsight is better than his foresight.

Build For Future

"For some years past our association has been engaged in a struggle with the manufacturers, in which we had good reason for believing we were acting in self-defense. Vice President pleads guilty to full part in that policy, and none of your officers has hesitated to assume the responsibilities placed by you upon them in this period. We have no apologies to make for what has been done. Even the manufacturers admit that they have made blunders, which aroused their patrons, because they were human and believed in self-defense.

"However there is a time for all things. There is a time for war and a time for peace. The world is entering on a new era of reason and justice, of consideration for the other fellow. Should there not be peace talk as to this paper situation?

"The deek has in a way just been cleared. The U. S. Circuit Court, acting as arbitrators under the agreement between the Department of Justice and the paper manufacturers, has in the past week denied the petition of your attorneys to reopen the price fixing proceedings. The way is clear, therefore, for some new course of action.

"Another feature developed in the last week, showing a kindly consideration for publishers on the part of a leading manufacturer. When your Board met two weeks ago it was confronted with appeals from a number of members who had been informed by the International Paper Co. that their supplies of tonnage would be cut off for 1920. Your Board and Paper Committee took up this situation with the International's officers in the form of a polite letter asking that those members be cared for by a pro-rate of tonnage to all the International's customers.

"Quite promptly a reply was received from the International's vice-president, Mr. Lyman, saying that the needs of those customers would be taken care of in another way, by shifting to news production a number of machines now making other and more profitable grades of paper. One of the International officials showed me a list of sixteen machines which had been or were being diverted to news, aggregating he said an increased production of 250 tons per day. This development proves the spirit of one of the largest manufacturers in trying to meet the difficulties of the present situation.

"Let us consider the idea of some sort of a peace negotiation which may well end this long period of hostility between the two great print paper interests—the publishers and the manufacturers. Both are here, and here to stay. The one needs the other, and both should co-operate, in a spirit of enlightened selfishness, if in no other. Is it not good business to try to get together?

"One reason why this convention has been called at such short notice is because there is a meeting of the Paper and Pulp Manufacturers now being held here. This fact was not known by your officers until last Friday, though the plans for a special convention of publishers had been discussed for some days.

ELBERT H. BAKER
Chairman Paper Committee A. N. P

"May it not be possible for t publishers here and now to bri about conferences with the repr sentatives of the manufacturers, see if some fair, broad, permane policy of doing business cannot b devised. There are a number of w who believe that it can be don though the details may take tim Shall we not have a start?

Start Right Now

"In the meantime, however, w must have the courage and the firm ness to face our own problems wi the same intelligence which has en abled us to create or to maintain th great properties in our keeping. W should all resolve here and now t retire from this wild market we hav made in our selfishness and in ou excitement. Let us stop our ow stampede.

"Then let us stand together in a sorts of economies and waste stop pages, and let us consider earnestly restriction of advertising space, a well as of reading matter, for a pe riod at any rate. We can make tha period long or short—certainly w can try it while we steady this mar ket, and enable conservative manu facturers to take stock of the situa tion and to help us protect ourselve as I am sure some of them are tryin to do.

Constructive Policy

"And above all, let us, the apostle of intelligence, the advocates of con struction in all other things, get to gether on a policy of construction for the future welfare of our own business.

"I beg leave to say, gentlemen o the convention, that these views are my own, and are not advanced o the authority of the officers or of the Association. However, I believe that the general trend of this utter ance as to an attempt at a policy of conciliation is in accord with the views of most of them.

"Gentlemen, I declare this convention, now ready for business.

Mr. Glass's suggestions were closely followed by the members, who, at their close, voted to make the sessions of the convention executive, as has been the time-honored custom of the A. N. P. A.

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, was one of the first to respond to the call for ideas and in a strong address, he censured the publishers who, by reckless buying and hoarding of paper, had brought about the present situation, and presented fourteen resolutions as suggestions for possible action by the membership.

Mr. Rogers' full address follows:

"Any program to save print paper to provide supply for those without it must of necessity reduce consumption on the part of those with heavy reserves or those who are using heavy excess tonnage.

"There is no process short of voluntary sacrifice by those who have been using paper far beyond normal average experience to temporarily at least come back to a more rational standard.

"No flat reduction by percentage of present use will be fair or acceptable to the metropolitan newspapers which have practically continued the practice of war time conservation standard, while competitors have increased the columns of reading matter beyond any past experience.

"No flat reduction by percentage of present use will be fair or acceptable to the hundreds of small city newspapers which have never used the number of columns of reading matter practiced in the larger cities.

"Fixed standards regarding columns of reading matter for the newspapers in different cities should be reached by mutual agreement. When mutual agreement cannot be reached, the services of an adjustment committee from the outside should be called in and its findings adhered to.

"Within the past week I have heard that one of the great newspapers which by pyramiding its orders during the fall of 1916 helped intensify the panic, is doing the same thing again, buying regardless of price and regardless of whether by so buying it is depriving many smaller newspapers of any supply.

"I am informed that several very large newspapers have large reserve supplies, in one case sufficient for ten months, but is still buying all in sight regardless of price, with determination to be safe.

"There is apparently no way for reaching the hoarders except through investigation and exposure.

"Gentlemen, I offer these resolutions for your careful consideration. They are not offered with a hope that they will be adopted as read, but for the purpose of providing material topics for discussion:

"Resolved that the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, called together in special convention for the purpose of devising a definite program for print paper conservation, to meet a situation of grave shortage of supply, and at the same time one calculated to insure fair and equitable supply to all newspapers, have reached these conclusions:

"1. That the Federal Trade Commission be invited and urged to undertake the control and allocation of print paper on the general lines provided below and that any expense involved up to $100,000 be provided for by an assessment on every ton of print paper used during the period January 1 to March 31, 1920, which assessment shall be paid by every newspaper immediately upon being notified of the tonnage it is to receive. Failure to pay within ten days of receipt of notice will automatically cut off supply. Any unexpended balance to be pro-rated back to the newspapers.

"2. That in case the Federal Trade Commission declines to act that a committee of five publishers, three from large city newspapers and two from small newspapers, be appointed, with same power to act and financial backing as above provided.

"3. That every newspaper be requested to file with the Federal Trade Commission under oath a report showing actual tonnage of print paper used during the years 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1918 and for the first months of 1919 as compared with the first ten months of 1914 and 1918.

Established Tonnage

"4. That every newspaper be requested to file with the Federal Trade Commission under oath a report showing actual tonnage of reserve in storage, and en route from the mill on January 1, 1918, January 1, 1919 and November 1, 1917, November 1, 1918 and November 1, 1919.

"5. That the total average consumption for the years 1912, 1913 and 1914 as compared with estimated production and needs for the year 1920 establish the tonnage to be used by any newspaper during that year.

"6. That in the case of a new newspaper enterprise, or one representing a consolidation since 1912, the experience of three other newspapers of the same present day potential, shall be used to ascertain the tonnage to be allowed that paper for 1920.

"7. That no two cent morning or evening newspaper shall print over 60 columns of reading matter, meaning news, editorial and all other than paid advertising in any issue until April 1, 1920.

"8. That no two cent morning or evening newspaper shall consist of more than 18 pages until April 1, 1920.

"9. That no Sunday newspaper shall print over 214 columns of reading matter, meaning news, editorial, illustrations and all other matter than paid advertising in any Sunday issue until April 1, 1920.

"10. That no Sunday newspaper shall consist of more than 64 pages until April 1, 1920.

"11. That upon receiving the reports regarding reserve tonnage of newspapers it be within the power of the Federal Trade Commission to temporarily cut off deliveries to any newspaper with over two weeks' supply on hand, until all other newspapers are supplied on the equalized basis.

Allocate Reserves

"12. That any reserve supply accumulated by any of the print paper manufacturers, dealers or agents be assigned for allotment to the Federal Trade Commission, to be allocated by them to newspapers requiring it, at a fair price to be reached by agreement with the manufacturers for cash on delivery for account of the manufacturer, dealer or agent turning it in.

"13. That it is the sense of the convention that at present and prospective prices for print paper no newspaper can afford to print advertising for less than one-fifth of a cent per line per thousand in the case of contracts or for less than two-fifths cent a line for transient business.

"14. That in order to comply with the recommendations above specified and with a view of providing some sort of service for the greatest number of customers, that all newspapers be requested to limit the amount of advertising from any individual customer to 16 columns in any week and not more than four full columns in any issue.

"I do not feel that we should be much concerned regarding the profiteering in the sale of advertising and circulation by a few of those who have done so while others were saving tonnage at material sacrifice in earnings.

"Let us frankly face the facts and realize that the excess use by the newspapers of our large cities, merely for profit, would, if conserved, provide supply for all of those without it and quickly reduce consumption well within the limits of production."

Following a short but pregnant discussion of Mr. Rogers' ideas, in which 60 per cent. of the members declared that they were conserving paper, the president was empowered to appoint a committee to receive all resolutions submitted to the convention and after considering them, to submit for approval those which set forth practical remedies for the difficulties under discussion. The resolutions committee was as follows:

Committee on Resolutions

Chairman, M. F. Hanson, Philadelphia Record; Fleming Newbold, Washington Star; E. A. Westfall, Boston American; S. G. McClure, Youngstown (Ohio) Telegram; D. D. Moore, New Orleans Times-Picayune; Victor Lawson, Chicago Daily News; Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times, and Edward Polachek, New York Sun, and E. H. Butler, Buffalo News.

Approval was quickly extended to a proposition to have representatives of the American Pulp & Paper Association, in session at the same time in the Waldorf-Astoria and President Glass suggested the following committee to confer with the paper representatives:

Elbert H. Baker, publisher of the Cleveland Plain Dealer and chairman of the A. N. P. A. paper committee; T. R. Williams, business manager of the Pittsburgh Press, and Charles I. Stewart, general manager of the Lexington (Ky.) Herald, who is chairman of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association news print committee.

R. S. Kellogg, secretary of the News Print Service Bureau, and Thomas Waller, representing the paper jobbing firm of H. C. Craig & Co., were invited to address the publishers and made some pointed assertions.

8 Columns Cause Shortage

Mr. Waller surprised many of his hearers by the statement that the change of so many dailies from the seven to the eight-column page size had caused an overwhelming demand for 7½-inch paper rolls, which the manufacturers could not supply so easily as they could the narrower widths. Many publishers made the change, he said, without consulting the paper manufacturers and the inability of the latter to attain sufficient production of the wider rolls was in some measure responsible for the present shortage.

Publishers who have purchased more paper than their actual needs were severely criticized by Mr. Waller as being primarily responsible for the inequitable distribution of the paper production, which, he stated, was in theory adequate for the needs of all present newspapers. Very few newspapers, he said, know how they stand with respect to their 1920 paper supply, as few contracts have been signed to date for the new year.

Mr. Kellogg went deeply into production figures for 1918 and for this year, showing that the paper machines had turned out this year approximately 6 per cent., or 120,000 tons of news print more than in 1918. Stocks in the hands of manufacturers, he said, would be 20,000 tons lower on December 31, 1920, than on December 31, 1918, thus showing that manufacturers will have supplied to publishers about 140,000 tons more paper in 1919 than in 1918.

He pointed out that even this does not disclose the real consumption, as there has been a marked reduction in the stocks held by publishers and the mills have on hand the lowest possible stocks, there being only 3 days' production in the mill store-houses.

It was brought out that Pittsburgh publishers have on hand a week's supply of paper.

J. Gowlay, managing director of the London Daily Mirror, addressed the convention on conditions abroad, but his remarks were made strictly in camera.

Following a luncheon recess of an hour, the convention resumed its executive session. The conference committees met in the "lobby." Messrs. Kellogg, Waller and Chester W. Lyman, vice-president and sales manager of the International Paper Company, representing the paper manufacturers.

Mr. Kellogg continued his revelations of production statistics, submitting the tables which are reproduced on this page.

He estimated the total additions to news print production during the next year at about 3 per cent. over the 1919 figures and put the expected additions to tonnage during the next two years in the following form:

Company	New Machines	Daily *Capacity	Start	Maximum *1920 Output
Price Bros.	1	55	Feb. 1920	11,000
Abitibi	1	85	Sept. 1920	8,000
Abitibi	1	85	Sept. 1921	——

*Stated in tons.

Mr. Kellogg's table showing production during the last eight years is in graphic form and is self-explanatory. It is printed in this special section.

Discussion of these and other aspects of relations between publishers and paper makers occupied the better part of a two-hour conference in a corner of the corridor outside of the ballroom, and although the conferees gave the reporters a smiling "nothing for publication," there were strong evidences of a most mutual amicable feeling, while several publishers were heard to express an opinion that the committees' meeting marked the beginning of a new era.

Meanwhile the main convention was hard at it in an effort to arrive at a fair and just basis of conservation that would meet with the approval of the majority.

Proposals of a horizontal reduction of 10 or 15 per cent. in the consumption of news print paper met with stiff resistance both from metropolitan and smaller publishers, members from Chicago and New York pointing out that they were already on a rock-bottom basis and that further restrictions would considerably impair the efficiency of their publications.

Hopewell Rogers, business manager of the Chicago Daily News, suggested that publishers individually sign a pledge that they would put into effect their own restrictions to be determined by each publisher to suit his own conditions. However, it was not acted upon.

John L. Stewart, owner of the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter and Beaver (Pa.) Times, advocated standardized sizes and limited circulation, based on paper rationing, to be carried out on consumption figures of one and two years ago.

President Glass and many of the members pronounced Mr. Stewart's suggestion one of the most constructive made at the convention. He advocated that each paper allow a given number of columns for advertising and a given number of columns for news for each day in the week and then set a circulation limit. In this way he said the news print supply of the country could be rationed so that every paper could live.

Mr. Stewart said that he had experimented with increased advertising rates and increased circulation rates without the desired effect. Even with an increase in carrier rates on one paper, he said that his circulation continued to climb steadily and the increased advertising rates did not stop the increasing flow of business.

Mr. Stewart has now standardized his newspapers along the lines that he advocates and says that it has proven a success. The amount of

REGIONAL COMMITTEE PLAN APPROVED

BY A. W. PETERSON
President Inland Daily Press Association

WATERLOO, IA., Nov. 11.—Speaking for the Inland Daily Press Association, there is a general feeling among the smaller dailies throughout the central west that two or three paper mills are endeavoring to antagonize them and favor the large city dailies, which may easily pay exorbitant prices for next spring.

I see in the International Paper Company contract and comment an element of fairness and in it a tone of conciliation.

I have never dealt with that company but I know mill conditions somewhat in other parts of the country and I know that mills must protect themselves. At the same time they should show publishers that the terms of their contracts are perfectly just and fair, just as publishers must show advertisers concerning circulation.

Press association paper committees should be formed to make peace and to be friendly with the mills.

At this time I believe it is the publisher's move and he should show the paper mills that he is willing to economize, if necessary even to make supplements of every kind should be stopped in every city, large and small. Publishers should have the courage to do this.

Perhaps in order to get unanimous consent it might be wise if the president of the United States were asked by a publishers' and paper mills convention, such as is to be held tomorrow in New York, to appoint a committee of four publishers to lay down rules for economy; there to appoint a fifth member of the committee to be not a publisher, but a man of judicial mind and wholly disinterested—say one publisher of a daily of less than 5,000 from the far west; one publisher of a daily of less than 15,000 from the south; one publisher of less than 100,000 from the central west; one publisher of less than 200,000 from the east.

If such a committee were to recommend to President Wilson and he would issue a proclamation requesting immediate action on the part of every newspaper affected, no publisher could afford to ignore it and such should be in effect until withdrawn by the President of the United States.

The matter should not be taken to the United States Congress at this time.

It would be a great mistake if the government should take hold of the matter and insist upon newspapers saving paper under the same plans they did during the war.

I believe 65 per cent advertising and 35 per cent reading matter is right. In my own paper we average more than 65 per cent advertising.

A newspaper should not be made a magazine. Magazines have a right to their own field.

Reading matter should be cut to give only current news of the day.

I wish the representative publishers large and small, regardless of press associations, could be present at a gathering at a central point like Chicago and there invite the mill owners to meet them for appointment of committees on both sides to come to a mutual understanding of what is fair and just to both, and arrange for paper over a period of say five or ten years, so that newspapers would know that they were at least going to have production equal to the normal and sensible demand and the mill owners would have assurance from the papers that they would be willing to pay the price named by the mills and would not find fault if the mills insisted upon having a perfectly ample profit.

I am not in favor of antagonizing the mills or enjoying the pastime of quarreling with them to see which side has the best attorneys-at-law.

INTERNATIONAL PAPER COMPANY PRICE FOR FIRST QUARTER CALLED FAIR

Charles I. Stewart, general manager of the Lexington (Ky.) Herald, and hairman of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association's news print ommittee, said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER: "I hesitate to advise any customer of he International Paper Company as between the two propositions it presents.

"There is of course the possibility that the Treaty of Peace will be rejected and that we will be technically at war until after the election of a new Senate, r even until after the election and inugaration of a new President. However, if the treaty should fail in the enate and the President should insist hat the state of war between this country and Germany continues, we might expect litigation designed to establish he opposite view.

"The International customer who accepts the proposition No. 1, will be at he mercy of that company at the expiration of the Federal Trade agreement, nd if he continues to take advantage of this agreement after January 1, 1920, e can expect little mercy, when the day arrives. The safe course is to assume hat the Federal Trade Commission's price cannot extend far beyond the first quarter of 1920.

"The price proposed for the first quarter of 1920, $4.50 at the mill, can hardly be called excessive, in view of the state of the market. I know of only one other manufacturer offering a lower price, and this manufacturer has a lower cost basis than the International.

"I believe the contracts with the smaller prodneers will be at a higher rate. Some contracts I am informed have been made at $5. This proposal also has the further advantage of enabling the publisher to make sure of paper through the year.

"Mr. Lyman's second proposal is indefinite in one respect, in that it says nothing as to what is to be the guiding principle in the quarterly readjustment. Is the price to be based on the spot market or will the $4.50 price rule unless there is an increase in the production costs?"

"I assume the latter to be the intent of the proposal. Otherwise publishers might as well be in the spot market.

"There is a question as to the ability of the International to make a reasonable profit at the Federal Trade price, on the present production cost, but it should not go beyond $4.50 unless there is a further increase in the cost of production.

"I can add nothing to what I have already said as to conservation, except that it is important that all newspapers in each competitive territory co-operate to save newsprint. Each publisher must consider his own competitive conditions and he must be guided not altogether by what he prefers to do, but largely by what competitive conditions make it necessary for him to do. Nothing can be accomplished in the way of conservation unless there is a spirit of give and take and of co-operation in each competitive area."

Must Pay War Quota

OTTAWA, ONT., Nov. 12.—The Ontario Paper Company, of Thorold, owned by the Chicago Tribune, is being required by the Paper Controller to pay its quota of news print demanded by the Canadian Government for domestic publishers' use during the war. The company had questioned the right of Canada to compel an American privately owned mill, making paper for itself only, to furnish material to Canadian publishers. Last month, Paper Controller Pringle informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER, the company supplied 100 tons of paper.

PENNSYLVANIA DAILIES TO RETRENCH

Newsprint Crisis Causes Special Meeting at Harrisburg—Higher Ad Rates and No Returns Seen as Solution

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

HARRISBURG, PA., Nov. 12.—That daily newspapers face one of the most serious crises in the history of journalism was the consensus of opinion of Pennsylvania editors and publishers who met here today at the call of the president of the Pennsylvania Associated Dailies, E. J. Stackpole, of the Harrisburg Telegraph, as a result of the scarcity of news print.

"A policy of retrenchment and conservation must be adopted if the newspapers are to continue," said Mr. Stackpole, in opening the conference. "On all sides I have heard the same story—that of no paper, and of impossible increases in the price of the available supply.

"There is but one thing for the publisher to do, and that is to cut down the size of his paper, and reintroduce the war economies which he practiced until the armistice last year. We are now facing an even more serious shortage than we did at that time, and yet many publishers are going abroad with the idea that they must accept every inch of advertising offered and put out huge papers.

Larger Papers Biggest Sinners

"The larger papers of the country are continually advising conservation, and at the same time they are themselves putting out 40-page morning editions, huge Sunday editions, and in many other ways using up precious paper which must be saved if we are to tide ourselves over the present crisis.

"There is no doubt that the paper manufacturers are doing the best they can to supply paper, but there is also no doubt that there is gouging in certain localities, and this must not be countenanced."

C. J. Smith, of the Allentown Item and Democrat, said that he has been studying conditions in the news print situation and finds them infinitely discouraging.

"I have several paper contracts which will run out this year at the old price per pound," said Mr. Smith, "but I am certainly at a loss as to where I shall be next year. The paper makers have refused to guarantee anything."

Several publishers said that in numerous instances newspapers have been forced to merge in order to continue publication, and it was the opinion of many of the men who met today that this may be the only solution in the smaller communities.

The question of advertising rates as an important factor in the conservation situation was also taken up, some of the delegates to the conference remarking that advertising rates have progressed less than any other commodity offered to the public, and that rates must increase if newspapers are to continue. Very little hope was held out of reduction of news print rates.

A. Nevin Pomeroy, publisher of the Chambersburg Repository, and one of the oldest newspaper men in the central part of Pennsylvania, said that unless some sort of relief is obtained by the smaller publishers it was inevitable that many of them will have to suspend publication, and possibly go out of existence altogether. Mr. Pomeroy was one of the strongest advocates of a more reasonable conservation, saying that there was no point in delaying the public with 20- and 30-page papers now, when the serious shortage may force them down to eight, ten and twelve pages later. A little judicious retrenchment at this time will preserve the quality of the newspapers.

J. G. Humes of the Altoona Mirror, expressed the feeling of the entire conference when he said that if we do not adopt the economy which we are so strongly urging to others through our columns, we will find ourselves in the embarrassing position of being unable to serve the very persons to whom we were urging such excellent advice.

Returns Must Stop

The system of returns, as taken up again by several of the larger Pennsylvania newspapers since the signing of the armistice, was scored as wasteful and unnecessary, and wartime rules in paper conservation were urged in order to alleviate the present condition.

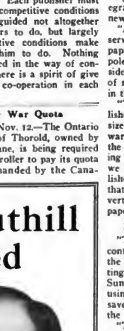
Summarizing the results of the conference this afternoon, President Stackpole said that the publishers were resolved that the only remedy will be the adoption of the use of the paper, radical advance of advertising rates, and increases in the production of news print, which do not appear very likely at this time.

At the conclusion of the conference resolutions were adopted and officers elected for the coming year. Although E. J. Stackpole of the Harrisburg Telegraph, who was instrumental in the organization of the Associated Dailies some years ago and who has since been president, was urged to accept the office again, he deelined to do so and C. O. Long of the Chester Times was elected president.

Other elections were as follows:

First vice-president, George J. Campbell, Daily Law Bulletin, Pittsburgh; second vice-president, W. L. Taylor, York Dispatch; treasurer, W. L. Bender, Pottstown News; secretary, Wilmer Crow, Harrisburg.

New Committees



Exeentive committee: J. H. Zerbey, Pottsville Republican, chairman; C. N. Andrews, Easton Free Press; R. P. Hapgood, Bradford Star; E. R. Stull, Pittsburgh Newspaper Publishers' Association; M. L. McLean, Philadelphia Bulletin; E. J. Stackpole, Harrisburg Telegraph; John L. Stewart, Washington Observer & Reporter; A. Nevin Pomeroy, Chambersburg Repository; J. G. Humes, Altoona Mirror; A. B. Schropp, Lebanon News; John W. Raudenbush, Reading Eagle; J. R. Gilbert, Lancaster Examiner; C. J. Smith, Allentown Item.

Among the resolutions adopted were the following:

Declaring the daily and weekly newspaper publishers as opposed to the dissemination of social and political matter by the foreign language press and commending the Governor of Pennsylvania and the state legislature for repealing the statutes requiring the advertising of sheriffs' sales in German newspapers;

Recommending uniformity in circulation prices, so that two-cent dailies can charge 12 cents a week and $6 a year, and 3-cent papers 18 cents a week and $9 a year;

Condemning the practice of selling newspapers under false pretenses and at subscription prices lower than the cost of news print for the purpose of carrying on unfair and injurious competition and building up temporarily circulation for private organs under the guise of real newspapers;

Recommending to Pennsylvania publishers that, in view of the present news print situation, two-cent prices be raised to three cents, that advertising rates be increased at least one-third, that costly and expensive supplements be eliminated, special editions omitted, miscellaneous news matter curtailed, all free copies be cut off and no return by agents of unsold copies be accepted;

Condemnation of general strikes where arbitration has been refused;

Declaring confidence in President Wilson and state governor, and pledging the support of the Pennsylvania Editorial Association in the maintenance of law and order.

CHICAGO PAPERS ACT TO CUT ADVERTISING

Tribune and Daily News Notify Advertisers That Space Must Be Reduced, to Work Least Hardship.

(BY TELEGRAPH)

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Beginning with to-day's issue, in addition to restrictions heretofore found necessary, The Tribune announces it is compelled to limit space available for advertising in order to accomplish essential newsprint saving. Until the end of November no more foreign business will be solicited.

Restrictions are applicable to all advertisers, both classified and display. To make possible fair allotments of space, no display advertisements will be accepted for publication in the following day's issue after five-thirty in the afternoon. The size of daily issues hereafter will not exceed the average of thirty-two pages and size of Sunday issues be curtailed fifteen per cent.

A letter sent by The Tribune to-day to all advertising agencies and to a list of regular display advertisers, urges them to limit the size of their future copy "so as to assist us in meeting this unusual situation in a way that will work the least hardship on all concerned."

The Chicago News to-day sent special delivery letters to all advertising agencies and regular display advertisers, signed by Advertising Manager John B. Woodward, as follows:

"We earnestly request your co-operation to reduce the volume of advertising offered the Daily News until December twenty-fifth, if possible. Please cut all pages planned within this period to half pages, which will have one hundred per cent. better chance of getting into the paper as scheduled than full page copy.

"We intensely dislike to leave any advertisement out of the paper entirely, but fairness to all advertisers frequently compels this course in the case of full page copy, and we hope it will always be handled without unfairness to any.

"Please let us know at once if we can depend upon you to reduce all schedules to the minimum of space requirements during this period."

PRICE WILL PRODUCE MORE NEWS PRINT

Capacity of His Mills Will Be Raised to 800 Tons Daily by New Canadian Plant

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

MONTREAL, QUE., Nov. 12.—Sir William Price, head of Price Bros. & Co., announces that a new paper mill will be built by his firm. The company at present manufactures nearly 300 tons per day.

In an interview Sir William Price said: "My board has definitely decided to start work without delay on a large news print mill in the Saguenay district, with a capacity of between 400 and 500 tons. Work has already been started on the necessary water power and by May of next year, construction of the mill will be under way.

"A further machine is now being erected in our Kenogami mill. This machine would have been working now had it not been for the strikes in England. This brings our present output up to 270 tons or, including Jonquiere, 325 tons per day of paper and board, in addition to sulphite pulp.

"When our new plant is operating our total output of paper and board will be in the neighborhood of 800 tons per day."

Keystone Publishers Call Meeting

The first of the regional meetings suggested by the A. N. P. A. will be held November 20 in the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh. John L. Stewart, publisher of the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter, who is president of the Western Pennsylvania Associated Dailies, has called a meeting of his association and of all daily newspaper publishers in the state west of and including Altoona, in conjunction with the Publishers' Association of Pittsburgh, called by T. R. Williams of the Press. The meeting will start at 1:30 p.m.

Will Merger Editions

The New Yorker Staats-Zeitung and the New Yorker Herold are negotiating for a merger of two editions, but the particular editions to be discontinued have not been decided upon. The date it will go into effect has not been decided.

The Detroit News is limiting its size to a 40-page daily average for the week.

MUST ENCOURAGE PAPER MANUFACTURE

BY J. H. ALLISON
President Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association

(Telegraph from Fort Worth, Tex.)

"I have just received my copy of EDITOR & PUBLISHER setting forth the International Paper Company's sales policy for 1920.

"This is no time for idle prattle on the part of publishers. Every economy must be practiced.

"While the International Paper Company's proposition is couched in pleasant language, it simply amounts to its taking advantage of the present situation. If the publishers have gained any advantage through the courts they are asked to waive them under threat of high prices at best or possible suspension by not being able to obtain any newsprint at all.

"It is unfair and unjust for the International Paper Company to take advantage of the publishers at this time and will not make for the best feeling among their customers.

"The International Paper Company has lived and thrived from the newspaper publishers for these many years and now because it has the advantage, it should not allow itself to be placed in the light of wanting to put some publishers out of business entirely.

"The publisher still has an obligation and can greatly relieve the present acute situation.

"The duration of high prices will continue until publishers' earnings and collections are slow to reduce tonnage, by setting the maximum number of pages daily and Sunday; making no further attempts to increase circulation; setting a minimum for percentage of advertising, say at least sixty per cent. and cutting down the size of heads.

"Meet the loss in volume of advertising and the increased cost of paper, labor and materials by increasing advertising rates and subscription prices, as I suggested in previous communications, and do not fear to show a loss in circulation and inches of advertising carried, by them will enable the smaller papers to secure sufficient tonnage to publish and it is their duty to do so.

"During this shortage, no paper should be shipped out of the United States, except to Canada. If necessary, recourse should be taken to the U. S. Government to change their lines and an effort made to conserve our forests for the use of our own peoples.

"Publishers should make plans to encourage new paper manufacturers to enter the market. In the manufacture of newsprint, as with all other commodities, the law of supply and demand controls and if the supply is insufficient it must be increased.

"If takes two years to build new paper mills, so immediate plans should be made, capital interested and the support of the publishers assured, so that sufficient tonnage may be obtainable in short time.

"The publishers of the United States will not sit supinely by and allow their interests to be injured.

"Let me urge particularly all Southern publishers to give this problem their best thought and their determined and quick action."

DISCUSS COURT RULING AND 1920 PRICES

Lively Topics of Chat Around Waldorf—Report Great Northern Will Sell at Four Cents a Pound

Conversation on the paper situation prior to the A. N. P. A. convention centered chiefly about the refusal of the United States circuit judges of the second circuit, sitting as arbitrators in the appeal of the publishers to reopen the discussion of news print prices for May, June and July, 1918, and the letter of the International Paper Company on its 1920 prices and sales policy.

The court's decision is universally accepted as final and publishers have turned their attention to assuring themselves of sufficient news print for the rest of this year and for 1920 at the best possible prices.

No confirmation could be secured of a persistent rumor that several large customers of the International Paper Company had signed contracts for next year's paper at no fixed price, but it was definitely learned by EDITOR & PUBLISHER and by officials of the International Company that an order issued during October absolutely dropping many smaller customers for 1920 paper has been rescinded at the request of the A. N. P. A. and S. N. P. A., which determined upon such action at their meeting, recently reported in EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

All customers of the Great Northern Paper Company will be supplied during 1920 the same amount of paper that they used this year. It is generally understood that the price will be 4 cents, although Great Northern officials would not confirm this figure.

Other paper companies supplying large tonnage news print sold EDITOR & PUBLISHER that they have not yet determined their 1920 sales policy of price, pending negotiations with their customers for renewal. These include the Spanish River Pulp & Paper Company, Perkins-Goodwin Company, Whitaker Paper Company and Seaman Paper Company, which distributes the product of the Remington and other mills.

PATTERSON HEADS PAPER

Business Manager Made President of Baltimore Sun

BALTIMORE, MD., Nov. 13.—After six years as business manager of the Baltimore Sun, Paul Patterson has been elected president of the A. S. Abell Company, publisher of the Sun, by the board of directors, to fill a vacancy that has existed for several years.

William F. Schmick, advertising manager of the Sun, succeeeds Mr Patterson as business manager and will also act as secretary of the company.

Joseph A. Blondell was elected treasurer and assistant secretary, and J. H. Adams and Frank R. Kent continue as vice-presidents and editor and managing editor, respectively.

A. P. Chiefs to Go Abroad

Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, will sail for England on November 29. The purpose of his visit and its length could not be learned. Harold Martin, who has been in charge of the Associated Press clients in Latin America, will leave for a tour of South America shortly. The Associated Press Service Bulletin is published monthly beginning November 15.

Canada and Commerce

It was recently brought to the attention of the readers of these advertisements that Canada is the home of the second largest retail business in the American continent.

This statement was questioned by some who, to put it mildly, suspected over enthusiasm on the part of the writer—which goes to show that many people undervalue Canadian commerce.

Canada is a big country—populated with big people, who do big things in a big way—witness the way they behaved in the big war.

Perhaps they acknowledge that Canada is pretty much all right—perhaps they do—but bless you, they have a jolly good right to admit this fact.

Perhaps, too, Canadians are partial to their own Canadian daily newspaper—dealing with Canadian news and Canadian politics from a Canadian standpoint.

They have nothing to be ashamed of, as to the quality of their newspapers, either.

Ably edited, they have the "home appeal" and the cooperative spirit which goes such a long way in developing good will, dealer helps and the many side issues that compose successful advertising campaigns.

Look at Canada as a territory of vast expanse and tremendous possibilities, and at Canadian daily newspapers as the open door through which you can trundle your goods into Canadian homes.

Half Way 'round the World for RANKIN Counsel

—A Chinese business-man—native born and bred;

—American college-trained;

—Today, in Hong Kong, a manufacturer of exquisite oriental incense.

—Advertising and merchandising problems confront him—to successfully market his product he must seek expert guidance. Wouldn't the sound merchandising principles of America solve the problem in China?

—To America he turned for advice—he sought the Wm. H. Rankin Company, in Chicago.

—He knew of Rankin's "Brass Tack" counsel, practical merchandising ideas, business-building plans.

—Last week the steamship "Empress of Persia" brought the statement of his problems;

—The resourceful departments of the Wm. H. Rankin Company have carefully analyzed the situation laid before them—digested the fundamentally essential factors as they presented themselves in "The Flowery Kingdom;"

—With the result that a simple, tangible plan of procedure has been prepared which will solve the perplexities of the Hong Kong manufacturer—a plan of sales operation replete with sound reasoning.

—The next steamer Hong Kong-bound from San Francisco will carry the information. Thus the same complete advertising and merchandising service which has built nation-wide reputation for the Wm. H. Rankin Company goes forth to aid constructive commerce in the Far East.

—Almost in the same mail we received a letter from a leading British advertiser in answer to a two-page advertisement in the Advertising World of London.

—The following excerpt from it proves that British manufacturers are looking for our counsel and guidance on advertising in the U. S. A., and that American publishers may expect many British advertising campaigns:

'Your article in the London 'Advertising World' is instructive and illuminating. The co-ordinating of quotations for Newspapers which makes possible such statements as you give, reflects fine credit both to the Wm. H. Rankin Co. and to you as its President.

"The article we market is a food for Infants. It has quite a sale in this country. We are already sold on Advertising. For the first four years we did little or no Press Advertising excepting in Medical and Nursing Papers: Since then we have been consistent Press Advertisers, the object being to obtain the approval of the Medical profession and reduce waste of money in Press Advertising. We have no reason, judged by results, to regret this procedure; I am thinking America should be tackled the same way.

"Should it be done nationally or locally? If the latter, where should one make a start? Investigation, helped by local knowledge and experience, can answer, and in answering correctly, save a pile of money, and much energy. Has your Organization this knowledge and experience? If so, will you let me hear how you sell it."

—An excellent example of how advertisers the world over are beginning to seek our help in their business problems of the extensive scope and prompt, resourceful service of the Wm. H. Rankin Company. We are proud to be chosen to serve manufacturers in far-off lands as well as advertisers in this country.

With our European and Australian connections, through Charles F. Higham, Ltd., London,—our organizations in New York and Chicago—with branches in Washington, D. C., San Francisco and Los Angeles, Calif.—we are now ready to not only give National but also International advertising service. Address nearest office and we will gladly tell you all about "How We Serve Our Customers."

Record Bank Clearings in

Philadelphia

October Total in This City Passes Two Billion Mark

All previous high records for bank clearings in Philadelphia were broken during October when a total of $2,094,679,000 was reported by the clearing house association. It is also the first time in the history of banking in this city that the $2,000,000,000 mark has been passed in any month. During October of 1918, clearings equalled $1,886,419,910; in 1917, $1,569,400,621; and in 1916, $1,252,095,564. In September of the present year a total of $1,911,994,474 was reported. The previous record figure was reached in July, with a total of $1,935,468,968. Philadelphia Bulletin, Oct. 31

S. N. P. A. CALLS SPECIAL PAPER CONVENTION; GENERAL APPROVAL OF A. N. P. A. PLANS

Bradford Merrill Is Chairman of New A. N. P. A. Committee—Inland, Southern and National Bodies Endorse Recommendations

INFORMATION received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER from all parts of the country and from large, medium and small newspapers, indicates a wholehearted approval of the action taken and recommendations adopted by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, in special convention last week, for the conservation of news print paper.

All interest now centers on the further announcement of the A. N. P. A. of the names of the men to comprise its committee of conciliation and the course of action that committee intends to pursue in obtaining the results demanded by the emergency situation.

Bradford Merrill Chairman

President Frank P. Glass of the A. N. P. A., informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER that Bradford Merrill, general manager of the Hearst newspapers, has accepted the chairmanship of the committee on conciliation, but that the names of Mr. Merrill's associates will not be ready for announcement until each man has definitely accepted the responsibilities he is asked to undertake.

It is understood that about 23 requests to serve were sent out by President Glass and the paper committee of the A. N. P. A. to the most representative newspaper publishers of the country, covering all sizes of newspapers, and regardless of whether or not they are members of the A. N. P. A.

Answers were being received by Manager Lincoln B. Palmer of the A. N. P. A. in New York all week, but up to date the list of acceptance was not in shape to warrant any announcement, according to Mr. Palmer.

Unanimously Endorsed

The best evidences that the A. N. P. A. in its conservation policy is to have the support of medium and small sized newspapers comes in the form of telegraphic messages of approval to EDITOR & PUBLISHER from President A. W. Peterson of the Inland Daily Press Association, President J. W. Wilson of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association (printed in the opposite column) and Edward Albright, president of the National Editorial Association.

President Peterson of the Inland says:

"My opinion is that the American Newspaper Publishers' Association's convention last Wednesday performed a splendid service for the newspapers. President Glass gave an impressive

PUBLISHERS, ACT AT ONCE!

THE time for drastic action by the publishers of this country has arrived. They are face to face with the gravest proposition that has ever confronted them. Warned six months ago of what was inevitably coming, they have remained dormant. Further delay will be disastrous.

At the special meeting of the A. N. P. A., called to consider ways and means by which newspapers may meet a grave emergency, some vital and necessary policies were urged. First importance should be accorded to the resolution calling upon publishers everywhere to "materially increase advertising and subscription rates, and at the same time limit the size of their issues."

In his opening address, President Glass stated that costs of publishing had increased 100 per cent during the past year.

In any other line of business this increase would have been met by a similar increase in selling price. Is there any newspaper in America which has, during that period, raised its advertising rate 100 per cent? Is there any sound reason why all newspapers should not increase rates because of increased cost?

Every publisher knows, or should know, his costs. He should establish his rates to cover cost increases. If an increase of 25% of the rate is adequate, it should be made. If the facts call for more drastic increase, the facts should govern!

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has shown through recent research that national advertisers may purchase space, on a 5,000-line contract, in the daily newspapers of the United States at an average rate of one-fifth of a cent per line per thousand circulation. To say that such a rate is ruinously low is to use moderate speech.

But, as a matter of fact, local merchants, using large space, are accorded a rate very materially lower than this. It is a safe assertion that the majority of daily newspapers are carrying the bulk of their department store advertising today at a substantial loss.

This situation must be changed, gentlemen! You are manufacturers. You should not delude yourselves further with the vague belief that you can sell your product for less than the cost of production and continue in business.

A 3-cent daily and a 10-cent Sunday newspaper must come as a companion policy of conservation. At the 1920 first-quarter contract price of the International, $4.50 per hundred at the mill, the white paper in a 30-page issue costs, not counting delivery charges, two and a half cents. Is there any sound reason why such a newspaper should be sold for 2 cents? The 3 and 10 cents selling prices will abolish duplicate and waste circulation—so far as prices can do that—thus further reducing consumption.

Why not go directly to the root of the matter? Rate is basic. General policies of economy and conservation, elimination of waste, etc., will not afford a sufficient remedy. The remedy is in immediate rate readjustment—not to meet merely a small part of increased costs, but to meet them fully. It may be said that the remedy is heroic. It is—but publishers are confronted with conditions requiring nothing less.

Until publishers do readjust their rates to conform with increased costs they will reap the inevitable results. "As ye sow" is the unchanging law.

In the appointment of Committees of Conciliation, to bring about cooperation between competitive local publishers, this special convention of the A. N. P. A. provided a possible remedy for one of the most lamentable features of the whole situation. If these committees shall accomplish their purpose, the good results will be far reaching, and out of the present crisis may emerge a closer fellowship of interests and purposes among publishers everywhere. Such an achievement would go far toward compensating the industry for the present travail and peril.

As a rule committees accomplish little and often waste valuable time. Let us hope that this committee will be different. Power in abundance to it!

News Print Conditions in South Are Particularly Acute — President Allison Urges Concerted Action to Limit Papers

(BY TELEGRAPH)

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 18. — Secretary-Treasurer Walter C. Johnson announced today that an extraordinary convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association has been called, to take place in the Tntwiler Hotel, Birmingham, Ala., November 24 and 25, to consider the news print crisis. Telegrams have gone to all members urging attendance.

J. H. ALLISON of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Record, president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, telegraphs to EDITOR & PUBLISHER as follows:

"I heartily endorse the recommendations proposed by the special convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, but would supplement its resolution with a request that the U. S. Government prohibit the export of paper and wood pulp, except into Canada, until the needs of the publishers of this country are supplied.

"The Government should also pass regulations requiring the replacing of forests.

"With the almost unanimous approval of the executive committee, I have called a special convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, at Birmingham, Ala., November 24-25.

"A limitation should be placed on the size of papers and I hope that some agreement can be reached by Southern publishers in convention whereby there will be a concerted action to prevent waste and reduce tonnage."

News print conditions in the South are particularly acute, as is indicated in the following extracts from the current report of Secretary W. C. Johnson of the S. N. P. A.

"Immediately following the recent meeting of the S. N. P. A. executive committee, held in Nashville, Marcellus Foster, vice-president of the association, left for New York to study the news print situation. He spent ten days in New York interviewing manufacturers and jobbers and discussing the situation with prominent publishers, many of whom were in New York for the same purpose. At the request of the secretary, he has written a communication covering the situation, which is hereby reproduced:

"'I found the news print situation in New York very deplorable from the publishers' standpoint. I called on some ten brokers and

SOUTHWEST PAPERS ARE THREATENED WITH EXTINCTION

Smaller Publishers Who Must Rely on Jobbers For Supply of News Print Are in Dire Need of Relief.

BY J. S. LEWIS.
(STAFF CORRESPONDENT)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 18.—Many of the smaller daily and weekly papers of this section of the country face suspension of publication—and in some instances bankruptcy—as a result of the serious news print shortage, which now confronts them.

A resume of the situation has developed the following conditions:

Blame Placed on Bigger Newspapers

The smaller newspapers are unable to obtain any carload lots and in many instances those whose largest orders are ton lots cannot get them filled.

All jobbers are cutting down their customers' orders to just enough to keep the customer supplied for two, or at the outside, three weeks.

Carload lots of flat news print, are generally sold out, sometimes twice and three times over, before the car has been set to the jobber's track, after its arrival here.

Jobbers are not taking on any new accounts.

Where jobbers are members of a string of houses, as are most of those in Kansas City, when a shortage occurs in one house the others help out, sending the news print by express.

The jobbers, to a man, contend that the cause of the shortage of news print for the small dailies and weeklies is to be placed entirely at the doors of the larger city dailies.

See Relief Remote

There is no possible chance for the situation to be changed for the better in the immediate future, certainly none before next spring; and not then, unless there is an increase in production and a decrease in consumption.

The large amount of nation-wide advertising is pointed out as the one important factor in the shortage. Unless the dailies can do something to cut down this advertising, there is little possibility of the condition being improved.

The jobbers in Kansas City and this section of the country, according to reports received at the houses here, are not making any attempt to supply the larger papers, but are devoting all their efforts to the little fellows who cannot get their share except from them.

The situation in Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska has been serious for some time. Recently, because of the shortage, several newspaper owners faced the possibility of suspension altogether. Appeals were made to the jobbers for help, but they were unable to do more than alleviate the trouble for several weeks.

One prominent Kansas daily, owned by a former Congressman, appealed to the Western Newspaper Union here. After attempts to secure paper from the other W. N. U. houses in this territory, an appeal was sent to the purchasing agent at Omaha. He informed the Kansas City house that while he was sorry, too glad to give aid to a competitor, that there was nothing that could be done to help the situation.

The Western Newspaper Union here, according to Charles M. Weir, manager, is able only to keep a little ahead of normal supply for its own ready print demands. It sells the stock as last—if not farther—than it is received. In fact, the local house has had to help out the Wichita and St. Louis houses on different occasions, while in turn it had to be helped out.

One jobbing house, while not desiring to be quoted, said that one of its customers had written it for ten reams, and it was necessary to go to one of the local newspapers and buy that amount at the commercial rate the paper charges for scratch pad paper, in order to fill the order. This house also said it did not have any supply of flat print on hand and that it has sold out its stock. One carload ordered, was promised shipped October 15. It is now promised "soon." This car has been sold out twice.

Some of the larger newspapers of this section, notably the Kansas City Star and the Tulsa Democrat, are using every effort to cut down their newspaper waivers to a fixed limit, so as to conserve paper. The Star has announced 32 pages as the limit for week-day editions, and will give only one full page to a customer at one issue.

The Tulsa Democrat this week announced a 14-page limit, and also that all copy had to be in the paper by waivers to a fixed limit, so as to conserve the day of publication. The Democrat announced in their editorial columns that a car of paper, gone astray between Kansas City and Tulsa had caused a shortage, that their surplus was all gone, and that the restrictions would be kept indefinitely.

Wilmington Star Sold

WILMINGTON, N. C., Nov. 18.—The Star has been purchased from Joseph E. Thompson by a stock company composed of Wilmington citizens and Charles L. Fiederson of Savannah, Ga. Mr. Thompson, who has been connected with the Star for more than 20 years, has sold his interests and will retire. Mr. Fiederson, who became editor and general manager, has been judge of the juvenile court of Savannah. He has had many years experience in newspaper work.

Another News Print Mill Planned for Canada

Great Lakes Pulp & Paper Company Will Erect $5,000,000 Plant at Port Arthur

MONTREAL, QUE., Nov. 20.—Announcement has just been made that the Great Lakes Pulp & Paper Company will build a $5,000,000 plant at Port Arthur, Ont. The president is Lewis L. Alsted, of Appleton, Wis.

Associated with him are George Seaman, of Chicago, one of the biggest pulp and paper men in the United States, and James Whalen, of Port Arthur, who established the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company and the big pulp industries of the Whalen Companies in British Columbia. The plant will cover 100 acres.

The ground wood mill is to have a capacity of thirty thousand tons per year, the sulphide mill 75,000 tons, and the news print mill 35,000 tons. The engineer in charge of construction will be Hardy Ferguson of New York.

A contract has been signed with the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission for the use of a minimum of 12,000 horsepower. The commission is now developing Nipigon to supply this power, the development having been undertaken with this industry particularly in view.

S. N. P. A. FAVORS 25% AD RATE INCREASE

A. A. A. Assures Newspapers of Co-operation In Saving Paper —Publishers to Spend $10,000 Advertising South

(By Telegraph)

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 15.—Out of conference of the advertising committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association and representatives of the Southern committee of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, here yesterday and today, came two measures that will affect vitally the whole advertising and publishing community of the United States and especially of the south.

A resolution urging an increase of 25 per cent in advertising rates, unanimously adopted by the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, reads as follows:

"In view of the present critical paper famine and autumn markets, and the further fact that the paper manufacturers will not establish a price basis for next year nor give any assurance of an increased paper supply, publishers everywhere are urged to immediately increase their advertising rates, both local and foreign, at least 25 per cent, and the advertisers and advertising agencies of America are urged to give the publishers of newspapers optional days for the insertion of their copy in order that the existing print paper emergency may be met to the advantage of both the publishers and their customers."

Thomas E. Basham of Louisville, president of the Southern Council of the American Advertising Agency Association, attended the session and assured the fullest co-operation of the A. A. A. A., which will work as a unit in preparing copy for the $10,000 advertising campaign of the S. N. P. A. to promote the south.

A booklet is to be issued by the S. N. P. A. to supplement this advertising campaign, and to give exact data on the various sections of the south, state by state.

The advertising committee of the S. N. P. A. is to spend $1,000 a month for the next ten months in this campaign to tell the nation about the south's buying powers, said Arthur G. Newmyer, chairman of the committee and associate publisher of the New Orleans Item.

"Dick" Little Is Wounded

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—Richard Henry Little, veteran war correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, who was seriously wounded while advancing with the White army on Petrograd a fortnight ago, is reported in a hospital near Natchina, with his left leg broken and severe head wounds. The Tribune informant cables that Little would be removed to Narva and Reval as soon as his condition permits.

CANADA ADVERTISERS MEET TODAY

Annual Convention of A. C. A. Takes Place in Toronto—Premier of Ontario and Other Notables On Speakers' Program

TORONTO, ONT., Nov. 18.—The Association of Canadian Advertisers, Inc., will hold its sixth annual meeting and dinner in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, Thursday and Friday evening.

At the dinner, on the evening of the 20th, the following have been invited to speak: Hon. E. C. Drury, Premier of Ontario; Lloyd Harris, chairman Canadian Trade Commission; Tom Moore, chairman of the Labor Party; Secretary MacDonald of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

The officers of the Association of Canadian Advertisers are:

President, W. M. Mackay, Lever Brothers, Ltd., Toronto; vice-president, W. C. Betts, S. Davis & Sons, Ltd., Montreal; J. R. Kirkpatrick, E. W. Gillett Company, Ltd.; secretary, Florence E. Clotworthy, Kent Building, Toronto.

Directors, B. H. Bramble, Canadian Chewing Gum Company, Ltd., Toronto; E. M. Emery, Sale of the Woods Milling Company, Montreal; G. F. Morrow, Atlantic Sugar Refineries, Ltd., Montreal; L. R. COWLES ACQUITTED

Absolved of Libel Charges Brought by Judge Salinger

DES MOINES, IA., Nov. 16.—Gardner Cowles, publisher of the Register and Tribune, has been absolved from all damages to Supreme Judge B. I. Salinger by verdict of a jury. Justice Salinger had sued Mr. Cowles for $10,000 libel on an editorial printed in 1916 in the Register. The article asked if Senator A. C. Savage had been placed on the Rock Island railroad payroll in the usual manner of the influence of Judge Salinger had been used for his friend, while important litigation of the railroad was pending in the supreme court.

Justice Salinger on the witness stand admitted that he assisted Former Senator Savage to get a position with the Rock Island, but insisted that he was acting only for a friend who was in financial trouble and had no way placed himself under obligation to the railroad.

PRICES UP IN NEW ORLEANS

Newspapers Now 20 Cents Weekly and 3 Cents Daily Per Telegraph

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 17.—The newspapers of this city today advanced carrier and subscription rates from 15 to 20 cents a week, delivered, and street sales price for evening papers from 2 to 3 cents a copy. The publishers say the change is "due to the continuously increasing cost of production and to properly compensate carriers and other distributors for their work."

Harrison For Governor?

DANVILLE, ILL., Nov. 18.—John H Harrison, editor and publisher of the Commercial-News, is persistently being mentioned throughout the state as a possible Republican candidate for governor to succeed Frank O. Lowden, who is the choice of many Middle-West states for the next Republican nominee for president.

CANADA'S NEWSPAPER CONVENTIONS READY FOR OPENING IN TORONTO

Meetings of Press Association and Canadian Press Limited Attracting Publishers from All Parts of Dominion—C. P. A. May Be Reorganized, Dailies Having Body of Their Own Like the A. N. P. A.

BY W. A. CRAICK
(STAFF CORRESPONDENT)

TORONTO, Nov. 18.—In spite of repeated delays which have postponed the holding of the 1919 convention of the Canadian Press Association from June 5 to November 27, there is every indication that a large number of members will be present at the meeting here next week.

Western Canada will be particularly well represented, which is a sure sign that the attendance from other parts of the Dominion will be satisfactory.

Prior to the holding of the C. P. A. meeting, Canadian Press Limited, the national news-gathering and distributing organization, will hold its annual convention, thus doubly insuring a good turn-out of daily newspaper publishers for the occasion.

Future Uncertain

As in June, so in November, the burning question will be the future of the association. The amendment to the by-laws proposed by M. R. Jennings, Edmonton Journal, still stands on the order sheet and will undoubtedly prove the storm centre of this year's meeting.

Mr. Jennings proposes "That the association be dissolved and its charter surrendered, or that the present by-laws be repealed and a new by-laws be enacted to provide for its continuance as a general association with nominal membership fees and without paid officers or staff."

The aim of this amendment is to enable members of the daily section to form an association of their own and it is understood that Mr. Jennings and his supporters have already prepared a tentative basis of organization, which would be put into effect should the change go through.

Dailies May Separate

It is difficult, in advance of the meeting, to know just what the sentiment throughout the membership really is on this important question. There is undoubtedly a strong feeling on the part of the larger city dailies that they should have an association of their own, either entirely independent or affiliated with other newspaper organizations.

On the other hand the smaller city dailies feel that perhaps they have more in common with the larger country weeklies than with the metropolitan press.

In the ranks of the weeklies there has for some time been dissatisfaction with the extent of the services rendered them by the C. P. A. office in comparison with those rendered the dailies. With these dissentions, it would not be surprising if some radical changes were not made, though it is the general belief that no complete dissolution of the C. P. A. will result.

Caucuses of both daily and weekly members have been called for Wednesday next. The dailies will meet at 4 P. M. and consider the line of policy to be pursued. The weeklies, or at least those comprised in the Ontario Selected Town Weekly List, propose to hold a dinner and afterwards discuss the situation.

Both M. R. Jennings of Edmonton and J. H. Woods, Calgary Herald, who are sponsors of the new movement, are coming east this week to lay out the plan of campaign. Evidently a merry scrap is promised, though much is going to depend on what develops in an oratorical way at the general meeting.

The program differs very little from that prepared for the June meeting. Sessions will take place in the King Edward Hotel and entertainment features have been entirely suppressed. The session on Thursday morning will be taken up with the presentation of reports and meetings of the three sections of the Association for the consideration of the Jennings amendment. At 2 P. M. the amendment will be brought up before the Association as a whole and the afternoon devoted to its disposition.

In the evening the usual editorial conference takes place, the chief speaker being Arthur Elliot Sproul, editor of the Canadian section of the New York Sun.

Addresses will also be given by J. W. Dafoe, editor Winnipeg Free Press, and F. M. Chapman, editor of the Farmers' Magazine, and illuminated addresses will be presented to two former presidents, J. F. Mackay, late of the Toronto Globe, and W. E. Smallfield, Renfrew Mercury, both of whom will be made life members of the association.

On Friday morning, sectional meetings will be resumed, while on Friday afternoon the general association will be reconvened to hear reports, elect officers and take action on such matters as may be brought before it.

Following the policy adopted last year, there will again be a series of conferences between the three sections,—daily, weekly and trade and class,—and representatives of the Canadian Association of Advertising Agencies.

These are expected to be helpful in removing various causes of friction which have risen during the year. Advertising matters naturally bulk largely with the daily section, and on the program of the section appear items dealing with the promotion of daily newspaper advertising, the equalizing of agency commissions and the standardization of practice relative to bank advertising.

The daily section will also have before it for consideration the report of the Special News Print Paper Committee, which will be presented by its chairman, P. D. Ross, Ottawa Journal.

On the daily section agenda are topics for discussion relating to labor, cost finding and other matters of special interest to publishers of daily papers, though it is hardly likely that many of these will be reached.

Plan to Raise Fees

An important amendment to the by-laws has been proposed by the board of directors which, if adopted, will have the effect of raising membership fees substantially. For dailies of circulation of 60,000, the fee will be raised from $150 to $180 per annum; for circulations from 45,000 to 60,000 from $120 to $150; for circulations from 30,000 to 45,000 from $100 to $132; for circulations from 20,000 to 30,000 from $90 to $120, etc. Under existing rates the association derives an income of $6,643 from its daily membership, or 49.66% of the total income.

The reports of officers and committees, as printed in advance of the June meeting, will be presented to the November meeting, such supplementary information as has since developed being delivered verbally. This will not amount to much and will probably affect only the work of the advertising committee to any extent.

The labor committee reports on the result of efforts made during the year to secure arbitration agreements with the several unions in the publishing trade. These efforts did not meet with much success, the International Typographical Union in particular being unfavorable to the idea of separate agreements covering Canadian daily newspapers.

Favors A. N. P. A. Membership

In view of this the labor committee recommends that such dailies as desire the protection of arbitration agreements should become members of the A. N. P. A. In this connection the directors of the A. N. P. A. have expressed a willingness to have a Canadian member associate with their special standing committee for service in Canadian cases.

The advertising committee presents a bulky report, which covers much ground. It shows that there are now 20 advertising agencies recognized by the association and that the number of members who have signed the undertaking agreeing not to allow commissions to unrecognized agencies is steadily increasing.

A number of changes in minimum requirements to secure recognition are recommended, among them being one stipulating that the applicant must have at least three general accounts (exclusive of real estate and other accounts of a speculative character), two of which shall be running in six or more Canadian cities or towns and each of which

S. N. P. A. CALLS NEWS PRINT CONFERENCE

paper manufacturers. I found that publishers were wrong in distress calls for paper from every part of the United States. Many of them did not ask the price, but simply said 'Send us what you can get and we will pay the bill'.

"When I was in New York paper was bought by a few publishers at prices that ranged as high as 7 to 7½ cents f. o. b. mill.

"New York publishers have been buying from the Pacific coast, and are getting it from every source they can possibly find. They are nearly all running ahead of their contracts and very few are managing any paper to spare. They seem to be taking all the business they can get.

"I talked with the sales department of the International Paper Company and found them all as stiff as iron in regard to the future. They were bending all their energies to supply paper under contract, and while I was in their office I heard them declare they were making extraordinary efforts to get extra tonnage for a few customers who had wired urgent calls for additional cars.

"I talked with representatives of both American and Canadian mills and every one that I visited reported his entire tonnage sold out and a demand for orders beyond what could not be supplied.

Brokers' Position

"The majority of the brokers seemed to regret the situation and were not encouraging any publishers to buy paper in excess of requisitioning.

"As far as the Houston Chronicle is concerned, I refused to put in a bid, as I determined that it would be better, from a financial standpoint and certainly from the standpoint of conservation, to reduce the size of our paper. I know we can make a good profit on a smaller size paper than we have now daily, and 60 pages on Sunday. If I took all the business offered us we would have an average of 20 pages daily and probably 50 on Sunday. Taking all the business offered us would mean merely piling up excess profits and using far more paper than we would under ordinary conditions.

"If something could be done to get every publisher in the country who is making a profitable business to cut down the size of the paper and not try to secure more business, the problems would be solved for other publishers who may not be so fortunate as to be profitmaking standpoint.

"In my opinion, the attitude of some of the Eastern publishers in printing 56 to 40 pages daily and 100 to 150 pages on Sunday is nearly criminal at this time. They are making a ruinous market on paper and are piling up losses for every publisher to secure a paper contract for the coming year, and publishers will be forced to face famine conditions, and a few to go out of business.

"From my talks with the paper manufacturers I concluded that conditions in the coming year will be somewhere between 4 and 4½ cents, making the average for the business. I should continue. Manufacturers admitted to me that they could turn out paper on a profitable basis at a price around 3½ cents, but mentioned, unless labor conditions and other factors in the paper manufacturing trade improved, should materially change in the meantime.

Holding Down Is Remedy

"The only advice I can give, therefore, is for every publisher to refrain from buying at present prices upon terms that is being charged for excess tonnage. If every publisher will refuse to hold his contract to what he has under contract and keep out of the market, conditions will improve.

"If every publisher takes all the adverts. that he can get and print all the news of all the features of the country, then we will all face the most acute shortage we have ever known around about the first of the year, with prices extremely uncertain.'

"The acute news print situation has brought suggestions from several sources that Southern publishers get together and organize a paper mill. There are several factors to be considered in an undertaking of this kind. It would require from 12 to 18 months to get a mill started.

"The matter is, however, being given careful consideration and will be discussed at the proper time. Some publishers seem to think a news print mill can be successfully operated in the South. Others seem to feel that the mill will have to be erected at some point nearest the source of supply. At the present time, however, the acute news print situation will have to be worked out, and the matter of a paper mill taken up later on.

"The Chattanooga News comments on the situation as follows:

"'The newspaper business is facing the gravest crisis in the supply of print paper that has ever occurred. The shortage during the war period is nothing to that which is now existing. While the production of paper in the United States and Canada has increased very little in the past two years, the consumption has grown enormously. No one is able to predict what the price will be, or whether any newspaper will get an adequate supply of paper. The volume of advertising being solicited by the newspapers of the country is enormous. The campaigns of national advertising which were put on by many concerns with an idea of securing early orders, and with little expectation of profitable returns, have met with success because they have been increased.

"'Despite an almost universal increase in advertising rates the patronage has continued to grow, and newspapers have been compelled to put a limit on their size. The Washington Post, for example, has 30,000 lines more and daily leaves out many columns of advertising. The New York Times and the Chicago papers are running over this number of pages, the Times frequently reaching 200 to 300 pages, and of this 55 per cent is advertising.

"'George Otis Smith, chairman of the Federal Governments has made it impossible for it to earn a profit, the International Paper Company, which has always been able to earn news print used by American papers, recently cut off arbitrarily 100,000 tons of newspaper news papers and many others over the United States.

"'It has announced that 200,000 tons of paper formerly manufactured as news print would be changed to kraft and wrapping paper. There is a much better profit in these lines.

"'The action of the Federal International created consternation in the newspaper printing industry. Publishers sought in vain elsewhere to supply their needs.

Without 1920 Contract

"Other manufacturers have pursued a similar policy, and the mills in the northern part of the South has been unable to contract for its 1920 supply.

"As representations were made to the International Trade Commission that there would be failures, it was agreed that instead of cutting off some customers entirely, they would reduce its supply to all former customers. But this will necessitate all these newspapers reducing their size.

"Newspapers are also finding the interest to the public constantly increasing and many of them have added pages to accommodate what they lost soon after the war, when sales and many circulations were cut down. This means:

"'The problem for the American press is serious, and there is no doubt the advertising rates will be adjusted soon nearly like those in England, where for several years they have been running from 40 to 60 lines a column. The contents of the news columns will be confined to those in which what kind of news features can be omitted without lessening the interest of the public in the paper.

"Customers of the Great Northern Paper Company are being called upon by representatives of the sales department, who are presenting the proposition of this company for 1920. E. M. Marshall has been calling on Southern customers.

"The company offers to contract for 1920 on a basis of 4 cents f. o. b. mill. It has advised, however, that for the time being, at least, it is unable to contract with any customer for a tonnage over and above that contracted for in 1919.

Great Northern's Offer

"There are no strings tied to the proposition and the secretary is in receipt of advice from a number of members stating that they are accepting the Great Northern's proposition.

"The only regret that the company has is the fact that it cannot secure an additional tonnage. It appears that every customer has decided to secure an additional supply for 1920. The Great Northern customers appear to be pretty well satisfied with the price.

"With one exception, all Southern customers of the Great Northern have been paying $3.50. The other was on a cost basis and practically every Southern publisher preferred to contract at a stipulated price rather than on a basis which made the price a figure to be determined upon production cost. It is understood that the production cost when finally determined will make the price something in excess of $3 50. The publishers who have accepted the flat price, therefore, secure an advantage over the publishers that preferred to take chances as to what the price would be.

"Pessimists never did predict the bad situation that now confronts publishers in the print paper supply. The past six weeks has been worse than two years ago in the print paper market and at present there is not a ray of hope that conditions will be any better.

"We found in northern Iowa six weeks ago that small-town publishers were getting dribs of four and five bundles where they had ordered tons of paper, and paying excess on that each week. The jobbing houses professed to be unable to supply any more—and they were honest in saying it. It seems that 5-per mills have been overrun with orders from abroad and at home. Big papers have used far more than their contract supplies and have fallen on the market for the surplus they needed like the rest of us. It has been grab and take print paper wherever it could be found till the paper salesmen simply travel around to explain why their brands were not fill all demands—and quote a raise in prices each time they come.

8 Cents for Sheet Print

"It is stated that advertising all over the country is 30 per cent more than a year ago, and that the city dailies have been unable to cut down at all, but have quite generally been compelled to use far more print paper than ever before. The export supply has been kept up to some extent, especially from Canada, and any prices asked abroad are accepted at once.

"E. C. Hotaling, national field secretary for the National Editorial Association, has been looking the proposition up for the writer, and finds that seven and as high as eight cents is asked now and that 10 cents per pound says some predict that it will go higher than that. However, a new mill or two will soon be added to the makers of print, and possibly some relief will come through them.

"It has been suggested that Iowa and Minnesota papers can combine and contract for their own supply of print if the jobbers cannot supply them. That is the only recourse, possibly, and it will be studied from that angle. Yet we have information that a mill recently turned down an order by one big jobbing house for 500 tons of roll print at the highest price ever offered for it.

"Whatever the cause, the newspapers are up against it hard. Dailies and weeklies are running so close to short that they are in danger of stopping, and there seems no power but national calamity that will curtail the use and demand for this essential product of prosperity."

Conciliation Committee

The S. N. P. A. committee on conservation and conciliation has been appointed as follows:

Buford Goodwyn, Atlanta Georgian, chairman; Colonel Luke Lea, Nashville Tennessecan; Marcellus E. Foster, Houston Chronicle; Victor Hanson, Birmingham News; W. A. Elliott, Jacksonville Times-Union.

Other activities of the Southern association in saving paper include co-operation with the Postage and News Print Committees with similar committees of the A. N. P. A. and the Inland Daily Press Association, and a general request that an executive committee for the submission of ideas by members by which paper can be conserved.

One suggestion which the request evoked is the use of four and five-column strips for features instead of the six and seven-column plates now in use. It is pointed out that by arrangement with the syndicates issuing the strips the mechanical work can be carefully done so that the lettering will be just as legible in the smaller strip as it now is in the larger.

I. T. U. CHIEFS COMING TO NEW YORK

President Scott Sees Early Settlement of "Vacations," But "Big Six" Again Rejects Offer of Arbitration.

(BY TELEGRAPH)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Nov. 18.—The arbitration board of the International Typographical Union met here today to dispose of several minor controversies with publishers. The executive board did not meet. The arbitration board has nothing to do with affairs of "Big Six," the New York local which, according to President Marsden G. Scott, only the executive board having jurisdiction over that matter.

Mr. Scott said that after the meeting of the arbitration board, three members of the executive board will go to New York and endeavor to settle the trouble.

They will leave for New York on November 20, he said, and also expressed the belief the entire trouble will be straightened out soon.

Meanwhile "Big Six" staged its weekly repudiation of the employing printers' offer to arbitrate all differences at a stormy meeting on Sunday, at which it was also voted that book and job printers should not return from the "vacations" which they have been taking in sympathy with the pressmen and feeders.

W. B. SULLIVAN ILL, RETIRES

Curtis B. Johnson, His Partner, Now Heads Charlotte Observer

CHARLOTTE, NOV. 18.—Walter B. Sullivan, for several years president and general manager of the Observer, has been compelled by ill health to retire from active service. Curtis B. Johnson, with Mr. Sullivan owns the Observer, has been elected president. Col. Wade Harris continues as editor, A. W. Burch, business manager, J. A. Parnham, managing editor, Knox W. Henry, news and J. P. Caldwell, editor and manager of the Rotogravure section. There will be no change in the policy of the paper. Mr. Sullivan will not released his holdings, and his retirement is to carry out the advice of his medical advisers who insisted on "an indefinite period of rest."

New Yorkers Discuss Paper

Evidences that the recommendations of the A. N. P. A. convention had already begun to do their work was found in this week's session of the Publishers Association of New York City in the Hardware Club on Wednesday. A lively interest in paper conservation was manifested by all members and, while no definite action was taken at this time the publishers individually stated that they intended to do everything possible to reduce consumption of news print paper in their plants.

Sutphin Joins Evening Sun

Edwin A. Sutphin has resigned from the national advertising staff of the New York Tribune and on December 1 will become manager of the New York Evening Sun's national advertising department. He succeeds W. H. Tritt, who takes charge of the Morning Sun's national advertising.

ADVERTISING MANAGERS GET FLYING START FOR THEIR NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

Convention in Chicago Marked Beginning of Constructive Work That Should Make Organization One of Most Valuable in Newspaper Industry—Members Say Results Exceeded All Expectations

(STAFF CORRESPONDENCE)
CHICAGO, Nov. 17.

THE annual meeting of the National Association of the Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers, held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Nov. 10th, a brief wire report of which was given in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER, broke much new ground that gives promise of rich and useful production in the future.

H. A. Ahern, advertising director of the New York Evening Journal, the founder of the Association, who was re-elected president, before leaving for New York expressed to the representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER his entire satisfaction with the result of the meeting. He said:

Assume New Responsibilities

"The association is young yet. The advertising managers throughout the country are only slightly acquainted with the potential usefulness of the organization, but we believe they will soon learn how comprehensive is the work mapped out by the members.

"In view of the trying conditions that advertising managers have been compelled to contend with during the past year, the convention far exceeded my expectations. It involved a very considerable sacrifice for an advertising manager to leave his desk at this time.

"Only a high sense of duty, not only to his own paper, but also to the entire newspaper publishing interests, could induce him to take the time to attend the convention and in addition assume new tasks and responsibilities in connection with the association.

"The appointment of a paid assistant secretary, to look after the business of the association is, to my mind, the big feature of the convention. It is an evidence of our progress. It means that we have work to do and are prepared to do it in an efficient manner—that we are in a position to meet the demand for special service and information that is sure to result from our work in Chicago.

Efficiency Assured

"I have outlined to Mr. Carroll, the assistant secretary, a program for the coming year. It will entail constant communication with all the members. They will be asked to put their problems up to him. He in turn will submit the facts and a statement of the conditions to the other members. This exchange of experiences will be a continuation of the work so well begun at the convention. It will facilitate the improvement of methods in the advertising departments of all newspapers."

J. B. Woodward of the Chicago Daily News, who was elected second vice-president, was also much encouraged and pleased with the spirit of mutual helpfulness that was shown at the convention.

"The meeting was very important," he said. "We dropped all non-essentials to consider vital problems, and that there are many such problems at this time needs no emphasis. Increased revenue is absolutely essential. Advertising rates should be advanced. This is particularly true of classified advertising. The present rates for classified are entirely too low and there is no reason why they should not be on the same basis as rates for display.

"An exception should be made, of course, in the case of 'situations wanted' and 'rooms to rent.' The man out of a job is entitled to consideration and should be given every advantage. The same is true of the keepers of rooming houses. To keep their rooms profitably occupied they are compelled to advertise with considerable frequency and the business is none too profitable. It is admitted that conditions at the present time are unusual and that the two exceptions noted do not require special treatment, but we are speaking of normal, not abnormal circumstances.

"There is no justification, however, for charging the owner of a department store a lower rate when he wants help, than he is charged for his regular display announcements."

Rates Are Too Low

"The rates for resorts, travel and moving pictures are also much too low—below the cost of production in many cases—and in practically all cases the business costs more to obtain than it is really worth.

"In that connection it may be noted that many publishers do not themselves know the actual cost of production. Every publisher should know the cost per line of his space. He cannot intelligently determine the proper charges otherwise. The rounding out of rates, therefore, is one of the very important subjects under discussion at the convention and much good was accomplished.

"The white paper situation also demanded and received much attention. It will receive much more in the near future, not only by advertising managers, but by all departments of the newspaper publishing business.

"Increased rates of advertising, however, has a direct bearing on this problem. All the members of the association present at the convention agreed that these two subjects were paramount.

"Another feature of interest was the activities of the advertising vilgance committees in all the important cities of the country. The 'Blue Sky' laws now in operation in many states make the work of these vilgance committees very valuable to the newspapers.

Copy Vigilance Approved

"We are going to recommend that all newspapers submit all copy to these committees. In Chicago we will ask the 'V. C.' to pass on every bit of copy. The chairman of the Chicago committee is giving us very valuable assistance and information. Such good work should be and will be encouraged and its usefulness extended."

E. W. Parsons, advertising manager of the Chicago Tribune, and secretary-treasurer of the association, felt that great progress was made and that much greater would be made in the matter of the censorship of medical advertising. He was pleased to learn that many of the smaller newspapers of the country are quite as strict as his own newspaper in censoring the copy of proprietory medicines.

He said:

"There was evidence at first of a question in the minds of most of us, I believe, as to the real worth of the Association.

"While those who were in attendance realized the difficulties that all advertising managers were confronted with during the year, the opinion was general that very little had been done to increase interest in the Association.

"After we had really done away with formalities, however, we all got down to business and I think really learned something from each other.

"It did me a great deal of good to learn, for instance, that smaller properties even than the Chicago Tribune had as strict or stricter censorship on medical advertising as the Tribune.

Marks Real Start

"It strengthened my opinion of our ruling concerning mail order business to know what other newspapers were doing and the reasons for their rulings—told in an informal way.

"It was most instructive to me to hear the other advertising managers discuss the subject of advertising rates, advertising restrictions on account of the white paper shortage, etc.

"Five hours were consumed in an informal discussion of all of the most important problems of the day confronting the newspaper advertising manager.

"It's always hard to get an organization started, but I believe the meeting of last Monday marked a real start for the National Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers toward success."

Frank R. Hussey of the Chicago Evening Post was one of the directors elected at the convention. He believes that the service bureau that was inaugurated by the appointment of a paid secretary has very great possibilities for good.

"Although this association is but one year old," he said, "and its activities were handicapped by the fact that it has been a very strenuous year for advertising managers, the meeting was a huge success, every one present feeling that his time had been most profitably spent.

Has Overcome Obstacles

"There is a great need and a big field for this association. There is no department of a newspaper that has received so little attention in the way of national co-operation as the advertising department, although it is the revenue producing end of the business.

"Even the American Newspaper Publishers Association barely recognizes it at their annual meetings. This association will give an opportunity not only for interchange of ideas and information as to advertising conditions in the various parts of the country, but will gradually develop into a service bureau which will be able to furnish information and newspaper data to the general advertiser and agency as well as to its members.

"We started the second year with a paid secretary which should greatly increase the efficiency of the organization and, I believe, everything considered, we have accomplished as much as could be expected in the first year.

"If the advertising managers of the country appreciate the opportunity that this organization offers for the betterment and advancement of newspaper advertising, our membership will reach a point during the coming year that will make this one of the strongest of the daily newspaper associations."

WHY BIG BUSINESS ADVERTISES TODAY

(BY TELEGRAPH) CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 18.

WHEN Editor & Publisher asked Harry Dwight Smith, president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, if he would care to reply to the statement made in the House of Representatives last week by Mr. Reavis of Nebraska that the large amounts of money being spent in advertising today is really an effort to defraud the Government of excess profits tax, he said:

"The charges made by Representative Reavis should not and probably will be taken very seriously. In these days of steadily rising costs of doing business, no merchant or manufacturer has to hunt for ways and means of increasing operating expenses and reducing profits.

"If the gentleman from Nebraska were to look into the matter he would find that while the total volume of advertising has increased, and while more merchants and manufacturers are learning that good advertising pays, yet the volume of advertising expenditure is no greater today in proportion to the total volume of business in this country than it was years ago.

"It may appear to be greater, but that is largely because the money is being more efficiently spent.

"Advertisers and their agency counsellors have learned how to make a dollar of expenditure in advertising look bigger and do more work than it used to.

"Furthermore, the greater part of increased advertising is the sum of the expenditures of a great army of comparatively small merchants and manufacturers, not of the expenditures of so-called big business.

"Big business that did not advertise formerly is advertising today because in doing so it has learned the value of advertising in extending markets, reducing selling costs and building good will. It learned the lesson from studying the experience of small business that grew big through wise advertising."

C. S. SMITH TRAVELING AMBASSADOR OF AMERICAN JOURNALISM

He Has Been in Many Parts of World in Quest of News Since War Broke in 1914—Knows Greatest Statesmen.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

PARIS, November 6.—American newspaper correspondents traveled widely during the great war and traveled under strange conditions, but probably none of the many journalists who gathered in Paris to report the Peace Conference had a longer or more unusual travel record for the war period than Charles Stephenson Smith of the Associated Press.

He inaugurated his war service by starting for Europe on the North German Lloyd steamer Kronprinzessin Cecile four days before war was declared in 1914 and ended up suddenly eight days later in Frenchman's Bay, at Bar Harbor, Maine, after a wild run to avoid British and French warships which were trying to land the $14,000,000 worth of gold and silver bullion the German liner was carrying.

Once Arrested as a German Spy

Smith then caught the St. Paul of the American Line and reached England before the war was three weeks old. He escaped from Ostend just four hours before the German forces took the town, was through the German lines repeatedly in Belgium, was thrown into an English jail at Hartlepool, England, under suspicion of being a German spy, the day the German light cruisers shelled Hartlepool, Whitby and Scarborough, and startled all the eastern coasts of England on a spy bunt

Traveled in Siberia

In May, 1915, he was ordered to China and started by way of New York on the White Star Line, Liverpool, which managed to escape the German submarines on the Irish coast which sank the Lusitania a few hours later. He reached China in time to see the ill-starred attempt of President Yuan Shih-kai to make himself emperor, and traveled widely through South China when the military movement against the monarchial restoration was raging.

Smith next went to Siberia and traveled extensively along the Trans-Siberian railroad line, which was stacked high with American goods which could not be moved because of the great burden placed upon the single track line, and saw the difficulties which the Entente was encountering through the breakdown of transportation.

His work took him to Shantung Province several times during 1915, and there he saw the havoc wrought by the Japanese in dislodging the single German stronghold in the Far East. He was still in China when the United States entered the war and during the months of international strife which finally resulted in China's severance of diplomatic relations with Germany and her final entry into the war.

With Root in Russia

When the Root Mission went to Russia in June, 1917, Smith joined the party at Vladivostok and was the only newspaper correspondent who made the trip to Petrograd on the deposed Czar's train with the mission which tried to bolster up the Kerensky government. He returned to Vladivostok with the mission and resumed his work in China, where one of the most disastrous floods in China's history made it necessary for him to travel many hundreds of miles by small boats through the sections flooded by the Grand Canal and the Yellow River.

In November, 1917, he again started across Siberia to take up permanent residence in Bolshevik Russia. He was assaulted and narrowly missed death at the hands of a Bolsheviki gang in Harbin, but after fourteen days of travel along the Trans-Siberian railway, finally reached Petrograd. In a few weeks the foreign embassies were forced to retreat to Vologda before the threatened German advance upon Petrograd, and Smith went to Moscow with the Bolsheviki Government.

With the Czecho-Slovaks

In May of 1918, Smith made a long tour through the grain-growing sections of Russia to study the land problems and was in Samara when the Czecho-Slovak forces began their now celebrated Odyssey through Siberia. He remained in Moscow until the arrival of American troops in Archangel turned the Bolsheviki against Americans.

Finally he left Russia by way of Finland with the last remnants of the American colony in September, 1918, traveled through Sweden and Norway and sailed to England by way of the Shetland and Orkney Islands, completing his trip around the world in over four years of war news service on three continents and in twelve different countries. He actually traveled more than one hundred thousand miles during the war.

Smith's assignment to the Peace Conference was but natural in view of the foregoing activities in connection with the war. As war correspondent in touch with the war activities of many countries throughout the world he had an intimate knowledge of the most vital problems pressing for settlement at the Paris Conference.

He likewise knew personally many of the statesmen who directed the proceedings of the Versailles meeting. As a result, he was a big factor in the Associated Press' splendid handling of the conference.

Student of World Problems

It is not hard to understand why Smith gets big assignments as he is a man of most pleasing personality, a keen observer, and a deep student of world problems. He adds to these qualities acquaintance with many of the world's leading statesmen, who, respecting his keen judgment and impartial treatment, do not hesitate to discuss intimately with him the great problems of the hour.

He is really a traveling ambassador of journalism, whose work promises to grow in value, for his conspicuous position has been attained at an early age.

Prior to becoming a war correspondent, Smith had a wide and interesting experience on American newspapers. After graduating from the University of Iowa, he was for some time on the staff of the Omaha Bee. He then went to the Washington Post and later joined the Washington office of the Associated Press.

In this position Smith covered in turn both houses of Congress, the War Department, Diplomatic Corps and the White House. In 1907 he became the managing editor of the Nashville Tennesseean, a position he filled for over five years. Then he joined the general staff of the Associated Press early in 1914, which was immediately followed by the assignment which has taken him on such a remarkable series of journeys.

In addition to his work in covering the Peace Conference, he recently acted as chief of the Paris Bureau of the Associated Press during the absence on vacation of Elmer Roberts, chief of staff for the A. P. in Paris.

THREE CENTS IN PITTSBURGH?

Publishers Gathering Data Before Definite Move

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

PITTSBURGH, PA., NOV. 16.—A move to increase the price of the local daily newspapers from two to three cents is now being considered by the Publishers' Association. T. R. Williams, business manager of the Press, attended the meeting of the Pennsylvania Associated Dailies at Harrisburg last week, to secure data and co-operation from the smaller publishers of the state.

Col. C. A. Rook, publisher of the Dispatch, is investigating the plans of publishers in Cleveland and other cities close to Pittsburgh, and it is thought that action will be taken very shortly by the publishers.

CUTS TO 14 PAGES

Tulsa Democrat Compelled to Make Drastic Reduction

TULSA, OKLA., NOV. 18.—The Democrat Wednesday announced that, owing to a serious shortage of news print, it was compelled to reduce to 14 pages for an indefinite period and that possibly the reduction might be still lower. For the past two months, the Democrat said, its supply of news print has been only two-thirds of orders and that recently a car load had gone astray between Kansas City and Tulsa. This necessitated the drastic change.

EUROPE HAS A REAL PAPER SHORTAGE

American Crisis Is Comparatively Mild, Says Universal Service Correspondent Visiting New York

"This convention to discuss ways of meeting a paper shortage is especially interesting to one who has recently returned from a long stay in Europe," remarked Robert J. Prew, who was covering the special newsprint convention of the A. N. P. A. last week for the Universal News Service, to a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Mr. Prew landed in the United States seven weeks ago after six years as a correspondent in London and Paris and sailed again November 13 to represent the Universal abroad.

"The paper shortage in Europe is far more acute than it is here. The big publishers in some instances have attained adequate supplies, but the smaller newspapers are hard pushed to secure paper.

"Where American publishers are now talking of reducing their newspapers below 40 pages, it is less than two years ago the Paris publishers were discussing the publication of their newspapers in one sheet.

"The situation was very bitter for a time. The public showed little sympathy for the struggling newspapers, which finally pulled through by dint of government assistance, but continued to publish small handkerchief-size newspapers.

"In Italy the situation was just as acute and it was further complicated by the general depression in all industries, which still exists.

"In England the Northcliffe press is guaranteed a steady supply from its own mills and newspapers like the Telegraph, Morning Post, and Daily Chronicle have managed to provide for their future needs, but in every case, the number of pages has been appreciably reduced and no publishers are prepared to increase the amount of print paper consumed daily.

"The European paper problem is inextricably bound up with shipping, but the number of bottoms available for transportation of pulp from Norway, Sweden and Canada is growing gradually. There is a keen fight going on between French and British publishers for the Scandinavian product, Canadian paper going chiefly to Great Britain.

"In connection with the apportionment of paper, it is interesting to note that the French publishers came to blows and had names more than once while paper was being allotted in Paris."

Has New Rotogravure Press

TOPEKA, KAN., NOV. 17.—Robert Maxwell, foreman of the Capper Publications pressroom, has turned over what is said to be the first rotogravure printing produced between St. Louis and the Rocky mountains. He has been working on his plan for about three years and has perfected a press which prints a sheet nine by twelve inches. The first cylinder was etched in Buffalo. Mr Maxwell has come to the work with the idea of perfecting a small press for rotogravure work.

Simons Buys Building

LAWRENCE, KAN., NOV. 17.—The building which the Lawrence Journal-World has occupied for the past seventeen years, has been purchased by W. C. Simons, the owner and editor of the paper. No special plans except for minor improvements have been made.

CLASSIFIED CONTRACTS SHOULD NOT REDUCE THE AVERAGE NET RATE OF CHARGES

DO CLASSIFIED advertising contracts increase lineage, and can they be used without lowering the average revenue? These questions come up from time to time in many newspaper offices. To aid any publishers now considering the contract problem the following opinions of newspaper representatives are given:

J. W. Hayes, business manager of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, believes that the small transient advertiser is entitled to as low a rate as the larger advertiser. He writes:

"We make no contracts for the classified columns. The rate is 2c. per word straight. It is our object to give the little fellow as cheap a rate as any one."

The Kansas City Star has no contracts, neither has the Los Angeles Times, while such papers as the Chicago Tribune, Detroit News, Cleveland Plain Dealer devote a large amount of sales effort to securing yearly contracts based on space or insertion.

The State, of Columbia, S. C., abolished contracts on November 1, placing all classified on a flat rate basis with no reductions for continuous consecutive insertions.

Another paper making gains without contracts is the Houston Chronicle.

In Oakland, California, the Tribune has no classified contracts, yet offers advertisers an inducement to run continuously. Its plan is explained by Morton McDonald, classified advertising manager, as follows: "We make a flat monthly rate and so derive a larger revenue than we would from contract business. We grant a 10 per cent discount if the advertiser reinserts his advertisement each month within 24 hours after expiration. Otherwise, he pays the full rate. There are no disputes about broken contracts and every advertisement is a 'trial order' at all times."

REAL "HIGH FLYER"

Longcope, Believer in Little Ads, Now at Washington

Starting as a furnished room solicitor on the Philadelphia Telegraph, T. Ridgeway Longcope soon realized the importance of classified advertising in building circulation, developing display advertisers and creating reader confidence.

T. RIDGEWAY LONGCOPE

Mr. Longcope's next position was that of classified manager of the Washington Times and two years later took a similar position with the Ottawa Citizen. He served with the Royal Flying Corps during the war and on receiving his discharge two years ago returned to the Washington Times. Under his management the classified has grown from three columns to two pages daily. Mr. Longcope is a great believer in classified promotion and has written a great deal of classified advertising copy.

Usual Transient Advertiser Does Not Care About Cost as Much as He Does About the Results.

BY C. L. PERKINS

ARTICLE V

longest definite period for which the Los Angeles Examiner accepts classified. Its reasons for not having longer contracts is given by R. E. Seiler, classified manager, who writes: "Practically everything that goes into the publishing of a newspaper is increasing in price. Therefore newspapers must be looking for opportunities of increasing revenue. Inasmuch as a large proportion of display advertising is tied up on yearly contracts, the classified offers the only loophole to the newspaper to a quick increase of revenue.

"A thirty-day contract is very advisable, however, because there are many professional concerns that have something to advertise in the classified columns of a newspaper every day. A thirty-day contract does not have the disadvantage of doing away with the loophole of increasing the newspaper's revenue and, at the time, it allows the advertiser to advertise on certain days, such as Monday and Saturday, when otherwise he might not do so.

"The thirty-day contract tends to increase volume in so far as it induces the advertiser to place copy on days which he might not otherwise use.

"The thirty-day contract tends to prevent the decrease of volume at certain seasons, though this is a tendency only. If the advertiser does not want to advertise at certain times, he will not do so whether he has a contract or not.

Means Lower Rate

"The contract is very beneficial to the advertiser, inasmuch as he secures the lower rates and also gives his advertisement the best possible chance to secure results.

"Space contracts are very inadvisable. On the space contract, the advertiser will contract for more space than he can really use in order to secure a lower rate. During the first part of the life of the space contract, he will advertise when he normally would any way. During the latter part of the contract, he faces the situation of using a great deal more than he can really afford or else the chance of being short-rated. If the newspaper forces him to use more space than he can afford in order to have him live up to his contract or forces him to pay short rate on the advertising that he has used, the result in either case is a dissatisfied advertiser.

"The thirty-day contract ought to offer about a 15 per cent. reduction over the one-time rates. The 15 per cent. reduction is sufficient to induce the advertiser to sign a contract to advertise on certain days which he would not otherwise use."

Among the advocates of yearly contracts is H. G. Barringer, classified manager of the Indianapolis News. He writes:

"We use a classified contract which gives a lower rate than the transient rate and the privilege of four distinct ways to earn this rate. We give the lowest rate to the advertiser who will obligate himself to use three lines or more of advertising each day during the period of one year. The second lowest rate is given on a contract calling for five lines or more, three times each week—days generally specified. We also make a contract for three and one thousand lines, to be used within one year. The rates for these two contracts are a half a cent and one cent higher than the first two.

"In all, the News has about four hundred contracts with its advertisers, and approximately 85 per cent of these contracts call for daily insertions. These advertisers form a sort of foundation for the classified section for the reason that they can be depended upon to be in with a regular ad regardless of conditions.

"In building up classified it is very important that the volume and individual offering be as great as possible under all conditions in order that the reader interest may be maintained from day to day, and greatly increased as a better understanding of the power of the want-ad is gained, not only by regular contract advertisers, but also by the individual. The volume, including a large variety of offerings, tends to build up reader interest among the reading patrons of a newspaper, and is the magnet which induces the individual to use its columns for profit.

The Two-Liners

"A great many papers throughout the country use a two-line daily contract. Two lines, or twelve words, in most cases does not permit a description of any article for sale or wanted, and naturally does not produce satisfactory results.

"The proper reduction which should be made to an advertiser who is willing to use a space or daily contract should range from fifteen to twenty-five per cent."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has a limited classified contract in certain classifications, but these are not beneficial, according to the classified manager, C. W. Nax. He says: "I have given contracts for classified a long consideration, and have almost reached a conclusion that it is of no benefit to the paper.

"Practically every contract that we have in force is with an advertiser who, regardless of rate, would use at least 50 lines of space a week, and by having a contract he secures a low rate, but does not increase his space, because of the contract.

"Two years ago I eliminated all contracts for 'help wanted' advertising and increased our rate 50 per cent. There was no decrease in this business.

Real Estate Rates

"We have never had a contract with real estate agents. We make a flat rate with them less than our card rate. We are relieved by this arrangement of the necessity of constantly renewing contracts and forcing advertisers against their will to use space they have no need for, or making a short rate charge against them which usually makes an advertiser feel unkindly to the paper.

"The cost to the publisher of printing and circulating a 14-line advertisement of a large advertiser is the same as the cost of the same size advertisement from a small advertiser. There is no reason, therefore, that I can see, why one man, because he has more money to spend, should be permitted to buy his space at a less cost.

"The large user of space is charged the same rate as the man who has small wants and uses very little, hnt we have found that this method has encouraged the young man starting in business to advertise because he realized he is buying space on the same basis as the large dealers."

Harry Gwaltney, classified manager of the Milwaukee Journal states the case in favor of contracts as follows: "I am of the opinion that contracts do increase volume—insure a certain amount of contract advertisers' business in your paper—keep them there long enough to prove the value of advertising to them.

"The 'every-day' contract is the better form. It prevents decreases

"CLASSIFIED" CAN BE PLANNED AHEAD

IN connection with the world series games recently played in Cincinnati, the Post two weeks before the first contest, circularized over 1000 "Furnished Room for Rent" advertisers in Cincinnati, setting forth its unusual opportunity to rent rooms while the World Series was on and inviting them to use the columns of the Post.

To supplement this, it published display advertisements in the five leading Ohio cities outside of Cincinnati, stating that the Cincinnati Post would contain a complete directory of furnished rooms for a week prior to the World Series and offered to supply a free copy to any prospective World Series visitor.

In the circular to the rooming house owners, the Post capitalized on this outside advertising. The results were more than gratifying, the paper running several hundred "Furnished Room" ads above its average during the week before the series was played and it is still getting copy on the strength of the campaign.

NEWS PRINT AND RATES CONSIDERED BY VIRGINIA PRESS ASSOCIATION

Printing School Established — Resolution Adopted to Organize Daily Papers of State at Meeting in January.

(BY TELEGRAPH) NEWPORT NEWS, Nov. 17

PROGRESSIVE action was taken by the Virginia Press Association at the meeting held in this city last Thursday and Friday, chief among which was the announcement by Dr. Julian A. Burruss, president of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, at Blacksburg, that complying with the association's request the Board of Visitors had included in its budget for 1920 an appropriation for the establishment of a department of printing engineering.

It is planned to have the linotype instruction school ready for a course of intensive training by the opening of the January term, January 5, and later a course running from one to two years in various branches of printing will be available.

Thomas Tells of News Print Situation

Resolutions adopted favored the calling of a meeting of the publishers of daily papers of Virginia in convention in Richmond about January 15 for the purpose of forming a Virginia association of dailies.

The convention opened Thursday morning with a small attendance, but every section of the state was represented. Featuring this session was a talk by W. E. Thomas, general manager of the Roanoke Times, on the print paper situation. He had just returned from a visit to the northern mills. In part Mr. Thomas said:

No Contracts at Any Price

"That whereas the manufacturers of print paper a few years ago were glad to sell their wares at something more than two cents a pound, freight prepaid; they are now so independent that they are not disposed to make contracts at any price, preferring to sell on the open market, where the demand is far beyond the supply with spot prices ranging from six to seven cents and higher." The tight market was due, he said, to several causes.

"First, very few publishers made contracts for 1919 consumption adequate for their actual demands and as a result, publishers are bidding against each other for the available supply. Again there appears to be every reason to expect an increasing demand for news print. Both circulation and advertising are growing, particularly in the south, and the outlook is for continuation of this growth and an increased demand for print paper.

"My information," he continued, "is that the mills will make every effort to supply publishers, but there are a number of publishers throughout the country who have been notified by the International Paper Company that they must look elsewhere for their supply of paper.

All Must Economize

"These conditions ought to awaken the publisher, knowing as he does that every little increased production of news print is apparent. If he does not awaken to the situation there will come a time during the coming winter, or early next year, when he will not be able to buy or borrow.

"The news print committee of both the A. N. P. A. and the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association are recommending the enforcement of the strictest economy. But all their recommendations will prove futile unless publishers all over the country are forced to economize. What would it profit the small dailies of Virginia to cut down, if the larger dailies continue their plunging career for business. Some of them are using three cars of paper per week. As long as they can get the paper they will continue to take business. And who can blame them? Thus the waste goes on. It is a mad race that will eventually culminate in disaster.

"The mill owners are autocrats. They are intrenched behind impregnable breastworks. Their inclination is to get the very highest price.

Only Two Remedies

"There are but two remedies:

"One to raise the subscription price to a standard to meet the increased cost of paper, which of course, some publishers is not anxious to do, as it requires one year to get the full benefit of an increase in circulation rates.

"The other is to increase the cost of advertising to such a figure as will force advertisers to use smaller space, thereby cutting down the size of the paper and producing relatively the same amount of income.

"This leads to the crux of the question. How this news print situation is to affect the daily and weekly newspapers of the association?

"First, it has forced both daily and weekly publications to seek a higher level, July will figure the cost of print paper into our business at what we are likely to pay for it, and fix our circulation rates and our advertising rates accordingly.

Ad Rates Must Raise With Cost

"It is not fair that all increased costs should fall on the advertiser. The subscriber should be made to bear his reasonable part of the increase. It is obvious, therefore, that daily papers should increase further their subscription rates 25 to 50 per cent, and weekly papers instead of getting $1 a year should get $1.50 and $2.00.

"Advertising rates should be moved up in proportion to the cost of labor and materials. The situation means that all of us have got to have the right price for what we sell, or inevitable disaster will face us."

Walter Savery, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, formerly a Virginia newspaper editor and an honorary member of the association, told of the "hole in the bucket that must be filled by production." His talk was very impressive.

Friday morning M. T. Harrison, of the Bedford Democrat, told why weeklies should receive $1.50 or more for subscriptions.

John Budd of New York spoke on "Uniform, or Standard Advertising Rates" and in part said:

"Most newspaper publishers assume —many of these most emphatically—that the only thing they sell is space: some qualify by the statement that it is space multiplied by circulation, and I have argued long on that theory myself. But I have changed my thoughts. Those are only the tangible, measurable features of the thing.

"You are selling an opportunity, an opportunity and the convenience, a vehicle to the man to put his sales talks before the audience you have gathered for him. For whether he exploits an idea, a package of goods or a piece of machinery, his advertising is sales talk.

"The publisher, particularly the newspaper publisher, who holds fast to the old idea that all he sells to the advertiser is space, any old kind of space, and allows his actions and his attitude to be governed by that opinion, is missing the biggest and best features of the present day development of advertising. The national advertiser knows that advertising and salesmanship must go hand in hand if they are not regular Siamese twins. He plans and schemes to make them co-ordinate. The local advertiser naturally does this whether he realizes it or not and he can be taught to think and shown how more greatly to profit by it.

"My personal opinion is that newspaper rates as a rule are today far too low quite considerably have been. Partly because of the tremendously increased cost of production they are today further below a safe basic line than they have been at any time in the past. It is difficult to realize this perhaps because of the abnormal increase of advertising tonnage brought about by causes, some quite obvious, some obscure."

Edward Percy Howard, editor of the American Press, of New York, addressed the convention on the subject of advertising and urged the publishers to stick to their cards and never cut rates.

"When you begin to cut," said he, "you are heading for the rocks." Mr. Howard declared that the advertising agent does not want the publisher cut his rate, and when the agent tries to hammer the rate down he is merely doing his duty, and that whether or not the rate is firm and that some other agency may not buy the same space at a lower rate. Mr. Howard also assured the country publishers that while local advertising was limited there was no limit to foreign advertising.

The publishers were also warned most earnestly not to change their space for commodities. "Buy for cash and sell for cash," was his advice. Mr. Howard agreed heartily with Mr. Budd in recommending the flat rate in all cases. As for circulation that was a matter of quality rather than quantity. The main question was whether or not the paper covered the territory in which it circulated. The country paper cannot fight its battles alone. It must deal with the national advertisers through reliable advertising agencies.

MILLS SHIPPED 1,409 TONS OVER PRODUCT

Machines Turn Out 7 Per Cent More News Print Than Last Year—Stocks Remain Stationary

The 39 companies reporting to the News Print Service Bureau produced 169,749 tons and shipped 171,158 tons during October. Shipments exceeded production by 1,409 tons. Production figures include 2,662 tons of hanging, of which 483 tons were made in Canada.

The average daily production of news print paper by the mills reporting for October amounted to 1037 per cent, of the average daily output during the three months of greatest production in 1918.

Production by United States mills during the first ten months of 1919 was 61,184 tons, or 7 per cent. greater than during the same months in 1918. Canadian production during this period exceeded that of the ten months in 1918 by 45,940 tons, or 8 per cent., making combined production of the 39 reporting companies 107,124 tons or 7 per cent. greater than in the first ten months of 1918.

Stocks during October decreased 1,643 tons at United States mill points, which was due mostly to an adjustment made by one of the large companies, and increased 1,643 tons at Canadian mills, making total stocks the same on October 31, 1919, as on September 30.

The total of 26,929 tons on hand at all mills October 31 amounted to slightly more than four days' production.

APPROVE GLASS AS SENATOR

Editor Looked Upon as Valuable Addition to Upper House

Carter Glass' appointment as U. S. Senator from Virginia, in the place of the late Senator Martin, is receiving with general approval on the part of the press of all politics throughout the country.

The New York Sun (Republican) for example, says:

"If Carter Glass of Virginia, who has been appointed to the United States Senate as successor to the late Thomas S. Martin, knows into that chamber the intimate and complete knowledge of Uncle Sam's financial affairs he should possess after his service as Secretary of the Treasury, and a firm determination to stand unflinchingly for economy in national expenditures, he is likely to make an exceedingly useful legislator. We can't have too many informed watchdogs of the Treasury in Congress."

Mr. Glass in private life is editor and publisher of the Lynchburg (Va.) News and Advance.

I. N. S. APPOINTS MASON BERLIN CHIEF

Has Had Wide Experience As Soldier and Writer — Acted as American "Ambassador" After the War

The appointment of Capt. Frank E. Mason as chief correspondent of the International News Service at Berlin was announced this week.

Few newspaper men have had the varied experience of Frank Mason. Since 1907 when, as he says, he sat up all night to see his first story in the Milwaukee Sentinel, Frank Mason has been everything from a cub reporter to the unofficial American Ambassador in Berlin.

CAPT. FRANK E. MASON

He has filled every job with ability and rare good judgment—he even occupied the desk of former Ambassador James W. Gerard in the strife-ridden German capital during some of the most critical periods of the new Republic's childhood, and got away with it in such fine shape that he was given the thanks of the State Department.

Served in Army Through War

Mason sort of inherited his ambassadorial job. He served through the war with distinction as regimental intelligence officer for the old 9th Infantry of the Second Division, about whose exploits nothing need be said, and after the armistice, went to Trier, in the American area of occupied Germany, for eensorship intelligence.

In April the Chief of Staff sent him on to Berlin, as liaison officer. Berlin at that time wasn't exactly a quiet resort. It was seething. Mason filled his job, as usual, and then, as he says, "the A. E. F. went home and left me here."

Mason wasn't left for very long, however. He was practically the only American in Berlin who knew anything of conditions. His had been the task of representing the American Army in Berlin, and thus the American Government, as we were still at war with Germany, so when the A. E. F. went home Washington grabbed him and made him stay there. He was told to pick out a desk—there were plenty of unoccupied American desks in Berlin.

After looking around he spotted the desk used by Mr. Gerard, and proceeded to occupy it until early fall as a sort of general factotum of American affairs in Berlin. It was good fun for a while, but Mason wanted to "get back into the game," so he journeyed to Paris and persuaded the Army to let him go, so he could join up with the I. N. S. European staff.

Mason got his military training in one of the early officers' training camps in this country. He graduated a second lieutenant, was immediately assigned to the 9th Infantry, and went overseas with that destined to be famous regiment. He was promoted to be first lieutenant in August and received his captaincy just before the armistice was signed. He saw the war from Chateau Thierry on—and from the inside.

From January, 1919, to April, 1919, he served as officer in charge of eensorship at advaneed G. H. Q. at Trier.

Mason is still a young man to have such a varied career. He is 27 years old, and a product of turbulent Milwaukee. His father is Dr. George F. Mason, of 395 Park Place, Milwaukee.

He broke in on the Milwaukee Sentinel and worked there for two years Growing tired of the Sentinel grind, Mason quit the daily field and tried his hand at advertising, publicity and kindred things. He stuck to the advertising and trade publication game until 1913, when he decided he didn't know enough and went to Ohio State University for more eduration. He edited the Ohio State Lantern in 1913-14.

The following year he went to the American Boy Magazine, and when the war broke out in 1917 he was still there, serving as assistant editor.

Mason speaks both Freneh and German fluently. His experience in Berlin has given him a keen knowledge of the ins and outs of the hectic political situation in the new-born republic, and his dispatches will be received with interest.

D. J. Davies, formerly city editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, has been sent to New York in charge of the Dispatch bureau. Paul Young is now eity editor of the Dispatch.

IN OCTOBER

The Detroit Sunday News

Carried More Net Paid Advertising Than Has Ever Been Published By Any Michigan Sunday Paper In a 4 Sunday Month

666,100 Lines

AS a natural corollary to its constant increase and lead in circulation, The Detroit Sunday News for October established a new high mark in Michigan Sunday advertising, setting aside its own and only Sunday competitor's highest records for any four-Sunday month.

With the net paid increase of 9,743 copies over the preceding month and 49% more net paid city circulation than that of its only Sunday competitor, The Detroit Sunday News is the logical first choice of advertisers in the Detroit Sunday field.

Such advertisers are supported in their excellent judgment by those who are most intimately in touch with Detroit--the local classified users. These for years have shown a preference for The Detroit Sunday News to such an extent that during October 63% more Want Ads were published in The Detroit Sunday News than in the only other Detroit Sunday paper.

Those who have quality or class merchandise to sell substantiate the good judgment of Sunday News advertisers also, for The Detroit Sunday News besides leading in total and Want Ad lineage surpassed its only Sunday competitor in Rotogravure advertising by 33%.

Concentrate your advertising. Cover the rich Detroit field thoroughly at one cost through the paper that can furnish this service. Over 214,000 families now read The Detroit Sunday News.

INCREASE IS CERTAIN IN CANADA

But No Definite Announcement on 1920 News Print Price Is Expected for Another Month

MONTREAL, Nov. 15.—Canadian newspaper men are speculating a good deal as to what price they will have to pay for news print in 1920. The recent announcement of the International Paper Company that its selling price will be 4½ cents a pound or $90 per ton is generally interpreted as being an excuse for the Canadian manufacturers of news to follow suit.

The International Paper Company is not only the largest producer of news print in the United States, but recently commenced the building of a huge $6,000,000 plant at Three Rivers. The decision of this big competitor of Canadian newsprint mills, in fixing its price at $90 a ton is likely to affect the view point of the Canadian manufacturers. A report was current here for some time that the Canadian price would probably be fixed at 4½ cents a pound, or $85 a ton, but that was before the International made its announcement. It is now thought that the Canadian mills will raise the selling price to a level corresponding with that fixed by the International.

At the offices of the Canadian Export Paper Company, inquiries were made regarding the 1920 price, but Enyon & Pemberton's correspondent was informed that no decision had been arrived at and that it will likely be another month before an announcement regarding 1920 price is made public.

G. F. Steele, the manager of the Canadian Export Paper Company, is now in England. It is expected that his investigation of conditions in that country will have some effect on the price decision to be arrived at.

One thing is certain and that is the publishers are likely to pay more in 1920 than they did in 1919, but how much more will not be known for another month or so.

D'Annunzio Does Not Like U. S. Correspondents

Deports Decker, Clayton and Ryan of Chicago at Point of Bayonet

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—Details of the troubles experienced by Alfred Decker, staff correspondent for the Tribune, and John Clayton of the Daily News in reporting the activities of D'Annunzio in Fiume, Italy, are just being received here. The men were recently deported by the Italian filibuster's soldiery, being compelled to walk seven miles across the border at the points of bayonets.

Clayton was held a prisoner for eight hours before being escorted out of the city. The arrests were made, it is said, on information of one Henry Furst, who claims to be an American with a home in New York City, and who handles D'Annunzio's foreign propaganda.

T. S. Ryan, predecessor to Clayton for the Chicago Tribune in Fiume, also had a similar experience as a result of his cabled reports to his paper on the recent Italian massacre of French troops by Italians. Armed soldiery broke into his room at midnight and he states that "a single American officer's uniform in my room was probably all that saved my life."

Readjustments, Trouble and Delays or "ONE-SET" and Efficiency?

GOODRICH laboratories worked two years in perfecting an inking roller that would make possible greater press-room efficiency. The Goodrich "ONE-SET" Automatic Suction Roller is the result.

Goodrich "ONE-SET" Rollers are immune from temperature changes—hot or cold weather, slow or fast speed. They require no wash-ups, have the right properties of "tack," distribute perfectly, are not affected by water, and they wear indefinitely. That's why, as this advertisement goes to press, we can number over one hundred large, progressive newspapers that have adopted "ONE-SET."

Note the condition of the old style roller at the left of the question mark after only a short run. This could not happen to "ONE-SET." "ONE-SET" was run continuously on one leading newspaper for nearly two years without showing the slightest signs of wear.

Write today for prices, stating core diameter, finished diameter, and length of cover face—or, better yet, send us a core to be recovered and let "ONE-SET" prove its practical worth.

Californians in San Francisco Meeting, Endorse Postal Zones, Higher Ad end Circulation Rates and Anti-Japanese Laws.

(BY TELEGRAPH)

SACRAMENTO, CAL., NOV. 18—The most successful business convention in the history of the California Press Association was held in San Francisco on November 14 and 15, closing with a brilliant banquet and dance at the Press Club. One hundred and twenty editors from all parts of the State were present.

The association went on record in favor of truth in advertising, raising of rates to meet increased costs, promotion of thrift, zone rates of postage, Government regulation of paper costs, teaching of journalism and printing in schools, restoration of landmarks and laws to suppress menace of Japanese land holding, immigration and naturalization.

Friend W. Richardson, president of the association, presided, and twelve of the fourteen members of the executive committee were in attendance.

Tells of A. A. C. W. Work

The meeting opened with an interesting address by Major O. H. Fernbach, on the experience of a newspaper man at the front in the Intelligence Department, and the need of trained newspaper men for such work.

"Truth in Advertising" was the subject of an able address by Rollin Ayers, vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, who gave many illustrations of the work being done by the A. A. C. W. to stop untruthful advertising.

Methods of getting and holding church advertising were interestingly explained by B. A. Forster, who, as manager of the Oakland Tribune, has made a big success in this line. Many interesting suggestions were obtained from Coulter McKeever of the H. K. McCann Advertising Agency on the methods of national advertisers and the importance of closely following instructions. As the majority of California newspaper men run both newspaper and job plants, part of the session was devoted to printing.

William H. Barry, president of California Typotheatae, explained the importance of maintaining proper prices for printing and gave a report of the convention of the United Typothetae. Henry M. Hastings, cost expert and secretary of the typotheae, made practical demonstrations of cost finding and gave each member a price list for job printing.

Printers Get an Inning

The evening of November 14 was devoted to a meeting of the executive council of the typothetae. State Senator William R. Sharkey, Martinez Standard, introduced a resolution asking for a special legislative session to prevent Japanese from leasing and owning real estate. Senator Sharkey dramatically described the menace of the Japanese who are coming to California in large numbers and in some counties have larger birth rate than the whites.

Duncan McPherson, Santa Cruz Sentinel, made a strong plea for the resolution, as did A. A. Wendering, Berkeley Gazette, and W. A. Shepard, Auburn Herald, and J. D. Dean, Manteca Bulletin. It was adopted by acclamation.

Preservation of ancient state land marks and missions was advocated by M. F. Cochrane, San Rafael Independent, and Elmer Moberly, Santa Rosa Republican, and was endorsed by convention.

That the shortage of printers and reporters must be met by teaching printing and journalism in universities and high schools was the opinion of the meeting.

Richard Boone, professor of education at the University California, spoke of teaching printing in schools, and Newton Booth Drury, chairman journalistic studies at the University California, gave an address on teaching journalism. General discussion of the subject was indulged in by J. E. Olmsted, Petaluma Argus, W. F. Mixon, Woodland Mail, and George A. Pflueger, Alameda News.

Zone Law Endorsed

It was decided to make a determined effort to induce California Senators and Congressmen to support the present zone postal law and resist all efforts to repeal it.

E. O. Wickizer, Pasadena Record, spoke for the zone rates. Chairman Richardson explained that the association was on record for the present zone rates and that every county and regional association in the state, as well as practically every local publisher, stood firmly for the zone rates.

The topic of thrift brought forth an eloquent plea from B. F. Irvine, of the Portland Oregonian, for a drive to stop the present orgy of extravagance which is sweeping the land like a pestilence. He spoke in behalf of the United States War Loan Organization and urged newspapers to use their influence to stop the people in the mad folly of reckless spending. The association strongly backed his suggestion.

Round table discussions were held on several topics and the views of members obtained.

The paper question was the topic of Louis Meyer, Oakland Leader, and Justis Craemer, Orange News. It was the concensus of opinion that rates of subscriptions and advertising must be raised and that the government should regulate the selling price of news print.

With this topic came the question of the resulting of raising rates. F. G. Dunnicliff, Dixon Tribune, and J. Elmer Moberley, Santa Rosa Republican, said no loss had been suffered by the raise and that the advertisers and subscribers expect it. Members were urged to raise rates to meet labor and paper costs.

Ask Federal Paper Rules

A. J. Harder, Roseville Register, gave proof of the boggishness of metropolitan job shops in underbidding county shops in violation of their own schedules and promises.

George G. Radcliff, Sacramento Sunday News, spoke of the importance of county organizations in solving newspaper problems.

A rate for official advertising was decided upon of $1 for first insertion and 50 cents for each subsequent insertion. Three-quarters of an inch nonpareil, or 63 words, was declared a square.

A schedule of various publications and rates were prepared by a committee composed of J. E. Olmsted, Petaluma Argus, Howard Russell of the Sanger News, and D. G. Dega, Willows Transcript.

Crombie Allen, Ontario Report, wrote a protest against the methods of the Western newspaper union.

President Richardson announced that the railroads would undoubtedly go back to private ownership on January 1 and that advertising would be resumed.

An invitation was received to hold the annual spring meeting in Imperial Valley.

Newspaper printers in Naples, Italy, have struck for a 50 per cent increase in wages.

KANSAS CITY PAPERS DISOWN I. E. A.

Money-Raising Campaign Among Business Men Drews Denial of Support From Local Press and Staffs

KANSAS CITY, NOV. 15.—Kansas City newspapers and newspaper men are not taking to the efforts of the International Editorial Association to hold a state convention here in December, and attempts to solicit subscriptions among the business men of the city met with announcement in the newspapers that neither did they, nor their staffs, endorse the money-raising efforts.

The Kansis City Star was the first to call attention of the public and the business men, by announcing through its columns Friday night that, not only did it not endorse the campaign to raise funds by subscriptions, but that no Kansas City newspaper men, as far as it knew, were identified with the movement. It said:

"The Star has received several inquiries from Kansas City business firms regarding solicitations of money for an organization called 'The International Editorial Association,' with headquarters in Bedford, Va. The solicitor has literature beginning, 'I am the International Editorial Association. I am your one best bet. Get acquainted with me.'

"The literature is addressed to newspaper writers, but the soliciting seems to be from bankers, and other business men. None of the members of the Star's staff knows anything about the International Editorial Association or its sponsor."

The Kansas City Journal on Saturday had the following to say of the solicitation:

"Kansas City business men are being solicited for contributions to an organization styling itself 'The International Editorial Association.' The concern alleges its home office is located in Bedford, Va. No one connected with the Journal knows anything regarding this so-called organization or its sponsor As far as the Journal knows, no Kansas City newspaper man is identified with it."

At the Post it was stated that no word had been received there regarding any solicitation, and nothing was known of the organization except the literature —which "I threw into the waste basket," Dick Smith, managing editor, stated.

"If the organization is not right, we will not stand for it," Mr. Smith continued. "It looks to me like something is wrong when solicitation is made of business men. So far as I know, no one connected with the Post knows anything about it."

Inquiry among other Kansas City newspaper men developed the fact that before the general statements made recently in the local newspapers, and the arrival of some of the literature, which, as a rule, found its way into the waste baskets, a few were interested in the proposition, but when they learned that the movement was being supported by solicitation outside the profession, they gave evidence of disgust that such work was being done.

Whether any efforts at solicitation of funds outside of Kansas City is being made is not known today, but the convention is scheduled for this city in December, and an effort may be made to interest other newspapers outside this city.

"I. N. S. always FIRST!"

This slogan of the most reliable afternoon wire organization again exemplified in the astonishing chain of beats scored on the big stories of the COAL STRIKE.

Here's what a few of I. N. S. clients say:

"Say! That was a dandy service you gave us from Indianapolis and Washington on the Coal Strike. Can always count on you."
Charles L. H. Long, Editor,
Newark American Tribune.

"You enabled the Georgian to give the Journal a good licking on the Federal Court decision requiring the officials of the United Mine Workers to recall strike order."
William Clemens, Managing Editor,
Atlanta Georgian.

"Appreciate prompt, accurate and efficient service of I. N. S. in covering coal strike. Developments were reported in highly satisfactory fashion."
W. B. Morton, Managing Editor,
Nashville Banner.

"Congratulations on your strike service. Was full and up-to-the-minute."
Times Union, Rochester, N. Y.

"Your news dispatches prompt and comprehensive. Congratulations."
Dan Carroll, Times Union, Albany, N. Y.

"We went extra on your first flash bulletin, scoring a beat."
G. K. Rudolph, Buffalo Enquirer.

"Your dope yesterday from Indianapolis made opposition look sick."
Glen Falls Times.

"Coal strike service excellent. Stories timely, well-written and frequently ahead of opposition."
James I. Bicket, Chicago American.

"Service great. In several instances ahead of other news sérvice in getting latest 'stuff' over---especially on the flash of Judge Anderson's decision."
Charles E. Young, Baltimore Star.

"Special articles fine, and you beat the other wires from five to seventeen minutes on two of the biggest stories."
M. E. Foster, Houston Chronicle,
Houston, Tex.

"Beat oppositon by five minutes on flash of strike recall."

ARGUES FOR RATIONING NEWS PRINT

Circulation Must Have Deadline and Advertisers' Space Be Limited—Increased Rates Alone Not Enough, Says Stewart

[Mr. Stewart's views on the news print situation made such a deep impression upon the members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in special convention last week, that EDITOR & PUBLISHER *asked him to present them briefly for the benefit of publishers who were unable to attend the meeting. His suggestions, as given below, were commented upon by President Frank P. Glass as among the most constructive presented at the meeting, and they strongly influenced the recommendations of the resolutions committee—*EDITORIAL NOTE.]

By JOHN L. STEWART

PUBLISHER THE WASHINGTON (PA.) OBSERVER AND REPORTER AND BEAVER (PA.) DAILY TIMES

That the present serious situation among the newspapers, the inadequate supply of news print, is due to the fact that the newspapers of the country are using more paper than the paper manufacturers can supply with their present equipment is obvious. It can be solved by increasing production, but that is up to the makers of news print.

The present crisis can only be met by the newspaper publishers themselves through a strict rationing. In other words, the newspapers of this country must meet this situation for their own protection by limiting the number of papers they print from day to day and by reducing the sizes of their publications or both.

Much has been said about increasing the price of the newspapers from 2 to 3 cents and raising the advertising rates. These, however, are only means to an end and may or may not accomplish the desired end itself—viz., the reduction of consumption.

From my own experience I have found that an increase in the price of my newspapers has not cut down the number of subscribers; also that the increase of rates for advertising has increased rather than decreased the volume. Perhaps I could increase the prices of both to such an extent that few people could afford to buy my papers or advertise in them, but as an economic and business proposition we can only increase prices to a certain extent. We can, after all, only charge a fair rate and what is fair must be determined by the publisher himself through his own experience in the business, the conditions in his own local field and the experiences of others. The newsprint situation can be met if the publishers of this country will take common-sense measures.

For example, we have given notice to the subscribers of the Observer and the Reporter that we will print only so many papers per day—not over 15,000, which figure represents approximately the average press-run for the months of September and October. This is the maximum number which can be run on any one day and the circulation department is instructed to keep it below this whenever possible.

Preference will be given to mail subscribers who are, of course, paid-in-advance, and to those who are served by our own carriers on city routes and who are on our regular list of subscribers. Approximately 10,500 out of the total are on this list.

The others are supplied with their papers through agents or from the newsboys. The supply of the latter two will be cut off or rationed among them if we are unable to meet the demand over and above the maximum press run of 15,000.

Advertisers Rationed Also

We have met the advertising situation by giving notice to all our advertisers that we will not print over 76 pages any one week, which was approximately the average number printed each week during the months of September and October. We will not print more than 16 pages on Friday—the big advertising day, and this leaves an average of 12 for each of the other days. If some week we can get out on less than that we will be in a position to enlarge on the following week.

But our idea or purpose is to ration our output in the number of papers printed and in the number of pages to an issue, so that we will not consume more paper than we have on hand or already contracted for between this and January 1, 1920.

Our experience showed that when we secured the co-operation of advertisers to use Thursday's paper to reduce the volume on Friday that we had two situations of the same kind to meet instead of one—a bigger paper on Thursday and no reduction in space on Friday. Now we have informed our advertisers that they too must be rationed.

Notice has gone out to all advertisers that preference will be given for large space to those who are in daily and who have copy in early.

Advertisers are asked to make known their needs long enough ahead of time so that it will be possible to ration the space which we have for certain days. In this way we will apportion our space to our advertisers and keep down the size of our papers.

I figure that advertising space will be more valuable because it is harder to secure and after all space in any medium is only large or small, high or low in price, by comparison. It is far better for an advertiser to dominate a page with a forty-inch ad among a dozen smaller advertisers than for him to have a page advertisement among many pages of bill-board displays.

Smaller Advertising Preferable

His advertisement has a stronger pulling power, more character and every one of the small advertisers is better satisfied. And all of them can afford to pay double the price they are paying now on the page lay-out, spread-eagle style of advertising at comparatively low rates.

I believe that if every newspaper publisher in the United States, especially those in the large cities and in the smaller ones who have circulations over 10,000, would follow out this plan that the news print situation, within a period of three or four months, would readjust itself.

The publishers would be better off even if they lose money now because they would make it up in reduced cost of news print in the future and in securing better rates for advertising. The entire newspaper business throughout the country would also be stabilized on a sound economic basis.

The Star League of Indiana Gained 5,030,928 Agate Lines During the First Eight Months of 1919

The Star League of Indiana consists of The Indianapolis Star, The Terre Haute Star and The Muncie Star.

These three newspapers, each located in a rich and prosperous Indiana city, cover each and every one of Indiana's ninety-two counties every morning in the year.

The total daily circulation of these three newspapers, as given in the last government statement, covering an average of the six months ending September 30, was 149,065 copies.

This circulation represents a large percentage of the able-to-buy readers in the richest section of the Mississippi valley.

The tremendous advertising gains made by the Star League newspapers during the first eight months of this year show—

That wise advertisers realize that in order to successfully reach the responsive and financially-able citizens of Indiana, they must use the advertising columns of

SEMI-ANNUAL LIST OF

THE ENGLISH-LANGUAGE DAILY NEWSPAPERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Including Circulation Figures as of A. B. C. and Government Reports of October 1, 1919, and Rates for National Advertising Revised to November 1, 1919, by Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc.

WILL BE ISSUED NEXT WEEK, NOVEMBER 27th

THESE LISTS, carrying data of immediate and incalculable value to all Advertising Agencies, National Advertisers and Space-Buyers generally, will be issued as a SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, convenient for filing.

¶ As in the cases of previous semi-annual lists of this character, EDITOR & PUBLISHER has had the valuable co-operation in their preparation and verification of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Chicago. This assures the accuracy of the lists and of the circulation and advertising figures given.

¶ No other service feature ever carried by a trade newspaper in this field has appealed so strongly as this one appeals to all who have to do with planning and placing national advertising in the daily newspapers. It is an exclusive EDITOR & PUBLISHER feature, and is available to space-buyers only through this publication.

¶ EDITOR & PUBLISHER, through presenting to buyers of advertising up-to-date information as to daily newspapers, their rates and circulations, has already succeeded in turning toward the newspapers a great volume of national advertising heretofore dormant or diverted to other media.

¶ A limited amount of newspaper advertising—addressed to buyers of newspaper space—will be accepted for this SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT. This advertising will, truly, be "linked-up" with "buyer-interest" in the data which accompany it. It will have as long "life" as the supplement itself—an appeal covering at least six months.

¶ Applications for space in this supplement should be made at once by wire and copy should follow immediately. Reservations will be made in the order in which applications are made—and the available space is limited, as is the time for action!

DETROIT IS AGAINST WRITERS' UNIONS

Only Asset a Paper Has Is "Good Will" and Editorial Force Must Protect It, Says Journal Staff

DETROIT, MICH., Nov. 17.—Members of the editorial staff of the Detroit Journal are not in favor of writers unionizing. They expressed their feeling in a "loyalty banquet" at the Cadillac hotel on November 14.

In speeches by editorial department workers, satisfaction was expressed that Detroit Journal men did the best things for themselves and the newspaper profession when they recently turned down an offer made them to link up with a unionizing organization, which had promised to affiliate the Journal men with the Typographical Union and the American Federation of Labor.

Speakers at the banquet included C. H. Jennings, managing editor; Willard Bowen, editorial writer; Max Windler, advertising manager, and William Govier, foreman of the composing room; and Charles Cameron, for twenty-eight years in the editorial department of the Journal.

"Our advertising salesmen have only one thing to sell when they solicit advertising," said Mr. Windler. "That is the good will of the paper. The printers or the bookkeepers don't create that good will. It is the editorial force, which provides the substance which the solicitor can sell."

Fifty men of the editorial staff were present.

"WANT AD" CONTRACTS SHOULD HOLD RATES

in the volume and number of ads during low seasons—has also the effect of lengthening the seasons for such businesses as real estate, automobile, and seasonable products. It is almost impossible for the real estate man, for instance, to advertise throughout the winter months, every day, without making at least one sale and getting a number of inquiries. This proves that the old fallacy of two or three months in the spring time, and another short period in the fall are the only seasons in which real estate can be sold. It helps in this way to stimulate business for the advertiser when it is at its lowest ebb and when his income is the smallest.

Volume Attracts Readers

"By having a larger number of ads in the paper every day in the week the year round, readers learn that they do not necessarily have to wait for the big Sunday paper or the week-day 'peak' to secure what they wish. Readers will read the classified every day if there is a sufficient number of ads there to offer them choice of selection.

"I believe in the 12-months' contract, and we have no shorter period in force on the Journal. Our space contract calls for 1,000 and 2,000 lines, to be used at will by the advertiser. Our daily contracts are two kinds—two and three lines per day.

"The proper reduction to be made on contract rates might vary considerably with conditions in different communities. It should not be to the extent to materially lower the average net rate."

The Des Moines Register and Tribune use contracts effectively. John Irwin, classified manager, writes: "We have classified contracts because they have proved a benefit to the advertiser and ourselves.

Consistency Needed

"It has been demonstrated on numerous occasions that the classified advertiser who ponds away consistently day after day will secure better results than the fellow who runs spasmodically. We have accounts in Des Moines who formerly ran small copy irregularly. I recall one fellow in particular. He was doing comparatively little business, and felt that he could not afford to advertise more. A solicitor persuaded him to sign a three-line daily contract. In less than three months this same advertiser was doing a greatly increased business. Today his copy is running from six to thirty lines every day.

"Usually, from the reader's standpoint, an insertion contract is best. However, there are some advertisers who cannot use insertion contracts as advantageously as a space contract. This applies especially to people whose business is seasonable."

The establishment of a system of contracts should not reduce the average net rate. It is generally possible to make the present rate the contract rate and increase the open rate. The average transient advertiser does not care about the cost of an ad so much as he does about the results. The regular advertiser is the one who figures cost and by making the open rate the contract rate his costs do not go up.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF MISSOURI EDITORSHIP

FIFTY years as editor of one paper, throughout which period he has held to his oft-repeated principle that the Republican has a greater purpose in life than to merely publish the news," is the unusual record of Col. W. B. Rogers, president of the Rogers Printing Company, owners of the Trenton (Mo.) Weekly Republican and Tribune and the Daily Republican.

Col. W. B. Rogers

His half-century of editorship of the Weekly Republican was commemorated in a special edition of that newspaper issued on September 4, last, and now, at the age of 84 years, with intellect keen and loyalty as dominant as ever, he is still at his task. Col. Rogers' record is unusual and probably stands alone.

Col. Rogers was born in Greene Township, Fayette County, Ohio, on February 8, 1835. He journeyed to Mercer County, Mo., in 1856. For a time he worked on the Missouri Argus, taught school and was later an instructor at Grand River College, through which institution he worked his way. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the Mercer Batallion for a six-month term. In 1862 he was elected sheriff of Mercer County and during his term of office was called upon to organize twelve companies of militia and was commissioned a colonel. At the expiration of his term of service he established the Company D of the 44th Infantry, Missouri Volunteers, and joined the Sixteenth Army Corps, then in Tennessee.

Col. Rogers purchased the Grand River (now Trenton) Republican on September 4, 1869, and began his long newspaper career. With the Daily Republican, which was established September 3, 1881, the Weekly Republican is issued from an up-to-date newspaper plant. Though a liberal, Col. Rogers has been staunch in his Republicanism, and served one term in the Missouri Senate. His daughter, Mrs Carrie Rogers Clark, is associated with him as secretary of the company.

Indiana

Localized National Advertising Pays Best

National Advertisers, after all is said and done, are local advertisers---for they have local dealers in communities, representing them.

Many national advertisers are relying more and more upon daily newspapers to tell their story, tell about their goods, how good they are, and where they may be had.

Intensified cultivation of a given territory pays better than hit-and-miss general distribution and popularizes merchandise much more satisfactorily.

Indiana, as a state, presents many attractive points worthy of consideration on the part of National Advertisers.

Over three million population---exceptional transportation facilities, prosperous cities, wide awake, well edited daily newspapers. Indiana will pay you handsomely for any effort you put into winning the state through daily newspapers and local dealers.

SOUTHERN PUBLISHERS ARE AWAKE

THAT the publishers of daily newspapers in the South are fully aware of the gravity of the new print situation is shown by the call for a special meeting of the S. N. P. A. at Birmingham November 24-25 to consider measures for relief.

It has already been urged by the advertising committee of the association that an increase in advertising rates of twenty-five per cent. or more should be made at once.

As EDITOR & PUBLISHER understands the attitude of the Southern publishers, it is not their purpose to bring about an arbitrary standard of rate increase but to leave to individual newspapers the task of readjusting their rates to conform to increased costs of production. It may be that some newspapers will decide that a 25 per cent. increase will be ample for the present, although many publishers will find that this will not cover added costs.

When a dollar is added to operating costs in publishing a newspaper that fact acts automatically to REDUCE the advertising and the subscription rate accordingly. To readjust rates to match larger costs is not, in effect, to raise rate at all—but to MAINTAIN THEM.

Buyers of advertising understand all this. They have faced and have solved the problem in their own businesses. They have not understood how newspapers could ignore it and still continue to do business. Advertisers will cheerfully pay a fair rate for space, based upon present publishing costs.

Existing advertising and subscription rates, with a very great majority of our daily newspapers, are not based upon present-day costs at all, but upon costs which prevailed at some former time. To hold to the old schedules is to fly in the face of reason and the facts—and that sort of aviation will never be successful.

If we are to have prosperous newspapers—and any other kind are a menace to the public welfare—publishers must make their rates conform to and match increased operating expenses. To go beyond that limit would be to seek increased profits through present conditions. To stop short of it would be to invite disaster.

Maintain your rates, gentlemen, on a parity with your costs!

THE numerous friends of Paul Patterson will be glad of the new honors conferred upon him in his election as president of the A. S. Abell Company, publisher of the Baltimore Sun. During the six years in which Mr. Patterson has been business manager the Sun has made giant strides as a newspaper. Such growth is not accidental. There is always to be found behind such a phenomenon a man—one who has held to his vision until it has become a realized fact. In this case the man, Paul Patterson, generously shares the credit for his achievement with his able associates, one of whom —William F. Schmick—succeeds him as business manager.

CHARLES B. FORBES, night editor of the Knoxville Journal-Times, says, in discussing the movement toward organization by newspaper writers: "If this agitation is worth going through with, it will flourish under the spotlight; if it isn't, it will curl up and die." Mr. Forbes hopes that the newspapermen of the country will air their views through the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER—and we share that hope.

IT is no reflection upon unionism that lawyers and doctors have found it best to maintain their own professional organizations, free from alliances with the unions. Journalists, for much the same reasons, are following the same course.

WHEN investment houses in Canada paint for their customers a rosy picture of the profits to be obtained through owning stocks in newsprint mills they assuredly cannot be accused of indulging in misleading advertising.

"AN ISOLATED INSTANCE OF FLUFF"

A MAN distinguished in the field of national advertising writes, in answer to an invitation from EDITOR & PUBLISHER to discuss Representative Reavis' charges that manufacturers are evading excess profits taxes through spending great sums in advertising:

"It is one of the isolated instances of fluff indulged in in the House of Representatives. . . . The best answer to be made is to call Representative Reavis' attention to the advertisement of the U. S. Department of Labor, published in June of this year, as a part of a very urgent and systematic propaganda to all manufacturers at a time when it looked as if business stagnation was in prospect and that wide unemployment, especially of returning soldiers, would confront the country."

The ad to which reference is made urged manufacturers to speed up industry by advertising, thus creating demand for goods and public confidence in the stability of American business. The manufacturers have adopted that wise counsel. They have used display space, not to evade excess profits taxes but to stimulate trade.

It has been said that the volume of advertising from manufacturers now running in the newspapers will disappear when its alleged sinister purpose has been accomplished—or when these firms have succeeded in circumventing the tax collector. Good advertising never made any man or any firm poor. Advertising is not the road to poverty. It is the road to greater profits.

The manufacturer who has been using large space during the past few months—whatever might have been his object in entering upon that policy—will have learned the value of contact with the public. He will find that advertising has a real service value to him, and that it is highly desirable that he shall continue to advertise. His present critics, ignoring the fact that in spending money generously in advertising he has been acting upon the sober advice of the Government itself, will still contend that he is trying to reduce his net earnings. But he will have discovered that, for any such purpose, advertising is the poorest imaginable device.

J. H. ALLISON, president of the S. N. P. A., suggests through EDITOR & PUBLISHER that publishers should earnestly and collectively take steps to reduce tonnage by setting the maximum number of pages for issues, making no further attempts to increase circulations, fixing a minimum of 60 per cent for advertising in any issue, and cutting down the size of heads. These suggestions are sound and constructive. They touch fundamental policies. They do not constitute a complete program of conservation, but are essentials of any such program.

THERE is not a single sound argument in support of the policy of accepting returns from dealers—yet we are assured that the policy has not been wholly abandoned.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE JOKESMITH

THE Laundrywoners' National Association is attempting to accomplish two outstanding objects: To educate the 6,000 men operating power laundries to the value of using advertising space in the daily newspapers; and, at the same time, to eliminate jokes about laundry business. It seems that laundry owners deeply resent the publication of jests dealing with damage done to goods, claiming that in almost all cases the fault is in the fabric and not in its treatment at the laundry.

Arnold A. Mowbray, director of public information for the association, urges editors to "put the soft pedal" on this class of humor. He asks publishers to confer with their editors on the matter. Mr. Mowbray shows an uncanny knowledge of editorial finances when he says: "Was your shirt a wreck when it returned? When was it bought? Before the war? I thought so."

Mr. Mowbray does not indulge in such embarrassing observations in his letter to the publisher. He informs him—and the news will delight the heart of the publisher—that he plans to send him from time to time interesting news stories about the important service the laundry industry is rendering to the public, special articles, etc. In this way Mr. Mowbray it is to be supposed, will fill the aching void created by the elimination of the laundry joke.

It may be remarked that the laundry joke will disappear when it no longer reflects the facts of common experience.

The laundry owners, meantime, will do well to advertise—to tell the public of the efforts they are making to reduce casualties to line into the lowest possible margin. The people will eagerly acclaim such advertising and will support to the limit the laundryman who tries to make good. The educational campaign, which Mr. Mowbray is undertaking, may be expected to succeed without "free publicity." In fact, the "interesting news stories" promised the newspapers should be in the form of display advertising copy. H. H. Stalker, Nash Building, Toledo, is the association's director of advertising. Mr. Stalker has the floor!

IN THE LINE OF SERVICE

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S friends will share the feeling of pride to which it confesses in the achievement of printing, in an eight-page special section of last week's issue, a complete story of the emergency meeting of the A. N. P. A., called to take measures to meet the paper shortage.

In spite of the difficulties of the printing situation in New York, and the fact that the convention fell in session hours time for its regular edition, EDITOR & PUBLISHER found it possible to issue this special supplement and to carry in it a full account of the outstanding features and results of the conference.

It was of the highest importance that every publisher in the land should learn, without delay, of the program of conservation proposed at this meeting, in order that no time should be lost in the adoption of common policies. The fact constituted a demand upon EDITOR & PUBLISHER for another example of real service to the industry—and the demand was met.

A SIGNIFICANT item of telegraphic news appears in the Wall Street Journal. Crosby, Gregory & Penfield, Price Bros. & Co. are to build an additional newsprint mill with a capacity of between 400 and 500 tons a day. Work on the water power is under way and mill construction is to begin in May. If the tonnage were now available it would alter materially the present newsprint situation, wiping out most of the shortage. Of course this new supply will be welcome when it comes. It is to be hoped that other paper manufacturers will at once plan similar expansion. There is no other industrial investment offering surer profits than this. It should attract abundant capital.

NOBODY would think of wasting a pound of sugar. A pound of newsprint costs about half as much as a pound of sugar. Why not use paper as economically as you use sugar?

GRAND OPERA TRAIL BLAZER HEADS BUFFALO CLUB

LAURA T. RECKTENWALT, the new president of the Buffalo League of Advertising Women, is a member of the editorial staff of the Buffalo Evening News; but that does not mean that she does not have a high appreciation of advertising and of its merits, for a full knowledge she was associated for two years with the Boston-National Grand Opera Company in New York and on the road.

LAURA T. RECKTENWALT

Miss Recktenwalt has been doing features for the News for a little more than a year, and in that time has also written a number of short stories which have met with success on their journeys to editors' offices.

Having been one of the charter members and a steady worker during the organization period, it was only natural that Miss Recktenwalt should be elected to her present position in the League. Prior to the recent election, she was chairman of the publicity committee. The membership of the Buffalo League of Advertising Women includes women advertising writers, newspaper writers and commercial artists, and it is affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Fred D. Schoknecht, formerly connected with the advertising department of the St. Louis Republic and later with H. L. Bergen, has joined the sales department of the Traffic Motor Truck Company, St. Louis.

W. T. Denniston, president of the Advertising Association of Houston, Tex., is planning several special features for the association's winter session. Five members will talk each week on five different advertising topics, and each week there will be a discussion of two advertisements culled from current issues of local newspapers, one for its apparent merits and one for its faults.

Louis O. Lacloon, publicity agent and secretary of the Wichita International Wheat Show and Exposition, has resigned to re-enter the advertising business in Chicago.

W. P. Bottolfson has resigned from the service department of the Cramer-Krasselt Company, Milwaukee, to become advertising director of the Briggs & Stratton Company, manufacturer of electrical specialties and motor wheels.

Miss Theresa Hegeley has just been made advertising manager of the Easenkay Products Company, Chicago. Miss Hegeley is 21 years old. She started her business career with the Easenkay Products Company, at 17, as a stenographer. Her keen, wide-awake mind and ability to grasp business problems and solve them won quick recognition. She became successively secretary to the president and secretary to the sales manager.

E. H. McDonald, advertising manager of the Porteous, Mitchell & Braun Company, Portland (Me.) merchants, and chairman of the publicity and conventions bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, is taking a leading part in the Red Cross Roll Call Campaign.

BRITISH PREPARED TO ISSUE STRIKE POSTERS REALIZING VITAL VALUE OF NEWS

THE railway strike, though it actually lasted but nine days, was too big a thing not to have left its mark on the newspaper press. One of the outstanding features towards the end of the week was the rapid exchange of fire between the railwaymen and the Government in paid advertising spaces. The official views were stated clearly and dispassionately, but this cannot be said of the railwaymen who imported into their arguments a certain bitterness and violence of language, that was as extremist as the most extreme views of the British Labor Party seem to be—to all but their supporters. It was to be regretted, too, that several newspapers, the Daily Telegraph and the Evening News among them, were able to charge the railwaymen's union (which they did in leading articles) of issuing totally misleading statements in their advertisements—charges which were never successfully rebutted, although all the newspapers exhibited complete fairness in their reports of the case on both sides.

Only one paper, the Daily Telegraph, questioned the policy of using advertisements at all, and it stated that when it received the order for the advertisement of the railwaymen's case it gravely doubted whether it would accept it, and only the arrival of an advertisement stating the Government's views decided them. And the advertisements were printed side by side.

Complete co-ordination existed between the various Government departments in the use made of the press, as this was illustrated by an incident which occurred in the section to which had been entrusted London's milk supplies. This department reported that the full milk supply had reached London. It was accordingly arranged to announce that the 100 per cent of milk had been delivered; but, on discussion in the Committee of Propaganda, this statement was toned down, because it was not certain that the transport arrangements were perfect, and as one member of the committee remarked, "If there is one house-wife in London who did not receive her milk this morning she will read that statement and refuse to believe the remainder of the bulletin."

But, apart from the copy employed, the campaign was another striking proof of the immense power exercised by newspaper advertising and the place it must play not only in the realm of commerce but in any future scheme in which prompt action in "selling the people" is a factor. Indeed, the Government Propaganda Committee, I am told, came very definitely to the conclusion that newspaper advertisements were superior to posters and the kinema or any other media for quickly laying a clear statement before the public. A newspaper advertisement was a matter of hours; films and posters ran into days. Both sides in the dispute learned this.

Perhaps the most amusing thing on the morning on which the dailies were able to announce the settlement was the display cheek by jowl at news-stands of the Daily Mail and the Daily Herald (the labor organ) billboard. The former read, "Why It Failed," and the latter "Victory!"

If Dailies Had Failed During Strike Government Would Have Used Aerial Fleet to Reach Every Part of Island—Other Activities.

BY HERBERT C. RIDOUT
London Editor, Editor & Publisher

THAT the Government recognized the necessity for news during the strike, and their determination that the public was entitled to it was clear from the plans they had made to that end.

As a preliminary emergency measure it was decided that to give publicity to the Government's daily news reports, huge type bulletins should be shown in the largest shop windows.

The Evening News says that one member of the Government Propaganda Committee advanced the objection that this method might result in broken windows, but Sir Basil Thomson, head of Scotland Yard, gave it as his experience that disaffected Englishmen rarely indulged in window-wrecking.

In the meantime, further plans were ripening by which, had the strike spread to other unions and resulted in a crippling of daily newspaper production, the Government would have issued its own daily. This would have contained no expression of opinion as to the rights or wrongs of the strike, but was intended strictly as a "news" paper recording the happenings at home and abroad. Even the editor had been appointed. His name is a household word on both sides of the Channel and the Atlantic, and he was prepared, if the emergency had arisen (which happily it did not), with his characteristic enthusiasm to take up his duties.

Five million copies were to have been circulated by a fleet of 150 aeroplanes. The government's belief was that the dangers of a general strike would be enormously enhanced if the general public did not know what was going on

Important Newspaper Changes Robert Donald's New Globe

NEWSPAPERDOM is all activity N just now, doubtless the reaction after the war period which severely tested a good many worthy journals.

The London Globe, already announced as having come under the control of Robert Donald, is appearing in new form and many big features are promised. Its former pink dress has been abandoned and it appears on white paper. Lord Robert Cecil, the former Minister of Blockade, is commencing a series of articles on a new national home and foreign policy; Sir George Paish will conduct the financial section; Miss Lena Ashwell will discourse on the theatre, and A. St. John Adcock, editor of the Bookman, will deal with the literature section. The new Globe will interpret the news and views of the day with that independence that has always been a marked characteristic of its chairman, Robert Donald.

Horatio Bottomley, M.P. Buys Sunday Papers

HORATIO BOTTOMLEY is one of the members of the House of Commons who has justly earned the reputation of being its principal provider of "ginger" to the Mother of Parliaments. This same tendency, finding expression in his editorship of Messrs. Odhams weekly, John Bull, has secured for that paper a circulation of well over two and a half millions, and has proved a material help, too, in building Lord Rothermere's Sunday Pictorial to over a million; to the latter Mr. Bottomley contributes a weekly page of "bromides."

Now he is developing his activities and threatens more still. Last week he took the readers of John Bull into his confidence thus:

"Our journalistic tentacles are gradually spreading. In addition to our weekly page in the Sunday Pictorial—which, under contract with the proprietors, will continue for another two years—and our editorial and proprietary interest in John Bull, we have personally just acquired the Sunday Evening Telegram—the only Sunday evening paper published in the United Kingdom—and a controlling interest in the National News, the most progressive of all ordinary Sunday newspapers. And there may shortly be 'others.'"

The Sunday Evening Telegram was started as a war bulletin by Sir Henry Dalziel from the offices of Reynolds' Newspaper and is the only Sunday evening paper in the United Kingdom. The National News is a Sunday morning paper which has recently been making good headway under the Odhams proprietary. Mr. Bottomley's vigorous style has a powerful following and if he can succeed in infusing into them the same, individuality that marks John Bull, both new acquisitions will soon be among our most powerful organs.

Election Speech Reports As Paid Advertising

THE proprietor of the Cornishman, a Cornwall newspaper, recently sued a Parliamentary candidate for payment of an account which included charges for reporting election speeches in the newspaper.

In consequence of this and certain developments which seemed to go toward establishing the principle of inserting such reports only as paid advertising, the South Western Federation of Newspaper Owners (which includes Sir James Owen, of the Express and Echo, Exeter, A. Browning Lane, Cornish Guardian, Truro, and many other representative publishers,) passed a resolution to the effect that "any charge for the reports of election speeches would be contrary to the best interests of journalism on the ground that it would be apt to undermine the independence of editors; and the Federation calls upon the Newspaper Society to ensure the maintenance of the purity of the press by confining all electoral charges to its advertising columns."

No Government Newspaper Review

THE announcement that the Government has abandoned its proposal to establish a Weekly Review of the Foreign Press synchronizes with the disclosure of some facts relating to the work of those "linguistic loafers," as they were unkindly called, who were in charge of the production of the war time official review of this kind.

Stanley A. Cook, a late member of that staff, says that for the purposes of the Review the editorial men read 800 different papers in over twenty languages; military, political, economic and technical supplements were printed. It has been asserted that this step will have cost the country $225,000 a year on salaries for one hundred and twenty experts, plus the rent, cost of paper, printing etc.

The facts, however, are that his figure includes the entire staff, and the sum in question represents the maximum expenditure in the past and included all expenses, on a war basis.

As regards the salaries the facts are that the estimate was for eighteen major administrative and linguistic posts averaging each $2,170 per annum, while the rest ranged from $30 per week downwards.

HEARST BUYS PAPERS FROM BRISBANE

Takes Over Washington Times and Milwaukee Wisconsin News—Brisbane Retains Editorship

(BY TELEGRAPH)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The Washington Times, purchased by Arthur Brisbane in 1917, has been sold to William Randolph Hearst, Mr. Brisbane announced today.

"I have sold to Mr. Hearst also my newspaper in Milwaukee, the Wisconsin News, purchased by me about a year ago," Brisbane said.

Mr. Brisbane will continue to edit the Times and E. D. Shaw, publisher and general manager of the paper, will also continue in that capacity.

Mr. Hearst now owns ten daily newspapers—the New York American, New York Evening Journal, Boston American and Advertiser, Chicago Herald and Examiner, Chicago American, Atlanta Georgian and American, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, Washington Times and Milwaukee Wisconsin-News.

Mr. Brisbane made the following statement today:

"This newspaper is sold to William Randolph Hearst and is added to the list of newspapers owned by him throughout the United States.

"When I bought the Washington Times in 1917 from Frank A. Munsey, whose ability had given it a firm place in the newspaper world, the price of the Times was 1 cent. It is now 2 cents.

"The circulation of the Times was then about 30,000. It is now 60,000.

"The employes' pay roll was $190,000. It is now $450,000.

"The annual business of the newspaper is now more than three times as great as when I bought it.

"The Washington Times, now turned over to Mr. Hearst, is a prosperous, successful newspaper. I have no doubt that it will grow under Mr. Hearst's ownership as rapidly as it has grown during the past two years.

"To the Washington Times Mr. Hearst will contribute the services of the greatest newspaper organization in the world and, what is more important, an organization that works honestly and powerfully for those that read in newspapers and for the general public.

"Even public plunderers that have Hearst papers nearby, because he has personally interfered with their schemes, will admit that he is a man that no other can control, and that no financial or other private consideration can influence him.

"Hitherto Mr. Hearst has had no interest in this newspaper, nor has he ever controlled financially to its building-up.

"I have sold to Mr. Hearst also my newspaper in Milwaukee, the Wisconsin News, purchased by me about a year ago. During the years of my ownership the price of the Wisconsin News has been doubled, its circulation has been multiplied by three, changing from seventy thousand to more than sixty thousand, the employes' pay roll has been doubled, or advertising receipts have increased more than 100 per cent.

"I have never taken from either newspaper a dollar in profit or salary, but have enjoyed demonstrating the fact, interesting to newspaper men, that it is not difficult to double or treble the circulation of a newspaper, treble its income, add hundreds of thousands annually to its payroll, make it profitable and put it somewhere in a thoughtful mood.

"The management of the Washington Times will not change materially. I shall continue to edit this newspaper, but subject to Mr. Hearst's ownership, as I edit other newspapers for him.

"I congratulate Mr. Hearst upon the fact that E. D. Shaw, publisher of the Washington Times and its general manager, will continue to work for Mr. Hearst. It is not necessary to tell business men of Washington that more than one half of the Times' rapid growth is due to Mr. Shaw's ability and character.

"In transferring the ownership of this newspaper to Mr. Hearst, I express thanks to the readers in the editorial, business and mechanical departments for the efficient co-operation that has made the newspaper's success possible. I am given me satisfaction to know that many of the dollars added to the income of this newspaper have been used to increase the pay of skilled union labor.

"I believe that union workers on both my newspapers, in Milwaukee and in Washington, will testify that I have shown willingness to aid in practice, as a newspaper owner, the program of good union wages that I had advocated for more than thirty years, writing for Charles A. Dana, Joseph Pulitzer and W. R. Hearst."

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Nov. 18.—N. Isenenberg will remain as publisher and general manager, with Arthur Brisbane as editor, of the Wisconsin News, which Mr. Brisbane today sold to William Randolph Hearst.

PUBLISHERS MUST PLAY SQUARE

News Print Shortage Can Only Be Met by Honest Co-operation in Ending Waste of Paper

By FRED G. BONFILS
PART OWNER DENVER POST AND KANSAS CITY POST

I am afraid that my receipt for saving white paper, while simple, will be very heroic. It calls for honest and unselfish co-operation between the publishers of the United States. This is hard to get.

It calls for playing the publishing game square with each other and it prohibits any publisher from playing for place at the expense of the others.

The present condition in the print paper situation has been created largely by the selfishness and greed of the publishers. They themselves are largely at fault.

By honestly living up to the following pledges, immediate relief in the white paper situation would be felt:

First—All return privileges should absolutely be abolished.

Second—All exchange lists should be abolished and all "free head" lists and all mail subscribers should be compelled to pay in advance and no credits of any kind given.

Third—Every paper should limit its size, either by refusing advertisements or limiting or curtailing them.

To put in and enforce such regulations requires a big-brained, courageous and unselfish publisher who believes in himself and in these methods and in his papers and who is willing to give his competitor, large or small, a square deal. Personally I know of but two papers in the United States that are and have been operating along these lines for the last eighteen months, or since the white paper situation became acute and those two papers are the Denver Post and the Kansas City Post.

Bond Might Be Given

We absolutely do not waste a pound of white paper. We are as stingy with it as a miser is with his gold and while helping to conserve white paper we are really glad if the benefits of our methods are shared by our competitors, little or big.

Only such methods as the above, followed honestly by all the publishers, will give relief from the print paper famine throughout the country. If the promises of publishers to do these necessary things are not sufficient—and in many cases the promises are—then each publisher should be willing to be put under bond in such an amount as would guarantee his good faith in practicing these white paper economies.

Both the Denver Post and the Kansas City Post stand ready to join the publishers of the United States in an agreement along these lines or along any other better lines that may be suggested.

It is high time for action and not for prolonged discussion and further delays.

No More Free Cuts

TULSA, OKLA., Nov. 18.—The Daily World and the Democrat have announced that in future no cuts designed for automobile advertising or other publicity will be made except at the expense of the advertiser, and that use of the same will be made only when space permits.

Iowa

Its 200,000 farms with farm property valued at OVER $4,000,000.00 spend their incomes in TOWN!

Their income from crops alone amounts to nearly a BILLION PER YEAR!

892 savings banks have some of it: 750,000 individual deposits averaging over $400 each.

To reach Iowa buyers with your message often and regularly, you MUST advertise in the DAILY newspapers. These papers will take word of your goods into the city stores and homes and to the farms in the country and to the country MERCHANTS!

It would be a mistake to visualize Iowa as a congested area of small stores and hand-to-mouth buyers.

Advertising in these papers will convince you.

URGES ALL PUBLISHERS TO COOPERATE IN BIG PROMOTION CAMPAIGN

Jason Rogers Supports Suggestion of Agency Head for Drive in Dominant Dailies to Sell National Newspaper Advertising.

BY JASON ROGERS

HERE is a suggestion of one of the largest and most successful advertising agents of the country for the development of more national advertising for the newspapers. At a later date and after some progress has been made, I will reveal his identity. It falls so completely in with my views and efforts of the past nine or ten years, and presents the theory so much better than I could, that I reproduce the salient parts of his letter:

Day of Newspaper Advertising Just Begun

"If I never had had faith in newspaper advertising before the war (and I always have had faith) my experience in connection with Red Cross, Liberty Loan, War Savings, Community Service, Catholic Charities, 18—45 draft, and other war activities and in doing the pioneer work in the promotion of these affairs of national importance, the results obtained from national full page newspaper advertising from coast to coast would warrant me in saying to you, as I say to every advertiser and to every newspaper man, that the day of newspaper advertising has just begun and that national advertisers, that is, very few of them, realize or get the value of the newspaper as a national advertising medium.

Some Advertisers Seeing the Light

"Our work and the good work done by Editor & Publisher has brought newspapers to realize the value of their own medium in a national way and some advertisers have seen the light and are using newspapers in that way.

"Now what newspapers need most is to sell large advertisers on the idea that it is not too expensive to use newspapers in a national advertising way. Our work on the ..... account during the past year has proven that. The fact that during 1920 ..... will spend twice as much money in newspaper advertising as in 1919 shows the value they place upon national newspaper advertising. Their campaign this year covered a period of thirty weeks. Heretofore advertisers have been content to look upon newspaper advertising as seasonable advertising. The newspapers themselves can sell the advertiser on the value and the importance of using newspapers on a 12-month, 52-week basis, and when newspapers themselves do that, they will automatically double and treble and quadruple the number of lines of advertising—national advertising—used in their newspaper.

The Newspapers' Troubles

"The trouble with the newspaper is this. From three to six months of the year they are crowded with advertising and there are from six to nine months in the year when they could take care of about double the amount of national advertising that they carry. They must do what agencies like ours have done. For twenty years this company made money the first six months of the year and lost almost as much as they made the last six months of the year. Now we have standardized and stabilized our business by spreading our customers' advertising over a period of twelve months. It is to their advantage even more so than it is to ours. It enables us to give them better service and to keep employed high grade men twelve months of the year instead of six. That method has doubled our advertising during the past three years. Today we are doing twice the amount of business that we did in 1916—the best pre-war year.

Not An Artificial Volume

"Another idea that newspapers ought to get over is that manufacturers, who are carrying large sums of money now, are not doing it to avoid the income tax but because of the fact that they are spending the same percentage of sales now as they did when their business was half the volume that it is in this prosperous year. A concern like Hart Schaffner & Marx, whose business has more than doubled during the past two years, naturally can spend double the amount in advertising and yet keep their appropriation on the same percentage basis as it was two or three years ago; and that is what large interests are doing just now and it is paying them big.

"The real point of this letter, however, is to give the suggestion to you that there should be a concerted effort on the part of every newspaper in the first one hundred cities of the United States to sell their newspapers as a unit as a national advertising medium. A campaign like this could be handled in the newspapers on a twelve-month basis. I don't know where newspapers could spend their money to such good advantage as in a campaign like that in their own newspapers, but they should use an advertising agency to handle the campaign like any other national campaign. The copy will then be standardized.

Reaching the Dealer

"In a city like New York we should use three morning and three afternoon papers and possibly three Sunday papers. We might divide them into three different sections and let the advertiser or agency select the class of advertising, that is, whether morning, evening or Sunday, that is best suited to their needs. In some cities there would be only one paper and in others two and sometimes three. In Chicago I should say there should be four. Then we should go one step farther and use some of the national magazines and periodicals to educate the consumer and dealer; and the hardware, the automobile trade papers, the grocery trade papers and other trade papers should be used to educate the dealer, so that when the dealers are asked what national medium they want the advertisers to use they will mention newspapers first. They do not do that now—in fact, they very seldom do it; although you know and I know that newspapers as a national medium are the best medium.

Figuring the Costs

"If two hundred newspapers would put up $2,000 a piece and have an appropriation of $400,000 to nationalize national newspaper advertising, each of them, I am sure, would get over $10,000 in returns—direct returns—the first year, and it would be much better than if they put a man on the road at $2,000 a year to call on the advertisers—in fact, I think it would be better than if they put a $5,000 or $10,000 man on the road to solicit and sell the idea to advertisers, dealers, and to agencies. I have sounded out quite a number of newspapers along these lines and I believe if a concerted effort was made and the initiative taken by the newspapers themselves, this could be put across. I am sure if I could talk to the newspapers as a group they would be ready and willing to say 'go ahead'; and I believe if you would start the ball a-rolling in Editor & Publisher and in any other way you may see fit, more can be accomplished for the good of newspaper advertising by doing this than by any other one thing I know anything about."

Recognizing the characteristic reluctance of newspapers generally to part with real money for advertising the advertising they have for sale, as evidenced by their very limited use of trade paper space compared with other industries, and their failure to support the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., I make this proposal for consideration.

I suggest that at least one newspaper in each of the leading 100 cities in the country contribute to me ten pages of space during the year 1920, to be used for such a campaign as this agent has suggested, and that we pay the agent 5 per cent of the cash value of the space for his service in preparing and handling the copy.

I will undertake to clear the contributions of space by newspapers and to cooperate with the agent in handling the campaign. Without knowledge regarding the newspapers which will cooperate it is difficult to make an estimate of what such a campaign would mean in dollars and cents.

By reference to the page ad which I recently prepared under the heading "The Direct Route to the Greatest Market" I should estimate that say ten pages from two hundred newspapers in the one hundred important cities would be about $20 a line, or approximately $430,000 to $480,000 for the ten pages.

For preparing and handling the campaign the agent would receive 5 per cent and I think he will agree to take his pay in advertising space from new clients which he will develop for the newspapers co-operating.

My address is 73 Dey Street, New York City, and I shall be glad to hear from as many publishers as desire to co-operate. Do it today, so that we can get started by January 1, 1920.

John Adams Thayer, of New York, secretary of the Periodical Publishers Association, informs Editor & Publisher that the newly incorporated National Association of Periodical Publishers does not supersede his organization, but takes over and succeeds the association known as the Publishers' Advisory Board.

Seventy Five Million Dollars

Southern Baptists are now in a Campaign to secure this amount from their membership, for the various missionary, educational and benevolent institutions of the denomination.

Of this amount, Texas Baptists will give

Sixteen Million Dollars

The first step was to increase the circulation of the Baptist Standard, which is owned by Texas Baptists. Already the circulation has been increased by 21,000 new subscriptions. There were mailed, November 13, on the regular paid up subscription list, 38,500 copies.

People who are interested in their own publication will read it.

Here is a sample letter:

"My children have a race every Thursday to see who will reach the mail carrier first to get the Baptist Standard. We read every word in it, advertisements and all."

We will accept no medical advertising of any kind.

If you want to reach a home-loving people, who constitute the heart of our Nation, advertise in a first class religious publication.

Look What We're Coming to Now

LAWRENCE, KAN., Nov. 18.—The press service of the Daily Kansan, the K. U. school of journalism daily paper here, threatens to disrupt the school. When the service was installed, the students went to "take the wire." All went well until time for the girls to take a hand. Then the trouble. The girls claimed that the head set made it necessary for them to change the style of their hair dressing, and this they refused to do. Finally their spokesman refused absolutely to take the service and announced she would leave the course before she would change.

Barney Furay, who looks after the South American interests of the United Press, says that he knows that advertising in this column pays and announces that he now has ALMOST all the stamps he needs to complete his collection.

If Gus Stahl of the Seattle Times will send us a piece for the paper we will print it. Roy Alden, our efficient correspondent, is requested to bring this invitation to his attention. Verse is not barred.

PRINGLE IS PESSIMISTIC

Canadian Supply of News Print Is For Below Demand

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

OTTAWA, Nov. 18.—The news print situation in Canada is very acute, according to a statement made to EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S correspondent to-day by Paper Controller Pringle, who is holding daily conferences with individual members of both producing and consuming sides of newsprint. The problem the controller is having difficulty in regulating is the supply to Canadian papers, many of which are compelled to materially curtail the size of their issues while mills have increased their capacity.

The supply of newsprint is far below the demand, and as there are no indications of an early improvement the situation is a serious one.

AURORA, ILL., Nov. 14.—Ground has been broken for the erection of a new home for the Beacon-News, 60 by 90 feet, three stories and basement. It will be occupied entirely by the newspaper. The basement will be 16 feet deep—10 feet below the ground and six above. In one end will be a mezzanine floor for the carrier boys and mailing department. The building and ground represent an investment of $30,000, in addition to which a quad press and 12 linotypes will be installed.

Small in area, but Boy, Howdy!

King Albert of the Belgians, when he came to visit us, landed first in New Jersey.

The boys who went to Europe left Hoboken, New Jersey, and said it was either hell or Hoboken for their's.

It was a round trip or nothing.

Hudson County, in which Hoboken is located, is a county of but sixty-five square miles—the smallest county in this small state—and yet there are six hundred and fifty thousand people in Hudson County.

Practically "next door" is Newark, with over a half a million people—and all the way down to Atlantic City, there are hustling, prosperous, wide-awake manufacturing cities—full of people who are working hard—making money and calling for merchandise.

Go to these people. Reach them through their own home newspapers. Get your goods into the stores of New Jersey merchants and get them into the homes of these people.

New Jersey is small in area, but—Boy, Howdy!

Mr. Hamilton began his career on the Herald under the elder James Gordon Bennett, and during his life was one of the lieutenants of the late James Gordon Bennett. In the years he spent in the service of the Herald Mr. Hamilton served in various capacities, from reporter to chief editorial writer and editor.

THOMAS H. HAMILTON

He was chairman of the executive committee which conducted the Herald during the latter years of Mr. Bennett's life and was considered for years to be Mr. Bennett's personal representative in the United States.

About 1890 he became financial editor of the Herald, a position which he held for more than a quarter of a century. In this capacity he became acquainted with the most prominent financiers of the country, and was regarded by them as one of the best informed men on matters connected with finance and the railroads.

His daily financial articles in the Herald were considered by Wall Street as authoritative and it was a saying in "the Street," "if Hamilton says so, it is true."

He served the Herald in Paris and London at different times and was well acquainted with and admired by the leading men of France and Great Britain.

Mr. Hamilton was one of the last of the galaxy of famous newspaper men the late Mr. Bennett gathered about him when he assumed charge of the Herald. Among those whose names were widely known were Henry M. Stanley, Charles Nordhoff, John Russell Young and Dr. Hepworth, and Mr. Hamilton developed into the fullness of his career with them.

Mr. Hamilton visited Mr. Bennett abroad, often was his guest aboard his yacht and once made a trip to the Far East and around the world with him.

After the death of the late Dr. Hepworth, Mr. Hamilton was appointed chief editorial writer of the Herald by Mr. Bennett, a position which he filled until he was named as editor.

He also represented the Herald in Mexico, and wrote several articles on its finances and labor conditions. He visited Cuba on several occasions, and his despatches from Havana before the war of 1898 threw a flood of light upon the true situation there.

Mr. Hamilton was born in Montclair, N. J., and was sixty-eight years old. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Mary S. Hamilton, and five children.

Obituary

HIRAM J. DUNLAP, 78, formerly in the U. S. diplomatic service and in Illinois journalism and politics, died in Kankakee last week. He was appointed postmaster at Kankakee by President McKinley in 1897 and consul to Germany in 1905, remaining abroad ten years.

JEROME C. SULLIVAN, formerly with the New York World and Herald, died November 12 at Port Chester, N. Y., aged 79 years.

MICHAEL F. WESENBERG, civil war veteran and newspaperman, is dead at Duluth, Minn. He was born at Bergen, Norway, February 22, 1841. Among the newspapers he established were the Minnesota of Minneapolis, started in the early 70's and later merged with the Minneapolis Tidende; the North Star, published at Grand Forks, N. D., and the Duluth Scandia of which he was editor and publisher until six years ago.

MRS. LOIS WESTON PATTEN, wife of Roland T. Patten, proprietor of the Skowhegan (Me.) Independent-Reporter, and treasurer of that publication, died November 13 of heart disease, aged 44 years.

BEN SHAW, aged 59, city editor of the Augusta (Me.) Kennebec Journal, died at the Augusta General Hospital last week. He had been in poor health for several years, but continued his duties until a week ago. He was a pioneer in the old chalk-plate process of making newspaper illustrations.

L. W. MENGER, aged 67, general manager of the Southern Messenger, a Roman Catholic publication, died last week in San Antonio, Tex.

DR. JULIUS F. SACHSE, aged 77, editor, writer and authority on Masonic history, died November 15 at his home in Philadelphia. Dr. Sachse's Masonic writings include "Franklin's Masonic Career," "Free Masonry in Pennsylvania" and "Old Masonic Lodges of Pennsylvania." He also collaborated in writing "Quaint Old Germantown," published in 1913.

FRANCIS HENRY MCGRATH, cashier of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, died of a complication of diseases on Nov. 15.

FIELD S. GRAVES, police reporter for the Tulsa (Okla.) Democrat for the past three years, fired a bulletin into his brain, after bidding his wife good-bye.

THOMAS ALLSUP BARNES, second Earl Brassey, editor of Brassey's Naval Annual, London, died in that city on November 14, from injuries received when he was struck by a taxicab.

WILLIAM C. STUART, vice-president and treasurer of C. S. Hallowell, Inc., New York advertising agency, died in New York this week, aged 42.

shall have a definite appropriation of not less than $3,000 per year.

Another interesting recommendation made by the committee is that commissions to recognized agencies in Canada and the United States should be equalized. Attention is directed to the valuable promotional work done, especially in connection with government advertising, and to the efforts of the committee to suppress the free publicity evil.

The circulation committee's report elaborates the steps taken to educate the membership into the need of raising subscription rates and points out that during the year 46 daily papers have raised their rates. Only 9 out of 103 dailies, whose practice is recorded, now charge one cent a copy; 46 charge 2 cents; 17 charge 3 cents and 31 charge 5 cents. Only five have an annual rate of $2.00; 4 charge $2.50; 43 charge $3.00; 2 charge $3.50; 26 charge $4.00; 16 charge $5.00; 4 charge $6.00; 1 charges $6.20 and 2 charge $7.00. The committee goes on to say, however, that further increases are necessary. It points out that there has been little recession as yet in production costs, while certain elements of cost, such as labor, have been increased considerably since the armistice was signed.

The editorial committee in a brief report recommends that the association should undertake the publication of a second volume of the "History of Canadian Journalism"; that a part of the association's bulletins be devoted, on occasion, to matters of interest to editors; and that publishers be requested to call the attention of editors to the desirability of membership in the association.

Bee Haled to Court

OMAHA, NEB., Nov. 15.—County Attorney Shotwell has filed contempt proceedings against the Bee, and Victor Rosewater, editor, following the printing of an article in the Bee which declared that the indictment of J. H. Moore, a reporter of the Bee, on a charge of arson, following the burning of the county court house during the September race riots, was a "frame-up" by the police. The paper declared that two rioters were intimidated into testifying against Moore.

PALMER ASKS CONGRESS FOR POWER TO CONTROL ANARCHIST PRESS

Nearly 400 Newspapers Openly Preaching Overthrow of Government, Attorney General Says—New Law Required.

By ROBERT T. BARRY
(STAFF CORRESPONDENT)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18

A. MITCHELL PALMER, Attorney-General of the United States, has requested Congress to enact a new law to enable him to deal more effectively with anarchistic and revolutionary agitators in this country. One section of the bill would cover "red" newspapers and it is expected to arouse once again the issue of the "freedom of the press."

Mr. Palmer stated that it was possible during the war to keep radical newspapers in check but that since the signing of the armistice their tribe has increased and the rules of the post office have been inadequate to deal with them.

Boldly Advocate Overthrow of Government

He told the Senate that there are 327 radical newspapers now being printed and circulated in the United States, many of them boldly advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States. One hundred and five of these papers, he stated, are printed in English. In addition to the radical press of this country 144 radical papers published in other countries are being circulated in the United States.

The section of the new sedition bill, dealing with the radical press, proposed by Attorney General Palmer, follows:

Proposed New Law

SECTION 2. Promoting Sedition. Whoever makes, displays, writes, prints, or circulates, knowingly aids or abets the making, displaying, writing, printing, or circulating of, any sign, word, speech, picture, design, statement, or teaching, which advises, advocates, incites, or justifies any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or any act which tends to incite sedition as hereinbefore defined, or organizes or assists, or joins in the organization of, or becomes or remains a member of, or affiliated with, any society or organization, whether or not same be formally organized or not, which has as for its object, in whole or in part, the aiding, advocating, teaching, or justifying of any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or the doing of sedition as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed guilty of promoting sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment of not exceeding ten years, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

Attorney-General Palmer in his report to the Senate on the many difficulties encountered by the Federal Government in its efforts to put an end to the radicals who are advocating openly the overthrow of the Government of the United States. He said:

Wave of Radicalism

"One of the most potent and far-reaching influences in stirring up discontent, race prejudice and class hatred in this country is the large number of radical newspapers and other publications which are given wide circulation. Many of these publications frankly urge the overthrow of the Government. The editors of these papers and the writings in these books have a subtle way of inciting this propaganda before their readers. But the reader understands what is meant.

"There are 222 radical newspapers published in foreign languages in this country at the present time, and 105 radical newspapers published in the English language. In addition, 144 radical newspapers published in foreign countries are received and distributed to subscribers here.

"The radical foreign language press during the war was kept in check by means of the espionage act, approved June 15, 1917, and amendment May 16, 1918, the purpose of which was to protect the interests of the United States in prosecution of the war. While the Post Office Department, through a rigid enforcement of this act, was able to prevent the dissemination of propaganda directed against the government through the mails, the publishers of these newspapers and publications found other ways to get this propaganda into the hands of the readers.

Advising Revolution

"From the date of the signing of the armistice a wave of radicalism appears to have swept over the country which is best evidenced by the fact that since that time approximately fifty radical newspapers have commenced publication. A large number of these papers openly advocate the destruction of the United States Government and encourage and advise their readers to prepare for the coming revolution. It is also a noticeable fact that a great many of these publications are practically devoid of advertising matter, which indicates that they are receiving money from outside sources to further their propaganda.

"Practically all of the radical organizations in this country have looked upon the negroes as particularly fertile ground for the spreading of their doctrines. These radical organizations have endeavored to enlist negroes on their side and in many respects have been successful."

The Attorney General released for publication a large sheaf of extracts from negro newspapers in the United States. Many of the statements on the subject of race riots, racial equality, especially in the matter of sexual relations, were of the most violently radical type.

SAW MILL WASTE FOR PAPER

Logging Convention Informed It Will Make News Print

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 12.—Hundreds of tons of sawmill waste which could be used for newsprint and other coarse papers, are being burned every day, and there are millions of feet of stumps and small timber in southern cutover lands which could be used for the same purpose, J. F. Kidd of Lake, Miss., today told the annual convention here of the Southern Logging Association.

"I understand," said Mr. Kidd, "that many small town weekly and semi-weekly newspapers have been forced to suspend publication because of the high cost of newsprint, and that even some of the city dailies are having a rocky road to travel, but it seems there is inefficiency and neglect of opportunity somewhere when raw material is being wasted in quantities with a market crying for the products which could be manufactured from this wastage."

He advocated establishment through the Southern timber belt of either pulp or paper mills to convert into paper what "now goes up in smoke."

FARMERS' DAILY FOR CANADA

(BY TELEGRAPH)

OTTAWA, ONT., Nov. 17.—The ascendency of the united farmers in Canadian politics has interjected a new factor into Canadian journalism. Quickly following the election of Ontario's new provincial government, composed of farmer labor members, come announcements of newspaper changes which reflect the recent developments.

The Farmers Sun, a Toronto publication which is an official organ of the united farmers of Ontario, is to become a daily in the near future, with Rev. William Irvine, editor of the Western Independent, Winnipeg, as probable editor, while a movement is on foot to establish a weekly of a similar nature in New Brunswick.

GERMAN EDITIONS MERGED

N. Y. Staats-Zeitung and Herold Close Business Deal

Formal announcement of the purchase of the morning edition of the New Yorker Herold by the Staats-Zeitung, and of the evening edition of the Staats-Zeitung by the Herold, predicted by EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week, was made November 14 by the publishers of those newspapers. The following statement was made:

"An agreement has been reached by the publishers of the Staats-Zeitung and Herold for the purchase of the morning edition of the Herold by the Staats-Zeitung and the purchase of the evening edition of the Staats-Zeitung by the Herold. This transaction has been under consideration for a number of years and is the natural result of the tendency of modern journalism toward concentrating circulations in a few large papers, instead of distributing it among many smaller ones.

"This arrangement means one morning and one evening paper printed in the German language in the City of New York. The separate identity of the two newspapers is in no way effected by this purchase. The Staats-Zeitung and Herold will each continue to publish as heretofore."

URGES WAR SAVING PAPER RULES

Will Do More Than Anything Else to Keep Down Price of News Print, Declares C. W. Donnelly

Charles W. Donnelly, business manager of the Cumberland (Md.) Daily News, read a paper on "Saving White Paper" at the recent convention of the Inter-State Circulation Managers Association, which, says Fred I. Cook of the Scranton (Pa.) Republican, in a letter to Emron B. Pulsifer, "strikes me as a mighty good paper to publish just at this time when every effort is being made to conserve white paper."

Here is what Mr. Donnelly said:

"Having been brought up in the newspaper business from devil, press-feeder, compositor, foreman, and business manager to half-owner of the Cumberland Daily News, I have had an experience that all newspaper men do not get, and I rather enjoy the fact that I am a printer.

"My trade was learned under a hard master, who taught me that among other virtues to be found in a good pressman was saving paper, in both newspaper and job department. He frequently counted out my paper allowance and said: 'you must not spoil more than so many sheets' and in the case of newspaper printing we even had to save the spoiled papers (which were called 'Printers,' because they were bad)—and these went to exchanges.

In the Old Days

"Real conservation of print paper bears a close relationship to Liberty, in that its price is 'eternal vigilance' on the part of the newspaper business office and those in charge of the pressroom.

"We have always thought paper 'so cheap' that we have been almost criminal in our wastefulness. When the apprentice entered a printing office of old he noticed all (from devil to editor) drying their hands or wiping their shoes on paper torn from sheets or rolls, and unconsciously that new boy learned to have little regard for the saving of white paper, especially so if it happened to be news print.

"Not only has paper been wasted (carelessly handled and destroyed) but, it has also been a great factor, through that same careless handling, of strewing office and workshop floors with papers; thus making it a good place to start a blaze; instilling careless shiftless habits in the workmen, and making the editorial rooms and pressroom an eyesore to the insurance man or the proprietor of the plant or building, if he happened along that way.

"But the war brought about a decided change in the paper situation—such a decided change that for lack of white paper or the decidedly high price for flat sheets of news many newspapers, especially weeklies, were forced out of business. Prices of paper, both flat and in rolls, soared from heights to still greater heights, and even at the highest price paper was scarce and transportation of same after its purchase was uncertain.

"Then stepped in the War Industries Board—the pulp and paper section—and required reports (weekly at first, then monthly) which, added to the new postal zone system farce, made life miserable for the already overburdened, short-of-help, trying-to-do-his-full-duty patriotic newspaper man.

War Board Was a Blessing

"But to many of us the War Industries Board requirements were blessings in an unusual manner. To be effective the savings had to be started in the pressroom, and in order to file an up-to-the-pound report the business office was compelled to look more carefully after the real conservation of paper.

"Then it began to dawn on that easy-going newspaper man that discounts based and prices increased would in some instances not compare with the saving to be effected by an honest-to-goodness attempt at conserving paper at every point possible.

"Pardon the personal allusion, but luckily for our paper, we eight or ten years ago stopped taking back unsold copies from street boys and paper agents and allowed no exchanges—a sufficient number to cover their regular routes every name on which routes, including our employees' homes, we have on our books.

"We also, several years ago, put our exchanges on a paid basis and stopped sending papers to other paper offices when not paid for just as promptly as we stopped the paper on another subscriber who refused to pay. In both instances, cutting out returns of unsold papers and putting exchanges on a paid basis, we found that it paid well.

Intensive Saving

"The newspaper fraternity had always thought print-paper so plentiful and so cheap that they literally ran away with space, and column after column of the veriest rot found its place in all newspapers in the happy game of 'Keeping up with the Joneses.' All newspaper men who made an effort to obey the instructions of the War Industries Board found a new source of saving at both bunghole and spigot. They watched the paper situation more closely, and while they endeavored to always have on hand a sufficient amount to a little more than take care of their needs, they did not attempt to lay all the paper in sight and thus run up the already top heavy price of paper.

"When the paper was delivered at the plant the newspaper man required and secured more careful handling of bundles or rolls; he told his workmen, especially the pressmen and circulation men, that in saving paper and using it carefully down to the last sheet, or yard on the roll, they were doing a patriotic duty and in a way helping the other boys of the plant who were fighting 'over there.'

"The circulation lists were combed over and over to weed out all the unnecessary loss going to 'dead ones', and larger circulation gave way to good-paying circulation. It was found, also, that eight pages could be made newsy, bright, and snappy, where ten and twelve pages had been overburdened with unnecessary words, sentences and reading matter that consumed time, if read at all.

"More often the paper was kept in ten or twelve pages, and the good newspaper man did not find it necessary to get out a sixteen page sheet to worry his compositor just because he had secured another half page of advertising matter.

"Then, again, smaller margins were allowed, and constant watch kept to see that the papers left over were cut closer and closer to actual paper sales. In many offices forms and plates are to this day left on the presses as long as possible in order to be able to fill all circulation wants without leaving on hand a large number of unsold copies.

Free Copies Banned

"Exchanges on a cash basis eat out a number of papers that formerly went to the waste basket unopened and made the editor more careful of his selection of papers from his exchange list. Advertisers and agencies are mailed only those editions carrying their advertising, another source of saving.

"Waste paper, from editorial room to pressroom, was carefully garnered, baled and sold. One instance under our observation is of a newspaper man who was compelled to pay a large manufacturing plant an amount weekly for allowing the paper plant's janitor to burn the waste paper in the fire under the manufacturing plant's boiler.

"The newspaper secured a baler, had the waste put up in bundles in less time than it took to carry it to the nearby plant to be destroyed, and from a source of loss created a source of income, small it is true, but still by-product.

"And the real newspaper man is today carrying out the many rules of the War Industries Board which he applied during war times, and the savings effected then have inured both the employer and employees to still greater newspaper conservation, a factor which will in the end, if practised in generally, to more than offset the enlarge the profits of the newspaper and bring down the price of newsprint."

LESLIE W. ROWLAND, who has just been made assistant advertising manager of the American Express Company in New York, has a warm spot in his heart for all newspaper folk, for he started work as a police reporter on the Chicago Record-Herald, and from there he went to the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, and later to the Cleveland Leader. He eventually came to New York and was writing copy and doing general advertising for the American Express Company, when the call to the colors came and he enlisted as a private in the 107th Infantry, 27th Division. He spent eleven months overseas and was one of the editors of the "Gas Attack" a newspaper published by his division.

"MASTER SALESMAN" MAKES BIG HIT

CARL P. JOHNSON, whose striking monograph, "The Master Salesman," is reproduced on this page, is by no means a new convert to the power and potency of the daily newspaper. He has had in charge many big campaigns in which the newspaper dominated in the list of media, and his advocacy of this channel of communication is therefore based upon his actual experience.

Mr. Johnson is the head of the advertising agency of Johnson, Read & Co., Chicago. He was associated with Lord & Thomas for ten years and with the William H. Rankin Company previous to assuming his present connection. He is also fortified by considerable editorial experience.

"The Magic Salesman," which so graphically describes the magic of the printed word, is being reprinted by hundreds of newspapers throughout the country, through the courtesy of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets. Mr. Barbour has prepared mats for the use of newspapers, to be furnished to them at cost.

Lynch Goes to Dallas

C. R. Lynch, formerly of the Chicago office of the United Press, has been appointed manager of the Oklahoma City bureau, succeeding R. R. Wayne, who has been transferred to the Dallas, Texas, office. M. W. Vaughn, manager of the Dallas bureau, has been transferred to the New York office. D. G. Babbitt, recently discharged from the Army, has also been added to the New York staff.

Newspaper Men Help Run Philadelphia

Mayor Moore Will Be Aided by Costello, Holmes, Schlichter and Others

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—The incoming municipal administration is to be made up to a marked extent of former newspaper men of this city.

Congressman J. Hampton Moore, an editor of the Public Ledger before he entered politics, is the mayor-elect after a successful publicity campaign directed by Joseph K. Costello, formerly of The Evening Bulletin. "Hampy" plans the organization of a municipal publicity bureau which is expected to boom Philadelphia's commercial and industrial developments all over the world. It is considered very likely that Costello will be named to head the new department.

George F. Holmes, former political editor of the North American, succeeds himself as County Commission under the new mayor, E. R. Gudelius, who covered City Hall for the Press for years, remains as secretary of the Board of Recreation. Elmer Schlichter, formerly of the Evening Bulletin, is a special agent of the Department of Wharves, Docks and Ferries.

John J. Egan, formerly of the Inquirer, will remain as secretary to the director of the Department of City Transit, and Rice Garland remains as chief clerk of the Municipal Court. Garland was formerly on the editorial staff of the North American.

Peter J. Hoban, former political editor of the Public Ledger and father of "Walt" Hoban, the cartoonist, goes out as Director of Supplies with the present administration.

BUSINESS EDITORS ORGANIZE

National Conference Formed by Associated Business Papers, Inc.

At a meeting of editors of the publications belonging to the Associated Business Papers, Inc., held at the Hotel Astor, New York, November 13, it was decided to form a national conference of business paper editors, and the following officers were elected: A. I. Findley, editor Iron Age, New York City, president; Clay Cooper, editor Mill Supplies, Chicago, vice-president; R. Dawson Hall, managing editor Coal Age, New York City, secretary-treasurer.

The executive committee will consist of two New York men: Julian Chase, Class Journal Company; B. O. Hough, American Exporter; two Chicago men, A. McQuilkin, National Builder; E. T. Howson, Railway Age, and two committeemen at large, Charles J. Stark, Iron Trade Review, Cleveland, and Harvey Whipple, Concrete, Detroit.

New York, Chicago and St. Louis have had for some time local editorial conferences for business editors, but it was thought well to co-ordinate their efforts by a national association.

AGENTS PUSH RATE CARD CAMPAIGN

Standard Form, Now Used by 66 Per Cent. of All Publications, to be Universal by Feb. 1, Says O'Shaughnessy.

Sixty-four per cent of all publications in the United States have adopted the standard rate card of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the officers of the A. A. A. A. hope to have it adopted by all publications that receive advertising from agencies by February 1, 1920, according to a statement by Secretary James O'Shaughnessy, following a conference on that subject by the officers in New York on November 18.

"The advertisers have on their own initiative joined in our campaign to establish the standard rate card in every publication office," Mr. O'Shaughnessy told Editor & Publisher, "as they wish to see the money they have been losing—in the form of agency overhead charges—put into profitable advertising. The advertisers and publishers are the losers by the retention of the old unsystematic cards, as the only loss sustained by the agents is in the delay in preparation of schedules.

Agents Will Prepare Rate Cards

"The A. A. A. A. has at its New York office a special force which will assist in the preparation of a standard rate card for publishers who think that they cannot do it themselves. This committee is in charge of Newcomb Cleveland and C. W. Erickson Company, New York, who is chairman of the committee on forms, and who stands ready at all times to aid publishers in getting their rates, in standard form, into the hands of every one of our members. If any publishers do not know the names of our members, I will be glad to furnish them on request.

"There are many publishers among the readers of Editor & Publisher, I am sure, who have not yet adopted the standard rate card and I believe that you can render no better service to them and to advertising in general than by urging upon them the advantages of its immediate adoption. They are losing millions of dollars each year by sticking to their individual forms, which involve a tremendous amount of expense and unproductive labor in the compilation of advertising schedules and often result in the complete omission of newspapers with irregular forms."

Armstrong Heads Daily Committee

"For example, we used 8,000 newspapers in our Navy advertising campaign, and I assure you that if we did not have 119 members working on the campaign, we could never have carried it through on that scale."

Collin Armstrong, president of Collin Armstrong, Inc., was appointed chairman of the newspaper advertising committee of the A. A. A. A. and other changes in the committee's personnel will be announced shortly.

Those taking part in Tuesday's conference were: President Harry Dwight Smith, Fuller & Smith, Cleveland; O. H. Blackman, Blackman-Ross, Inc., New York; J. P. Hallman, H. K. McCann Company, New York; A. W. Erickson, A. W. Erickson Company, New York; William H. Johns, George Batten Company, Inc., New York, and W. R. Hine, Frank Seaman, Inc., New York.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy has announced the following program for the association during the coming year:

January 13-14—Tenth quarterly meeting of executive board, executive headquarters, New York.

April 13-14—Eleventh quarterly meeting of executive board, place to be decided later.

July 13-14—Twelfth quarterly meeting of executive board, place to be decided later.

October 12 — Thirteenth quarterly meeting of executive board, place to be decided later.

October 13—Fourth annual meeting, place to be decided later.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Tribute to John McKee

To Editor & Publisher: The genial, dignified, ever suave, and ever interesting character of North of Ireland fame, John McKee, who greeted you as you stepped from the elevator on the 8th floor of Van Patten, Inc., New York, has passed away.

Every advertising man, newspaper representative, and publisher who had occasion to visit the Van Patten agency will remember Mr. McKee, who always had a smile for the visitor and made your waiting a source of pleasure.

He was a native of North of Ireland in the 73rd year of his age, had a good word for everyone and never seemed to lose his equanimity. In the Van Patten organization he was a prominent figure. His loss is most keenly felt by the entire organization. His death was peaceful, coming as a welcome relief to him and at a ripe old age. Even in his last moments he talked of the different "cases" in the advertising business, as he called them, mentioning many of them by name and asking to be remembered to them.

John McKee is gone but his spirit still lives.

VAN PATTEN, INC.

In Behalf of the I. E. A.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 15, 1919.

To Editor & Publisher: What's behind your attacks on the International Editorial Association? I'm a member of it and believe if it accomplishes what it has started to do, it will be the best thing ever done for newspapers. In this connection my twenty years' experience with Printers' Press and Inland Printer is my opinion.

Charlie Grant has just shown me the article in your issue of October 30, and I am frank to say I don't understand it in any such bitterness. It's no easy job to get a newspaper. The organization under way. Undoubtedly Steen has had hard sledding and has made many mistakes, but why pan him as you do?

Personally, I believe he has worked hard for the good of the Association, and has not made a cent for himself. If he has done anything wrong, why not come right out and say so? Cut out the spleen and publish facts.

PRESSMEN ORGANIZE NEW UNION

Newspaper Workers Break from I. P. P. & A. U. Owing to Dissatisfaction With Berry's Management

(BY TELEGRAPH)

St. Louis, Nov. 18.—Union pressmen from twenty-seven cities, in convention here yesterday, seceded from the International Printing Pressmen's & Assistants' Union, and organized the National Paper Web Pressmen of the United States and Canada."

Among the cities having delegates in attendance were Cincinnati, New York, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington, Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago.

The name under which the convening pressmen will ask for a charter from the American Federation of Labor is: "The Newspaper Printing Pressmen of the United States and Canada."

The seceders expressed dissatisfaction with the administration of affairs of the I. P. P. & A. U., under the presidency of Major George L. Berry of Pittsburgh, and charged that the misappropriation of $200,000 funds.

Assurances that all existing contracts with publishers will be adhered to were given in resolutions adopted today by the International Newspaper Web Pressmen of North and South America, as the new organization which convened here yesterday will be known. The resolutions also authorize the chairman to appoint a committee of three to so personally inform H. N. Kellogg of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. The resolutions also will be informed that the new association is opposed to strikes and is for the principle of arbitration.

Have buyer for an eastern daily newspaper property to cost $50,000 or less. Preferably a property susceptible of considerable development. Politics immaterial. Proposition T. P.

Resolutions also were adopted to appoint a committee of three to meet with the board of directors of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, from which the web pressmen are seceding, to ask its approval of the granting of an international charter, but if no satisfactory conclusion is reached, the matter shall be placed before the officials of the American Federation of Labor.

Seventeen unions are represented by delegates.

H. Clay Schmidt of St. Louis was elected chairman and John T. Taylor of Detroit secretary.

The meeting was called in accordance with resolutions presented at a conference in Detroit and adopted by referendum vote. An innovation in trades unionism is the fact that all sessions of the association are open to the public and representatives of the press have been invited to attend.

Chairman Schmidt said that this was in refutation of the charge of the head of the pressmen's union that the web pressmen were Bolshevists and un-American. Mr. Schmidt offered the resolutions upholding present contracts,

"We want a business administration and the right of self-determination," he said.

At yesterday's session John Warrington, secretary and business representative of the Franklin Association and secretary of the St. Louis Allied Printing Trades Council, reviewed the court action instigated against the board of directors of the parent association for gross neglect of office and misappropriation of certain funds in the treasury.

The convention will last four days.

Effect on Contracts

(BY TELEGRAPH)

Indianapolis, Nov. 18.—When asked by Editor & Publisher whether the break in the I. P. P. & A. U. would have any effect on existing contracts held by publishers, with pressmen, H. N. Kellogg, labor commissioner of the A. N. P. A., said:

"I am not informed of action said to have taken place in St. Louis yesterday. Therefore I cannot speak authoritatively, but I have no doubt that members of the International Pressmen and Assistants' Union will faithfully observe all contracts now in effect."

A. N. P. A. NEWS PRINT PLANS APPROVED and vivid portrayal of the news print situation, and brought publishers to a realization of their duty.

"The news print conservation and conciliation committee will no doubt accomplish satisfactory results, as it is properly founded.

"The news print conservation recommendations adopted by the convention should meet the approval of every publisher.

"It is my judgment that not a great deal will be gained by reviving efforts for saving along the lines named by the War Industries Board.

War Rules Not Drastic Enough

"Last year my thought is that the Industries Board accomplished its purpose, and that 90 per cent of the daily newspapers are still working along the lines then prescribed, having found them profitable.

"Something new and more drastic is now called for. A survey of the country prepared here today shows that there are about 100 cities in the United States that have an aggregate of over 200 newspapers, farm papers and other publications, each with a circulation exceeding 20,000, using new print of different kinds, which may easily save an average of 1,000 tons during 1920, and thus make the estimated 20,000 tons less consumption.

"Volunteers in these ranks should be called to show their loyalty at this time. Each of these publishers knows his local field and should find a means to the end.

"I have great confidence in the efficiency and its immediate effectiveness of the work which shall be carried on by the Bradford Merrill's committee on conciliation and conservation.

"The great majority of the small papers in the country have now reduced almost to the minimum, if they are going to maintain their identity and newspapers. Much saving may not be looked for from this source. The fact that they cannot buy print paper except at a prohibitive price has forced them in the extreme.

Approved by N. E. A.

"Advertising cannot be reduced much among these papers if they are to defend the merchants of their community in competition with mail order houses and the great retail stores getting abnormal publicity in the large papers. Business in the rural communities should not be crushed."

President Albright of the N. E. A. says:

"The news print conservation recommendations adopted by the special convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association last week meets with my hearty approval."

Increased advertising rates and reduced size of newspapers, as suggested by Frank P. Glass, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, is the only way in which publishers can meet the needs of the existing situation in the newspaper field, already rendered acute by the consumption of surplus stocks of news print in the country, says the Seattle Times editorially.

"Mr. Glass presents a sobering prospect," says the Times. "Addressing the newspaper publishers' association at a special meeting in New York, Mr. Glass pointed out that the extraordinary volume of advertising carried by newspapers all over the country had made a terrific demand upon the news print manufacturers. An inevitable outgrowth of the race between production and consumption has been an advance in price."

Glass Impresses Seattle

Commenting on Mr. Glass' suggestions, including the proposal to effect an arrangement with the Canadian government permitting the bringing of pulp to American mills without productive restrictions on the Canadian side in the passage of the waterpower bill now pending in Congress, the Times says:

"These measures will afford only future relief, while the need of the hour is immediate relief. This latter can be achieved only through cutting down the size of newspapers and increasing advertising rates, a course which is justified, says Mr. Glass, by the fact that newspaper advertising rates always have been too low and now are at levels which justify an advance of from 25 to 50 per cent."

Close to 200,000 tons of Norwegian print paper will be imported to the United States for the relief of American newspaper publishers, if Senator Watson of Indiana is able to negotiate for the diversion of shipping.

Watson Wants Imports

Senator Watson is seeking the cooperation of the department of State and Commerce and the Shipping Board in an effort to have the Norwegian paper made available to American newspapers. He has been informed that not less than ten ships a week are returning to the United States in ballast, and while these vessels do not make Scandinavian ports, he believes the Shipping Board should divert them in order to transport the news print.

Should Senator Watson be unable to obtain action through the departments, he will offer a resolution in the Senate calling upon them to state why they have not done so or are not willing to do so.

His proposal gives more promise of definite relief for the publishers than anything that has been suggested so far.

"I understand there is a vast quantity of print paper available in Norway, but I am unable to get information as to the exact amount, though I am informed it is close to two hundred thousand tons," Senator Watson said. "That is a considerable amount of paper, but I am told there is that much over and above domestic demands and available for shipment into the United States.

"I am told by the publishers of the small newspapers throughout the country that they cannot stand the pressure of high-priced paper. They have reached a condition where they will be forced to exclude news or advertising in order that their papers smaller. We cannot let this occur and survive as a vital and free nation.

"My resolution to investigate the available supply of paper pulp in the Northeast and chart the same is in the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, and I wish that the publishers of this country would press for its early report. The resolution provides also for the investigation of pulp supplies in the West and Northwest.

Government to Help?

"The paper industry of the United States is moving away. It is establishing itself in Canada. Free trade for print paper will not aid the situation. It will encourage the Canadian industry and the Canadian manufacturers will be able to fix the price to suit themselves.

"I am in favor of making the industry so profitable in this country, and there is considerable profit in the industry, that other manufacturers will enter the business."

Senator Gronna said that the committee on agriculture and forestry, to which the Watson resolution for a survey of wood pulp possibilities in this country was referred, would not take it up until the committee on manufactures, of which Senator La Follette is chairman, had held its hearings on the news print shortage in response to Senator Reed's resolution.

Convention Tales Told

U. S. AGENTS SEIZE SHOP OF RADICAL DAILY

Seattle Union Record Suspended for Violent Editorial—Labor Chief Demands Action Against Other Seattle Papers

(BY TELEGRAPH)

SEATTLE, WASH., Nov. 17.—Complete seizure of the entire plant and equipment of the Daily Union Record and indefinite suspension of publication have been ordered by United States Attorney Saunders, enforced by government agents in a record raid on the establishment, following the arrests Thursday of E. B. Ault, editor and manager, and George P. Listman and Frank P. Rust, directors, on charges of publishing seditious and inflammatory editorials.

After the first raid on the plant the Record published one edition and then Attorney Saunders on advices from Attorney-General Palmer, took entire possession of the plant on Friday, ordering all employes to leave, silencing linotypes, presses and telegraph keys and placing locks on the doors.

No paper has since been issued by the Record except a small four-page sheet printed in the job printing plant today.

Except for refusal of the post office inspectors to admit the paper to mails, no interference has been made with the circulation of this abbreviated edition.

The case is of unusual interest to newspaper publishers because the government, in prosecuting the defendants, claims the right to seize the entire plant and equipment, including type, linotypes, presses, etc., on the ground that they were used in the commitment of crime.

OHIO FIRST

Intense Cultivation via Daily Newspapers Pay Handsome Returns

OHIO has money to spend for your goods. Ohio wants your goods. Ohio people want to know about your goods—what they are, why they are better than the other fellow's goods, what the prices are and, particularly, just where your goods are on sale.

Tell these good people about your wares. Tell them the story—fully, freely and frankly. Don't tell them any half-baked story; don't ask these people to try to find your goods in some store, somewhere—but tell them what store in their town they can find your goods.

Tell them about your local representative. Locate your merchandise so that they may go to their own town merchant—and be sure of getting the right merchant—and you will get results.

Ohio people read Ohio daily newspapers---each his own home town daily newspaper.

Cincinnati people swear by or swear at the Enquirer---and yet the Cincinnati Enquirer does not loom up vital in the young lives of Ohio people living in Cleveland. The Plain Dealer is the vital spark in their lives---and in between Cincinnati and Cleveland are a number of mighty good daily newspapers, vital to their own communities and capable of doing a vast amount of good to your business.

Cultivate Ohio with Ohio daily newspapers, cooperate with Ohio merchants and increase your sales in one of the best trading territories in the country.

To Newspaper Publishers

ONE year ago the New York Globe launched a campaign for increased compensation to advertising agents to produce a standard base of 15 per cent. commission and 2 per cent. cash discount.

To-day 94 per cent. of the daily newspapers of the country are on a 15 per cent. basis with 78 per cent. on the 15 per cent. and 2 per cent basis.

You all know how increased costs of doing business have piled up during the last year. We have all met the rising tide by increasing rates and selling prices.

It is sound business for us to again recognize that increased costs must be faced by the agents, and to grant a further increase of 2 per cent. in commission.

The general mediums allow 15 per cent. and 2 per cent. As it costs about 2 per cent. more to carry on a national campaign in the newspapers than in the general mediums we will be but paying for the additional service in allowing the extra 2 per cent. now.

The New York Globe made the increase Nov. 1, 1919.

I shall be pleased to hear from publishers who will make the increase and to list them in trade paper advertising and in circulars to the agents.

NEW HAMPSHIRE A STATE OF SUBSTANTIAL INDUSTRIES AND CONTENTED WORKERS

Labor Unrest Almost Unknown as a Result of Wise Industrial Management—Inviting Market for All Worth-While Products—People Typical New Englanders, Thrifty and Progressive

JEFFERSON MILL, AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING COMPANY, MANCHESTER
Largest Textile Manufacturing Establishment in the World, Whose Mills Extend for a Mile and a Half Along the East Bank of the Merrimack River

THERE are but five states smaller in area than New Hampshire. The state has 9,031 square miles of land surface. Its estimated population in 1914—Federal Census Bureau estimate—was 439,000. It is nineteenth among the states in density of population, having 47.7 inhabitants per square mile.

The proportion of urban population is growing. In 1910 it was 59.2 per cent of the total as compared with 55 per cent in 1900. In 1914 there were eight cities each having an estimated population in excess of 10,000. These were: Berlin, Concord, Dover, Keene, Laconia, Manchester, Nashua and Portsmouth. The aggregate population of these cities was 42 per cent of the total for the state, and they report 60.9 per cent of the total value of the state's manufactured products.

New Hampshire is an industrial state, as is strikingly demonstrated by the fact that the total value of farm crops each year is approximately $15,000,000, while the total value of manufactured products in 1914 was $182,843,863, and the value added by manufacture was $67,830,426. There are 1736 manufacturing establishments in the state. These employ a total of 85,013 people. The average number of wage earners is 78,993. The total annual payroll of these establishments in 1914 was $46,523,773; and the payroll for wage earners was $40,642,393. The capital invested in manufacturing is $156,748,853.

The state ranks twenty-ninth in the value of products and twentieth in the number of wage earners.

The manufacture of boots and shoes is New Hampshire's leading industry, 71 establishments employing 14,815 wage earners; the annual product in 1914 was valued at $46,694,765 and the value added by manufacture was $12,983,167.

The second industry in importance in the state is the manufacture of cotton goods and cotton small wares, 20 establishments employing 21,609 wage earners (the largest number represented in any of the state's industries). The total value of products is $35,793,044, the value added by manufacture being $13,033,455. Thus it would appear that the cotton mills are the state's largest source of wealth, while ranking second in the total value of products.

The third industry in importance is the manufacture of paper and wood pulp in which 30 establishments are engaged. These employ an average of 3,905 wage earners; the annual product is valued at $17,708,138 and the value added by manufacture is $5,171,062.

Ranking fourth is the related industry of lumber and timber products, employing 7,275 wage earners, with an annual product of $16,554,468 and a value added by manufacture of $8,124,006.

The manufacture of woolen and worsted goods ranks fifth among New Hampshire industries, employing 9,532 wage earners and with an annual output valued at $15,039,284, the value added by manufacture being $4,952,463.

In the 24 leading lines of manufacturing in the state are included 5 with products exceeding $10,000,000 each per year; 10 with products valued at from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 and nine with products valued at less than $1,000,000 each.

its entirety, would easily rank first in the state. The three most important branches of this industry—cotton goods, including cotton small wares, woolen and worsted goods and hosiery and knit goods—reported products amounting to $55,115,067, or 30.1 per cent of the total value of manufactured products for the state and gave employment to 34,529, or 43.7 per cent of the total number of wage earners.

New Hampshire stands fourth among the states in the manufacture of boots and shoes, and this industry has shown a steady growth.

Statistics of the paper and wood pulp industry later than 1914 are not available, but in this industry there has been, since that date, a forced expansion, due to the increasing demands for newsprint paper. The great timber resources of the state and its water power serve to place it in the front among all the states in this industry.

Wage Earners Mostly Men

The lumber and timber products have always constituted a leading branch of New Hampshire industries. In late years much of the wood formerly utilized in general manufacturing has been diverted to the paper industry, and this trend will doubtless continue.

Men greatly outnumber women among the wage earners of the state, the per centages being, 70.8 males and 29.2 females.

In 1914 only six-tenths of one per cent of the wage earners were under sixteen years of age.

In but two lines of manufacturing do the women wage earners outnumber the men. In the manufacture of men's clothing 92.4 per cent of the workers are women and in hosiery and knit goods 66.7 per cent.

From 1904 to 1914 the number of wage earners in Manchester increased 47 per cent; in Portsmouth, 70.8 per cent; in Nashua, 19.9 per cent; in Keene, 16.9 per cent and in Concord 7.6 per cent. These figures afford a measure of the steady growth of the state's industries.

As the most important industries of the state are not seasonable there is but little variation in the stability of employment month by month. The minimum number engaged in any one month is 93 per cent of the maximum for any month.

Stability of Employment

Cotton goods, with the greatest average number of wage earners, shows the smallest fluctuation, the number of wage earners in October—the least active month—being 96.6 per cent. of the number in February, the month of maximum activity. Manchester, among the cities, shows the greatest stability of employment, the minimum in this city for any one month being 95.2 per cent. of the maximum for any month.

The 48-hour week is slowly but steadily gaining ground in New Hampshire. Yet in 1914, as at previous census periods, by far the greater number of wage earners were employed in establishments where the prevailing hours were between 54 and 60. In 1914 only half a many people were working 60 hours per week as in 1909.

In eight of the principal cities in 1914, 96.5 per cent of the wage earners were on schedules of 60 hours or less per week. In Manchster 98.6 per cent of wage earners work less than 60 hours per week.

Summer visitors spend $10,000,000 each year in New Hampshire. The scenic splendors of the state and its perfect summer climate attract people from every section of the country. From its broad window on the sea to the Canadian border New Hampshire is a delight to the tourist. Mountains, on whose peaks and slopes are pictured the glories of dawns and sunsets in turn, charm and allure the visitor, weary of the city grind and grime. They beckon to tired humanity and speak health, rest and content.

MAP OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, SHOWING TRADING AREA OF PRINCIPAL CITIES

It is easy to understand the vigor and progressiveness of the inhabitants of a state which draws to it thousands of visitors in quest of that new vim and energy which is found in its bracing air. Indeed, it has been said of Manchester, the chief city of the state, that it is essentially western in the spirit of its people and in the absence of the restraint of tradition which fetters many eastern cities. Manchester has the habit of doing things, not merely contemplating them as possibilities.

Here, in this delightful city on the picturesque Merrimack, live an army of prosperous wage earners, to all of whom a higher order of home life is possible. There is little labor unrest. Somehow Manchester manufacturers—as well as those of other cities of the state—have solved the problem of "team work" between employer and employees.

They will tell you that this is accomplished because capital and labor are not set up as opposing factors in production, but as partners.

Manchester is a city of busy people. In an estimated population of 85,000 there are few idlers. Twenty thousand textile workers—according to recent estimates—live and work here, and ten thousand are employed in making shoes.

City of Great Industries

Nature seems to have destined Manchester to be a city of big industries. Her magnificent water power, afforded by Amoskeag Falls, is splendidly utilized to turn the wheels of great industries—including the largest textile manufacturing establishment in the world. It is said that the Merrimack River turns more spindles than any other river in the world.

Manchester is the largest city of New England north of the Massachusetts line. The city has an area of 21,700 acres, plus a water area of 3,000 acres. There are about sixteen thousand families and approximately 10,000 dwellings. There are 210 miles of public streets; 206 acres of parks and commons in the built-up sections of the city.

The wage earners of Manchester, according to a recent estimate, receive more than $12,000,000 annually. The payroll of one cigar factory employing about 1,000 people and said to be the largest single factory in this line in the country—is $1,000,000 a year. Here is located the largest brush factory in the world, with an annual product valued at more than $1,100,000. Two million baseball bats are made each year.

One hundred and twenty have paper mills or make paper goods of some sort.

A Boston bank has issued a map of New England showing by symbols the industries on which each of 641 towns depends, for the furtherance of the export business. The subject is too immense to treat superficially in a brief way, except to point out to manufacturers of specialties of all kinds that in this great market of over 7,000,000 people there is ample purchasing demand for everything that can be sold by name and advertised in the daily newspapers, which are the natural means of obtaining publicity in this intelligent, reading community.

These houses supply the Manchester territory and maintain an exceptionally fine auto delivery system.

Freight and railway express service is very good to points far beyond the Manchester trading area and through the aid of branch offices and stores in other cities, these wholesalers conduct an up-to-date distributing service to most all parts of New Hampshire.

The summer resort business is well cared for by special trips to the stores in lake and mountain resorts during the season.

The wholesalers co-operate with all national advertisers.

Retail Section

The principal shopping center is located on Elm, Hanover and Manchester Streets. It is about 2 miles long and boasts of the finest stores in the state. Fine department stores—large bank buildings—specialty houses—exclusive shops—theatres, etc., are located here.

A large number of the firms are French and even the biggest stores employ many French clerks to cater to the French population.

There are two neighborhood shopping centers about ½ mile long in the French districts of Granite Square and Notre Dame.

There is also a Greek section ½ mile long on Spruce Street.

Residential Features

Mostly one and two-family houses.

Several 3 to 5 family tenement houses near mill sections.

The large section populated almost entirely by French people who are loyal to their French newspaper in addition to the English dailies.

The Amoskeag Mfg. Co. conducts a large mill tenement section of brick block construction, regularly inspected and well managed.

Trading Area

Manchester draws business from all parts of the state because it is the largest city in New Hampshire. From the more distant points the buyers come periodically, but from towns and villages within twenty miles there is such good transportation facilities that the regular business of the city is increased by thousands of dollars weekly all year around.

Tourists, vacationists and summer residents in the lake and mountain territory contribute much wealth during the summer season.

The more definite boundaries of the Manchester trading area extend north to Concord, northeast to Pittsfield, east to Epping, south to Nashua, west to Elmwood and northwest to Hillsboro.

In this area are many rich produce farms, numerous vacation resorts, large dairy farms and many mill towns, all of which are a big factor in the business of Manchester's retail and wholesale houses.

Nationally advertised goods are popular and in great demand, both necessities and luxuries.

The per capita wealth in this area is very high.

"THE FRENCH DAILY" of MANCHESTER, N. H.

An American Newspaper Published in the French Language

A LOCAL and STATE Daily I-N-D-I-S-P-E-N-S-A-B-L-E to cover Manchester and New Hampshire.

Second Largest Circulation IN MANCHESTER IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

Member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

National Advertisers and Advertising Agencies planning to cover Manchester and New Hampshire are invited to consider the claims of L'AVENIR NATIONAL to be included in their "list." If "space buying" is a science, it must be based on "facts." You cannot cover Manchester and New Hampshire unless you use "a full-size blanket," otherwise some part of the anatomy will stay in the "cold." No campaign, using English mediums only, can thoroughly cover this field because the large foreign language population which will not be reached. This is a problem, but L'AVENIR NATIONAL solves the greater part of it for you as it covers the French-speaking population which is the predominant foreign language element. In Manchester, the French-speaking population is 35,000 in a total population, and throughout the state it is 70,000. This, then, is too important a part of the population of this field to be neglected if it can be reached just as easily and just as economically as by "regular advertising" and it can be. L'AVENIR NATIONAL takes care of all translations and resetting of advertisements in French at advertising rates which will compare with those of English mediums.

L'AVENIR NATIONAL IS SECOND ONLY IN MANCHESTER AND NEW HAMPSHIRE TO THE LEADING ENGLISH DAILY, THE MANCHESTER UNION-LEADER

SPACE BUYERS' SURVEY OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

ABBOT-DOWNING TRUCK PLANT, CONCORD
Said to be the largest in its line in the United States

roundings of operatives in Manchester, reported that "manufacturing life in Manchester was a revelation to me." The report emphasized the high average character and intelligence of the mill operatives, the spirit of friendliness and co-operation existing between mill executives and the workers and the attractiveness of the homes provided.

The Amoskeag Manufacturing Company has an annual payroll of more than $7,000,000; it has 605,000 cotton spindles, 22,000 cotton looms and 2,200 worsted looms in use; turns out 259,311,728 yards of cloth per annum; weaves 1,600,000 bags and consumes 54,000,000 pounds of cotton and 15,000,000 pounds of wool a year. This company has 5,844,340 square feet of floor space in its buildings. This great corporation—first in the world in its line—carries on a program of splendidly planned welfare work for its operatives, including an emergency hospital and a staff of visiting nurses, children's playgrounds, the finest baseball park and athletic field in New England north of Boston and carries on an elaborate series of entertainments for employees during the winter months. Workers are helped to become home owners and also stockholders in the corporation.

One of the state's most important manufacturing establishments is that of the W. H. McElwain Company, specializing in shoes for men and boys. The factories are at Manchester, Nashua, Claremont, Merrimack and Newport. About 6,000 peoples are employed in the manufacturing division and there is a total daily output of about 35,000 pairs of shoes. In Manchester alone the company employs about 3,800 people. The company is capitalized at $9,800,000.

For more than a hundred years, the tradition of the Concord Patriot has been summed up in one word—leadership.

The Real Test

Levin J. Chase, Mgr. Concord Electric Company, writes: "Your progress, which is really remarkable in a city like Concord, is due wholly to your leadership. It may be fairly said that your subscribers look forward with satisfaction to the arrival of the Patriot night and morning and that is the real test."

President George A. Foster, Concord Board of Trade: "Recently I advertised a certain piece of property in the Patriot and sold it the next day. I feel that as a newspaper and an advertising medium it is of the greatest value."

M. E. Gordon, clothier: "I have been a constant advertiser for 16 years. I have certainly noticed every change for the better and your remarkable progress, both in circulation and modern facilities."

Concord's Three National Banks Say—

Edward N. Pearson, First National: "The development of a modern newspaper plant has been matched by a fine growth in circulation and advertising patronage."

Josiah E. Fernald, National State Capital Bank: "I have watched with a great deal of interest the growth of the Patriot. We wish to congratulate you on the success that you have made both from the standpoint of a reader and an advertiser."

H. H. Dudley, Mechanicks' National Bank: "I have learned of the very substantial increase in the circulation of the Patriot. Certainly the Patriot is a very readable newspaper, up-to-date and a good advertising medium."

J. C. Derby, jeweler, says: "I have used special advertisements, have kept account of the returns and it is surprising what large returns have come from a small investment. I consider it one of the best mediums for advertising and the great growth the paper is making betters the advertising as each week goes by. I thoroughly appreciate having such a valuable paper in our midst."

in each of the eight principal cities, according to 1914 estimates by the census bureau: Manchester, 25,843; Nashua, 7,382; Berlin, 2,680; Concord, 2,856; Dover, 2,843; Laconia, 2,621; Portsmouth, 1,090 and Keene, 2,068.

New Hampshire offers to manufacturers seeking a market for their products a dominant population of prosperous and satisfied wage earners, employed in industries affording stability of wages and work. Newspapers, measuring up to the best standards of journalism, afford the unfailing key to this market at a very reasonable advertising cost. As a market unit the state may be developed quickly, both in distribution and in advertising.

NEWSPAPERS PUT OVER CANADIAN LOAN

Met and Successfully Counteracted Critical Attitude of Public—Twice As Much Money Raised As Asked

TORONTO, Nov. 27.—Were any evidence needed to demonstrate the power of newspaper publicity, when properly directed, it is supplied by the experience of the Dominion of Canada in floating its third Victory Loan.

When the Canadian Press Association undertook last August to handle the publicity for this year's loan, the Committee approached the task with a good deal of apprehension. This was increased when members of the Committee, under agreement among themselves, sounded out such people as they encountered in their everyday routine. Questions were put to about 250 individuals, mostly among the working-class, and the general attitude was one of criticism, with more or less open hostility to the idea of another loan.

The committee thereupon determined that its line of action would be directed towards meeting and counteracting the critical attitude of the public, and copy writers set themselves deliberately to work to anticipate the criticism that would be levelled at the loan when the campaign began.

The first large-space advertisement came right out with an explanation of why another loan was needed; the second presented exact figures as to what would be done with the money raised; the third gave details of the disposition of the money raised last year. Fact after fact was driven home in the most convincing way possible.

What was the result? Victory loan canvassers were particularly requested to report on the popular attitude towards the loan. They found, with scarcely an exception, that the attitude of hostility as marked last August had been completely dispelled. That it was dispelled to good effect is shown by the figures. The loan was oversubscribed by nearly $600,000,000, falling little if any short of last year's total. Just half that sum was asked by the Government.

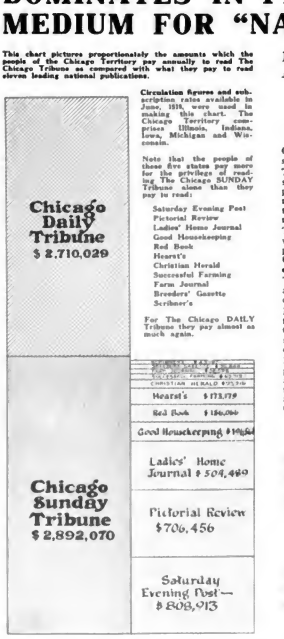
The Chicago Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

DOMINATES IN FIVE GREAT STATES AS MEDIUM FOR "NATIONAL" ADVERTISING



This chart pictures proportionately the amounts which the people of the Chicago Territory pay annually to read The Chicago Tribune as compared with what they pay to read eleven leading national publications.

Circulation figures and subscription rates available in June, 1918, were used in making this chart. The Chicago Territory comprises Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Note that the people of those five states pay more for the privilege of reading The Chicago SUNDAY Tribune alone than they pay to read:

Saturday Evening Post
Pictorial Review
Ladies' Home Journal
Good Housekeeping
Red Book
Hearst's
Christian Herald
Successful Farming
Farm Journal
Breeders' Gazette
Scribner's

For The Chicago DAILY Tribune they pay almost as much again.

Mr. William H. Johns, speaking as President of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, recently said:

> "The newspaper has such a quick, direct appeal to the public that it is destined to be more and more recognized as the biggest, most essential and thoroughly recognized factor in national as well as local advertising, just as all concede today that even the smallest local newspaper helps frame national opinion on matters of politics, morals, tastes and habits."

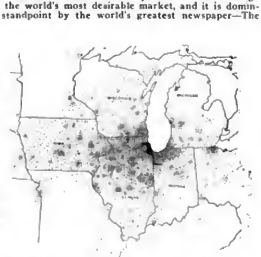
Obviously it is important that every man who spends money for advertising should realize the unique dominance of The Chicago Tribune in its territory.



The map below shows how thoroughly The Chicago Tribune covers five great states. The chart opposite indicates that The Chicago Tribune must be a powerful force—an unrivaled force—with its readers, since they pay twice as much for the privilege of reading it as the sixteen million five hundred thousand inhabitants of the same five states pay to read eleven leading weekly, monthly, women's and farmers magazines.

The value of a publication to a reader, its importance in his daily life, its weight and influence with him—is surely to be measured by what the reader pays for it. When people pay $10.00 a year (cash in advance) for The Chicago Tribune, it is because they want The Tribune more then anything else they read.

The hundreds of thousands of people graphically pictured on the map below awake 365 mornings in the year with two ideas linked by the rigid routine of a lifetime—breakfast and The Chicago Tribune.

Magazines may be laid away to be read whenever leisure and inclination happen to coincide, but a part of every day is definitely set aside for reading The Chicago Tribune. Through no other medium can an advertiser so swiftly, so surely, so directly reach the hearts and the brains and the pocketbooks of the people of the Chicago territory.

In the Chicago territory one-sixth of the population of the United States possesses one-fifth of the national wealth, raises one-fifth of all our crops and produces one-fifth of our total manufactured product. The Chicago territory is unquestionably the world's most desirable market, and it is dominated from an advertising standpoint by the world's greatest newspaper—The Chicago Tribune.

Thirteen Sunday Newspapers with a circulation of 2,902,164,

Making a combined seven day circulation of 25,420,710 published in Twenty-four Cities in the State of New York not only cover the best business state in the Union, but are agreed that National advertisers are entitled to and shall receive the kind of co-operation that will make business placed with them profitable, not only to the daily newspapers, but to the local distributor as well as the manufacturer.

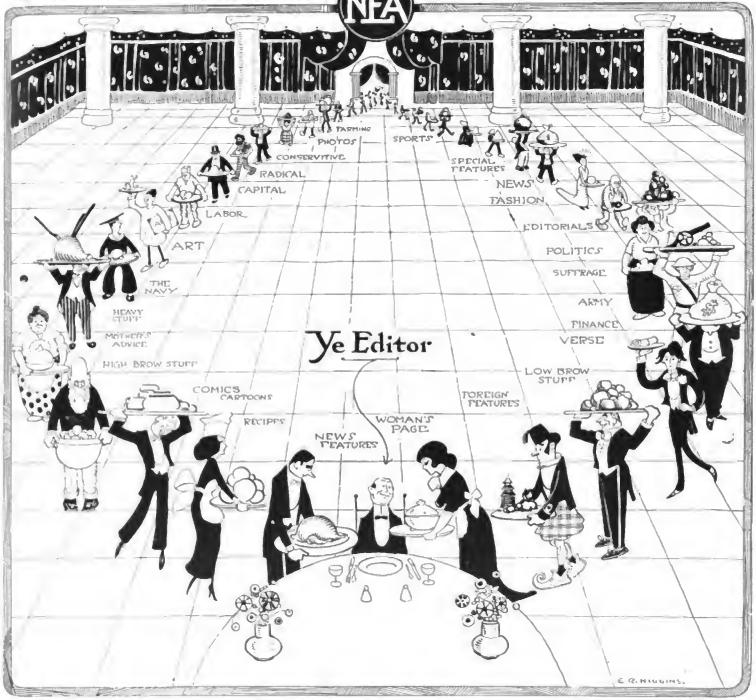
These daily newspapers are great newspapers. Great, not only in circulation, but in real influence in their communities.

They are operated by newspaper men who realize that daily newspapers have come into their own as to recognized value as the best advertising media, and are great in their determination to make good in every way to National advertisers.

They spell economy, efficiency and the kind of co-operation so much desired by all national advertisers and so seldom found in any place except a daily newspaper.



Localized national advertising is the most profitable kind, and daily newspapers localize national advertising.

Philadelphia

is a Wonderful City for a Concentrated Advertising Campaign

Experienced advertising men say that Philadelphia is different from any other market in the United States, because one newspaper alone, The Bulletin, goes daily into practically every worth-while home.

Of Philadelphia's 392,000 dwellings, nearly 150,000 are owned by the families that live in them.

Philadelphia's 2089 Building and Loan Associations have 677,911 share-holders, and 430,793 people are regular depositors in its Savings Banks.

Dominate Philadelphia

Create maximum impression at one cost by concentrating in the newspaper "nearly everybody" reads—

The Bulletin

October Circulation 451,792 Copies a day

The circulation of The Bulletin is the second largest in the United States.

The Bulletin is the only Philadelphia newspaper which prints its circulation figures regularly each day.

No prize, premium, coupon or other artificial methods of circulation stimulation have ever been used by The Bulletin.

"ADVERTISING FOR THE SAKE OF LOTS OF IT" DOES NOT ATTRACT THE BRITISH

System of English Newspapers as Outlined by Wareham Smith, Director of Lord Northcliff's Associated Newspapers, Ltd., May Hold a Lesson for American Publishers—Daily Mail Maximum is 16 Pages

IN the present newsprint crisis when American newspaper publishers are wondering whether to jump, drive or balance, and are pinning their faith on hope for the days just ahead, it might be well to give a thought to the way they are continuing to overcome a like situation overseas.

A few days ago three went to tea at the Manhattan Hotel, New York. Two were Americans and called for lemon; the third—who was first—ordered cream, which is contrary to the rules laid down to us on what an Englishman should put in tea.

The adding of cream to tea prepared us for the next surprise, namely, an advertising man and director in one of the greatest newspaper institutions in the whole wide-world, who doesn't believe in advertising just for the sake of printing a whole lot of it.

Wareham Smith, director of the Associated Newspapers, Ltd., publishers of Lord Northcliffe's Daily Mail, Evening News and Weekly Dispatch, is here to look us over for the second time in eleven years. He speaks quietly but decisively. He has seen many things that have surprised him greatly, but have pleased him immensely. His main concern is newspapers, and since his arrival, he says, that he has toured the greatest publication house in the world.

Having come through news print trials very similar to those now faced by American publishers, Mr. Smith's observations no doubt will receive serious consideration. In discussing news print conservation he said:

"I read that there is a shortage of paper in America which is likely to become acute as time goes on. In view of the large number of pages which the American newspapers print daily I understand there is some difficulty in coping with the matter. We have experienced similar crises in England but have always met them without much trouble.

"English papers are much smaller in size, they have all a standard beyond which they do not go very far. The standard of the Daily Mail, for instance, is 12 pages, with a maximum of 16 pages. A shortage of paper is dealt with by drastically reducing the standard size, usually in agreement with competitors, but failing an agreement, each paper deals with the matter in accordance with the amount of paper in sight.

"Paper being the raw material of this great industry it entirely governs the situation, and neither the requirements of the advertiser or any other class is allowed to affect it. When the paper is cut the advertising space is cut proportionately.

"The advertisement rates are governed by the laws of supply and demand in connection with circulation and "pulling" power, and the rate once fixed is in most newspaper offices applied to every class of advertisers.

"It is the aim of every advertisement manager to sell his available space well in advance. He is enabled to do this because he knows exactly how much space he has to sell. It is very unusual for a newspaper in Britain to add indefinitely to the size according to the demand of the advertiser.

"The existing system of working has the good effect of encouraging the advertiser as well as the advertisement manager of the paper to make his arrangements well in advance. One result is great saving in the staff of solicitors.

"I have no very close acquaintance with the American press but it looks to me as if it is suffering from its own enterprise.

"The situation appears to be that it has created an immense demand for advertising space, some of which they will be unable to supply, and a drastic temporary cutting down seems to be the only solution until the production of paper is increased. The cutting down in Britain has resulted in less advertising space and a higher advertising rate."

In answer to an inquiry as to Lord Northcliffe's health, Mr. Smith said that his chief had quite recovered from the effects of his recent operation, and told a little story concerning him which we think may be of interest to the many thousands in this country who are acquainted with Northcliffe.

"When war broke out," said Mr. Smith, "there was a meeting of some of the directors of one of Northcliffe's companies to see what economies could be made. A day or two later Lord Northcliffe sent for me and said, 'I hear that there is some talk of reducing staff —well,' said Northcliffe, 'No man can foresee what we will have to do but you can take it from me that if a reduction of staff is absolutely necessary the directors will go first.' The staff was not reduced."

Mr. Smith talked about many other things as they relate to newspapers, but through it all he left the impression that he was a thorough newspaper man who had two things—circulation and advertising—for which he expected pay in full, with never a thought of the greater number of inches of display that his competitor carried today—his concentration being on his own reading public and his balance sheet at the end of the year.

The New Spirit

News print is selling for 6 cents delivered, in England, according to Mr. Smith, against 4½ cents f.o.b. mill here. He says that the news print shortage is undoubtedly preventing the developing of much new advertising that is now being offered over there.

When asked if he noticed any change in America since his last visit eleven years ago, Mr. Smith replied:

"Yes, a mighty change. I find a new spirit of friendliness. Even the men that I meet casually, on the streets and in trains, when they discover that I am an Englishman, seem to go out of their way to show me that they are glad that I am here. It's a wonderful thing—this new touch."

S. N. P. A. URGES 10 PER CENT. REDUCTION AT EXTRAORDINARY MEETING

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Nov. 25.

A REDUCTION of at least 10 per cent. in the use of print paper during the remainder of 1919 and through 1920 was urged upon all newspapers of the South in the following resolutions unanimously adopted at the special session of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association here today:

"Whereas, members of the S. N. P. A. having met in extraordinary session to consider the report of its committee on the shortage of news print paper—a shortage which menacingly and imminently threatens the life of some Southern newspapers and which vitally affects the publication of every newspaper in America, finding:

"That news print paper is used largely in excess of production; that the reserve supply has diminished below the acute danger level; that no sizable increase in production upon a commercial basis is less than from one to two years in possible; that the price of news print paper since the pre-war period has advanced from about 105 per cent. to about 400 per cent.; that publishers of newspapers in their zeal to issue their newspapers regularly in such size as lavishly to print the news of the world, with comment upon and interpretation of it, and also to publish instructive and entertaining matter dealing with every human interest, have brought about an auction market for news print paper which has carried its priee above the level of sanity, do therefore:

"Resolved, that the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, in special convention assembled, urges its membership to make an earnest effort to reduce news print consumption, beginning at once and continuing through 1920, at a rate of at least 10 per cent. as compared with the consumption for July, August, September and October of this year. The association earnestly recommends that all of the publishers of the South in each competitive area co-operate to the fullest possible extent to the end that every practical method of conservation of news print and all other papers made from wood pulp may be employed.

"The association recognizes the fact that the necessary conservation cannot be accomplished except by the reduction of the size of newspapers or a reduction of circulation. The association recommends that conservation be accomplished chiefly by a reduction in the number of pages printed, the number of editions issued, the size of type, the space of news heads, space for illustrations, space for advertising and pyramiding advertising and in advertising rates and an increase in subscription rates with a view of covering the increased costs of white paper and the cost of delivery to the subscriber.

"The association urges immediate co-operation in each competitive area in support of all the efforts made by the committees on conservation and conciliation, representing the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and this association. The conservation and conciliation committee of this association is hereby directed to prepare a form of report to be sent by the secretary's office to all of the members of this association on which they are requested to report weekly the efforts for conservation and the actual results achieved, a summary of these reports to be printed in the association's bulletins."

SOUTHERN PUBLISHERS AGREE TO SAVE 10% IN NEWS PRINT DURING 1920

Seventy-five Leading Newspaper Men Attend Special Convention of S. N. P. A. in Birmingham---Sweeping Cuts in Every Department Recommended in Resolution Unanimously Adopted

(STAFF CORRESPONDENCE)
(BY TELEGRAPH)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 25.

AFTER agreeing to a cut of 10 per cent in news print paper to be used during 1920, based on the average consumption of 1919, and after providing through resolutions adopted the method by which this reduction could be most effectively made, the extraordinary session of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association adjourned this afternoon, after having been in session at the Tutwiler since Monday morning.

Seventy-five of the leading Southern publishers attended the conference, which was spirited and marked by earnest enthusiasm throughout. The publishers in attendance represented the entire South from northern Virginia to western Texas.

Must Conserve

Facing the paper shortage unequivocally, the convention declared that reduction of consumption must be made. As the concluding act just before adjournment this afternoon the session adopted a resolution which every newspaper in the South was requested to publish conspicuously on page one.

The resolution is printed on Page 5 of Editor & Publisher.

To reduce the consumption 10 per cent, these things were declared necessary:

Cut down the size of type,

Reduce reading matter and illustrations.

Decrease advertising space by pyramiding advertising and increasing advertising rates, and

Increase subscription rates to cover the cost of paper and delivery to subscribers.

The resolutions were passed without a dissenting vote.

Sweeping cuts in every line were recommended by the publishers.

Suppression of all propaganda and everything that smacks of "free publicity" was enthusiastically agreed upon.

The convention was called to order Monday morning by James H. Allison of the Fort Worth Record, president. He declared that the meeting had been called to overcome present conditions and urged every man to get down to business and enter into a spirit of helpful cooperation with his neighbor.

President of A. N. P. A. Present

Frank P. Glass of the Birmingham News, president of the A. N. P. A., was called upon for a statement of conditions as he found them. Mr. Glass said that the report of Chairman Stewart of the news print committee on conditions and suggestions for their remedy was correct and heartily endorsed by him.

The total increase of production for next year, according to the manufacturers, would be 70,000 tons, Mr. Glass said, and this increase would not come until mid-summer. The time required for mill construction and the high cost of machinery, coupled with its limited manufacture, will work against any permanent relief from increased production, he continued.

Conservative manufacturers are not planning any extensive increase in production because they fear for future markets, Mr. Glass said. These manufacturers are attempting to supply their customers notwithstanding opportunities to sell on the open market at tremendous prices.

The only remedy lies in the hands of the publishers who have increased consumption. The remedy is decreased consumption.

Mr. Glass told of an interview with an English publisher, who said that the American publishers had to look into the future in meeting with the present crisis.

Rates Too Low

The advertising rates are entirely too low, this publisher said. An increase in rates is the only thing that will remedy conditions.

"Gentlemen, we are selling our advertising entirely too low," said Mr. Glass. "We hold our papers too cheaply. Some papers have already increased their rates 50 per cent without any difficulty."

He told of how the Chicago Daily News, one of the greatest daily advertising mediums in the world, has set an absolute limit to the size of its paper, in one issue not more than 70 columns of advertising matter was eliminated. The Chicago News has increased its rates. The New York Times is doing very much the same thing.

Cutting down the size of the paper, reducing the display advertising space and increasing the rates, is the only solution for the problem of how to reduce consumption, the speaker said.

"Increase your income by advertising; increase your income by circulation, and then hold down the aggregate number of pages printed," urged Mr. Glass in conclusion.

J. M. Marshall of the Great Northern Paper Company was called upon for a statement of conditions. He said that his company was selling 100 per cent of its product. The temporary increase in supply which has been brought about by the greater output was possible only through using machines that were adapted for other paper. This shifting of machines brought about an increase of overhead, and the consequent high prices, Mr. Marshall said:

Great Northern Policy

The speaker continued that publishers were selling too much advertising space for the amount of paper being manufactured. Even with the increase of tonnage coming in next year unless conservation is practised, papers will be facing the same situation as now within the next ten months, Mr. Marshall said.

The Great Northern Company will not increase its production next year. Increasing the tonnage means much preliminary work, Mr. Marshall explained. Europe will not offer any tonnage relief, because it is a consumer, not a producer. There is a normal growth, Mr. Marshall said, but it will not care for the abnormal increase.

The meeting was harmonious throughout, all publishers agreeing on the gravity of the situation confronting the industry and all entering with a spirit of willingness into any plan which promises relief.

S. N. P. A. CONSERVATORS

THE S. N. P. A. committee on conservation and conciliation has been appointed, as follows:

Buford Goodwin, Atlanta Georgian, cheirman; Colonel Luke Lea, Nashville Tennessean; Marcellus E. Foster, Houston Chronicle; Victor Hanson, Birmingham News; W. A. Elliott, Jacksonville Times-Union.

58% INCREASE MADE IN ADVERTISING

89 Newspapers in 18 Leading Cities of United States Printed 89,750,-804 Lines During Month of October

A gain of almost 58 per cent in advertising was made in October, 1919, over the same month of last year, by 89 daily newspapers in the 18 principal cities of the United States, according to figures just issued by the statistical department of the New York Evening Post.

The total lineage for October, 1919, was 89,750,804, as compared with 57,-032,373 for October, 1918. Only one paper of the 89 figuring in the compilation, showed a loss.

The record by cities follows:

	1919	1918	Gain
New York	13,046,028	10,706,706	4,747,315
Birmingham	2,737,854	2,446,466	1,291,388

A. P. MEMBERS FAVOR HIGHER SALARIES

Central Division Ready to Pay Higher Assessments to Get Best Type of Service Personnel

(BY TELEGRAPH)

DETROIT, Nov. 25.—The central advisory board of the Associated Press, meeting here today, unanimously went on record by resolution as favoring a blanket increase in salaries for correspondents, reporters and telegraph operators. The board, which comprises 25 newspaper publishers of the Central States, will forward its resolution, together with many routine recommendations, which were made here to the board of directors of the Associated Press at its meeting in New York.

Ralph H. Booth, chairman of the central advisory board, presided.

Considerable discussion on answers received from members of the central division of the A. P. regarding the character of service desired by readers. The consensus of opinion was that war news no longer is of any attraction to readers and recommended a minimum of this class of service.

The members from the Central States went on record as favoring increases in assessments "so that the type of reporter correspondent and telegraph operator in the employ of the Associated Press will be as high if not higher than any other news service."

A. N. P. A. ANNOUNCES SIXTEEN ACCEPTANCES OF PLACES ON CONSERVATION BOARD

Committee Now Half Complete—Publishers in Every Part of Country Taking Steps to Reduce News Print Consumption, Both Collectively and Individually—What Cities Are Doing.

INTEREST among publishers throughout the country now centers, naturally, first on the men who will comprise the A. N. P. A. news print committee on co-operation and conservation and secondly on what practical paper saving effects the A. N. P. A. recommendations have had. Half the A. N. P. A. committee has been completed and is printed on this page. This was announced on November 26.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER correspondents have been instructed to report by telegraph every consertaion move in their respective cities and publishers themselves are invited to do likewise.

As far as can be learned there has been no concerted action by publishers in New York, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia on any common methods of saving news print. Each is economizing in his own way.

New York's Record

Figures prepared by R. S. Kellogg of the News Print Service Bureau show that the newspapers in New York are using practically the same amounts of paper that they used during the last week in October. The daily average of pages for the week ending November 21 was: American, 18; Herald, 19; Staats-Zeitung, 16; Sun, 19; Times, 31; Tribune, 22; World, 28; Globe, 22; Evening Journal, 23; Evening Mail, 10; Evening Post, 21; Evening Sun, 29; Evening Telegram, 23; Evening World, 28.

For the week ending October 31, the following averages of pages were noted in EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

American, 19; Herald, 20; Sun, 21; Times, 30; Tribune, 21; World, 27; Globe, 22; Evening Journal, 24, and Evening Post, 21.

New York newspapers report as follows:

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe: "The New York Globe intends to keep within its contract allotment during 1920 as it has done every year since 1916. If every newspaper in the country does the same thing the print paper situation will quickly return to normal."

Recommending Smaller Space

E. S. Friendly, assistant business manager of the New York Times: "Our plans have been fully set forth. We are holding to a 32-page paper and are discouraging large advertisements. We have found it necessary to leave out many columns of advertising matter, as we have announced from day to day, but we hope to overcome this condition in a measure at least by securing the co-operation of our larger advertisers—those who used full pages in the past and to whom we are now recommending half and quarter pages."

Walter G. Bryan, publisher of the New York American: "We are making every possible effort to save news print and to do so have found it necessary to leave out many advertisements daily. We are cutting four pages daily from the morning American and ten pages from the Sunday American."

Howard Davis of the New York Tribune: "We are working on plans for the conservation of news print and will have a statement to make in a short time."

Victor H. Polachek, publisher of the New York Sun and Evening Sun: "We have no announcement to make at this time."

Three Raise Rates

Frank B. Flaherty, general manager of the New York Herald and Telegram: "We are doing everything possible to conserve news print. Advertising rates have been considerably increased, all special features which are not directly concerned with the news of the day have been eliminated, news is being edited closely, and waste of paper eliminated throughout. We are holding down the size of our papers in every way."

J. C. Dayton, publisher of the New York Journal: "We are doing everything that we can to conserve paper. We have increased our advertising rates more than 25 per cent and will not accept more than one page from an advertiser. We are cutting our paper from 4 to 6 pages daily and have left out from 65 to 70 columns of advertising. The average size of our paper, except Friday, is now 24 pages."

J. S. Seymour, publisher of the New York Evening Post: "Following our usual practice we are keeping within our contract tonnage. We have done no buying on the spot market."

George H. Larke, assistant business manager of the New York World: "The World is doing everything in its power to conserve paper. Our advertising rates are raised 'over night' and we have an arbitrary limit on the size of each day's issue, depending upon the supply of paper available. The highest number of pages we run on the Morning World is 32, but we frequently run 28-page papers and sometimes as low as 20 pages. The Evening World fluctuates more than the morning paper, but both are conserving. When we get sufficient advertising to fill the paper laid out for a day, we stop taking business and we run the stated number of pages, regardless of the business on hand."

Reports received from EDITOR & PUBLISHER correspondents from other cities follow:

CHICAGO.—Practically all the Chicago papers have been leaving out columns of display advertising on certain days of the week, usually the Daily News and the Tribune. The Post discriminates in selection of ads it publishes according to priority—i.e., the ads omitted are invariably those which are turned into the office last for each edition.

Other papers—the Tribune notably —are omitting all publishers' advertising and certain other specified kinds. Others follow the "first come, first served" idea in what they publish.

Both the Tribune and the Daily News have cut down the number of their daily classified advertising columns to some extent.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Although the higher circulation rates were scheduled to become operative, both city and country, on December 1, the publishers decided to put the city increase into effect November 17, and things went off without a hitch—as a matter of fact, sales showed a slight increase over Saturday.

On new schedules, the papers here are all endeavoring to run about 50 columns of news daily and not more than 200 columns Sunday, including comics. They have all decided to discontinue the magazine section, as such, until further notice.

On advertising, the publishers are about to go into conference. It is the opinion that the increase will be about 25 per cent all around.

Full details regarding new circulation prices and conditions of distribution for New Orleans newspapers follow:

1. That city carriers, newsdealers and newsboys be charged a flat rate of $1.00 per one hundred for the daily afternoon papers and that the carrier rate for all subscribers to all papers shall be 13 1/3c per week, or .010 per daily issue and .025 for the Sunday.

2. That the daily and Sunday city carrier delivery price for all of the papers is to be 50c per week.

3. That the city retail price to the public for the afternoon newspapers daily is to be 5c, and for the morning paper daily 5c; that the city retail price to the public for all three Sunday papers shall be 5c.

4. That the wholesale rates for the afternoon newspapers to all dealers are to be as follows:

100 papers	$1.00
50 "	.50
25 "	.25
20 "	.20
10 "	.10
5 "	.05

5. That the Sunday wholesale rate for all three papers to all city dealers is to be at the rate of $2.50 per hundred:

100 papers	$2.50
60 "	1.25
25 "	.65
20 "	.50
10 "	.25

ADVERTISERS SET STRONG POLICIES AT CANADIAN CONVENTION

Declare for Smaller Ads and Audited Circulations—Local Chapters Will Be Formed for Monthly Meetings—W. C. Betts New President

TORONTO, Nov. 26.

FROM every standpoint this year's annual convention of the Association of Canadian Advertisers, which was held at the King Edward Hotel here on Thursday and Friday of last week, was the best in the history of the organization. The attendance was very satisfactory, with an excellent representation of members from points outside Toronto. Interest was well maintained throughout the two days. Some very effective business was done and policies were determined upon which will undoubtedly infuse new life and energy into the work of the Association.

Advertisers Demand Audited Circulation

The election of officers for 1919-1920 resulted in the unanimous choice of W. C. Betts, S. Davis & Sons, Ltd., Montreal, as president; D. George Clark, McClary Manufacturing Company, Ltd., London, vice-president; Miss Florence E. Clotworthy, Toronto, secretary, and J. R. Kirkpatrick, E. W. Gillett Company, Ltd., Toronto, treasurer. The new board of directors consists of A. D. Cridland, Canadian Kodak Company, Toronto; E. G. Hogarth, B. S. A., Ford Motor Company of Canada, Windsor; F. W. Hunt, Massey-Harris Company, Toronto; F. W. Stewart, Cluett, Peabody & Co. of Canada, Montreal; W. G. Stewart, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of Canada, Toronto and H. S. Van Seoyoc, Canada Cement Company, Montreal.

Direct-by-Mail Committee Named

The sessions were presided over by W. M. Mackay, Lever Brothers, Ltd., Toronto, president for the past year. These were held both morning and afternoon on the two days of the convention, while on Thursday evening a banquet was held, which was the one social feature of the occasion.

Among the constructive policies adopted was the formation of a Direct-by-Mail Committee which will deal with all questions arising in connection with publicity through the mails. In the United States much of this work is done by the Direct Mail Association, of which Clifford Elvins, a leading member of the A. C. A., is vice-president, but the action of the Association in forming this committee will tend to make the work in Canada a branch of the general activities of the organization.

The question of circulation statements came in for a good deal of discussion and strong ground was taken with respect to the necessity of having regularly audited statements. The Association takes a very decided attitude on this point and strongly endorses audited circulation statements.

Good Circulation and Smaller Ads

Once again the Association went on record as being opposed to the employment of special schemes to secure circulation. It was felt that the circulation so procured was of little value and that advertisers were paying for something that was of no real service.

Another question that took up considerable time was the tendency among advertisers to use big space. The point was raised as to whether the effect of the message was any stronger when it appeared in large space than in smaller space. The conclusion arrived at after some discussion was that the smaller-spaced ad could be made quite as effective, though something of its value would depend on its position in the page. Objectionable advertising came in for attention. On this point the decision of the meeting was that members should continue to insist on having their advertising appear on a page apart from that to which objection was taken.

With respect to outdoor advertising, the meeting made a protest against the unfair way that prices were being boosted through the hoarding charge being placed on so-called special boards.

Local Chapters Will Be Formed

The Association decided upon the formation of local chapters as a nucleus for holding monthly meetings. These will be arranged wherever there are a sufficient number of members to justify their being called. In addition a semi-annual meeting of the whole Association will hereafter be held midway between the annual meetings.

The close relations existing between the A. C. A. and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association will be made still closer through the formation of a special committee of the A. C. A. to cooperate with the C. M. A. in all matters pertaining to marketing and advertising. Three members were appointed to this committee with power to add to their number. Hitherto the two bodies have been co-operating in the matter of questionable mediums, the A. C. A. advising in the case of all advertising propositions of a doubtful nature coming before the manufacturers. The creation of the new committee will tend to prevent duplication in this and other directions.

Lloyd Harris Guest of Honor

At the banquet on Thursday evening the guest of honor was Lloyd Harris, chairman of the Canadian Trade Commission in London, England. Mr. Harris dealt exhaustively with the work of the Commission and pointed out that the thing which had impressed him most since he went to London was the discovery of the tremendous possibilities of inter-colony trade within the British Empire.

After France and Belgium had appeared to offer the better prospects but the desperate state of the finances of these countries did not present favorable opportunities for trade expansion. The countries of the British Empire on the other hand presented a wonderful and varied market.

The first task of the Trade Mission was to secure the removal of all restrictions on trading in Empire goods. This was successfully accomplished, opening up vast markets within the Empire. The exploits of Canada's soldiers had given the country a reputation and it remained to be seen whether the Dominion would live up to it in the realms of industry and trade.

Other speakers at the banquet included H. Macdonald, secretary of the Ontario Division of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, who told something of the work of that organization in furthering the interests of Canadian industry; W. J. Taylor, president of the Canadian Press Association, who brought greetings from his organization, and J. J. Gibbons, representing the Canadian Association of Advertising Agents.

PAPER MILL BOUGHT BY COAST NEWSPAPERS

Hawley Pulp & Paper Company Plant Purchased for $3,500,000—Expected to Double Monthly Capacity

PORTLAND, ORE., Nov. 25.—A majority of stock in the Hawley Pulp & Paper Company, whose large manufacturing plant is located at Oregon City, has just been purchased by a syndicate of Pacific Coast newspapers for approximately $3,500,000.

The capital stock of the company is $800,000, and it is reliably stated that each share has sold for $440. The owners were W. P. Hawley, W. P. Hawley, Jr., and the estate of Theodore B. Wilcox.

The plant at Oregon City has a monthly capacity of about 300 tons of printstock paper. By installation of new equipment the buying syndicate expects to double this capacity in the near future.

Recently the Hawley company built and opened a large concrete addition to the plant on the east bank of the Willamette, near the Oregon City Falls, where the mill gets its power. The annex is said to contain some of the largest and most modern machines in the world for the manufacture of news stock.

Rumors of the purchase of the Hawley mill by a group of Oriental capitalists have been in circulation for some time. It also was rumored that the Crown-Willamette Paper Company, with a large plant at the same location, had taken over the Hawley property.

BRIDGEPORT POST MOVES

Three Papers Now Housed in Modern New Structure

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Nov. 25.—With the completion of its new three-story building at 140 Middle street, the Post Publishing Company has moved from the old Cannon street address, and the Telegram (morning), the Post (evening) and the Sunday Post are now published from the new home. The building is of brick, steel and reinforced concrete.

Circulation, business and advertising departments are housed on the main floor; editorial rooms are on the second and cartoonists' and photographers' departments on the third. Mechanical departments, the composing room and press rooms are in the old two-story building in which the Standard-American was formerly printed.

Emergency Paper in St. Paul

ST. PAUL, MINN., Nov. 24.—The Daily News has been compelled to import print from British Columbia. It has received a trainload from Powell River, B. C., at an expense of about $75,000. The shipment will last the News and its associated Minneapolis and Omaha namesakes only a few days.

PRESS GALLERIES BAN PUBLICITY MEN

New Rules Bar Holders of Both Newspaper and Political Positions, If Pay for Latter Exceeds Regular Salary.

BY ROBERT T. BARRY
(STAFF CORRESPONDENT)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 26.—Political press agents who hold membership in the press galleries of Congress simply to retain standing as correspondents while their chief occupation and source of income is that of propagandists for political organizations have come under the ban, at last.

When EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Washington correspondent made an issue of this matter about a year ago he was regarded as a "radical" desirous of setting aside established traditions of the Press Gallery, when there was no proper occasion for so doing.

Reform Effected Quietly Now

Yet the matter which was held as something akin to "bolshevism" a few months ago now is accepted without so much as a healthy row in the gallery, and a ruling is quietly placed upon the bulletin boards, carrying the following legend:

"Resolved, That it be the sense of the Standing Committee of Correspondents that:

"First. Members of the gallery who accept employment with political committees, which in the matter of emolument exceeds in amount their compensation from their newspapers, shall withdraw from membership in the galleries until such political employment is at an end.

"Second. Where the political employment is merely a temporary side issue, the pay or salary not exceeding the salary earned in newspaper work, withdrawal from the galleries is not deemed necessary.

"Third. Where the political employment in question is that of publicity agent, even though not well enough paid to require withdrawal from the galleries, the name of the correspondent thus employed shall be posted on the bulletin boards of the galleries together with an explanation of the character of the work by him performed and for whom performed."

A special election will be held on December 1 to select a successor to the late Ben F. Allen on the standing committee.

DELEGATES APPORTIONED

Empire Press Representation for 1920 Conference in Canada

OTTAWA, ONT., Nov. 25.—Word has been received here that the Empire Press meeting, originally held, when that representation at the Press Conference to be held in Canada next year should be divided as follows: Australia, 14 delegates; New Zealand, 5; South Africa, 9; India, 6.

The proposed representation for Great Britain is: Northern newspapers, 8; Southern, 4; Irish, 4; Scottish, 6; and one each from the Institute of Journalists and the National Union of Journalists.

Launch Succeeds Borglum

OMAHA, NEB., Nov. 24.—Arnold Borglum has resigned as manager of the Darlow Advertising Company, Omaha, and has been succeeded by M. O. Launch.

SELECTING THE SALESMAN TO SELL CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING SPACE SUCCESSFULLY

Managers Answer Questions on Whether Employes Should Be Old or Young, Experienced or Inexperienced

ONE of the most important duties of classified managers is to employ classified salesmen. Good classified salesmen are hard to select. Some applicants for positions have all the earmarks of being super salesmen, but when put to the test absolutely fail.

One of the best classified salesmen I ever came in contact with was a man who could never have secured a position on his appearance or use of the English language. In spite of his dress and broken accent he was a wonderful producer.

It is evident, therefore, that no law can be established by which classified salesmen may be successfully selected. The following experiences of a few classified managers, however, show how some have answered the questions as to whether it is better to employ experienced or inexperienced men—whether old or young men are more efficient.

Favors Young Men

H. G. Barringer, classified manager of the Indianapolis News, expresses his opinion in favor of young men as follows:

"The classified salesman necessarily has a greater number of accounts to see regularly than a display solicitor. Therefore a classified solicitor's success, after he has gained a knowledge of classified, depends largely on his ability to call on a large number of accounts, get their attention and business quickly, and make ready for the next call. The younger man with the proper qualifications will make a better classified solicitor than the older man. By young man, I have in mind ages ranging from twenty-two to thirty years. They need not be experienced in advertising work, but it is a point in their favor if the candidate has had some business experience—preferably in selling.

"He must be fairly well educated—generally nothing less than a high school education. It is very essential that he have a neat appearance, a pleasing personality, an excellent imagination, and a willingness to learn.

"The young man possessing the above qualifications is made still more desirable if he has certain obligations which tend to make him more settled and to force him to look at life in a serious manner. Young men who are not entirely or in any way dependent on their own efforts for a livlihood are generally less consistent.

Likes Experienced Men

"In my mind the classified manager has a better success with an inexperienced advertising man than with an experienced one. The reason for this can be easily seen when you consider that the majority of newspapers are not employing the proper methods in developing the classified sections—therefore the solicitor working on a classified section not being developed in the proper way, gets the wrong impression of what this class of advertising is and I find it takes more effort to destroy wrong impressions than to teach new ones."

The experienced classified salesman is the choice of Harry Gwaltney, classified manager of the Milwaukee Journal. He says:

"I prefer young men of 19 to 25 years of age, experienced either in the business of selling or who know something of advertising. I would give preference to a successful classified salesman over others if I knew him to be such. I would prefer the man who had been successful in other lines than to the half successful classified salesman. Some young men come out of high school and can successfully sell classified advertising. I would make no distinction between married and single men. I have both on my force. I have had married men who were loafers regardless of the fact that they had a family to support, and I have single men on my force who work as hard as any married man can work. In my opinion, anyone who has reached his 20th year—who has a fair education—who has sales talent—a reasonable amount of personality—some tact, and a little common sense backed up with lots of energy and sincerity, will make good in selling."

On the other hand R. W. Andrews, classified manager of the Syracuse Post Standard, has the most success with inexperienced men. In a recent letter he writes:

"The young man who has a fair education, initiative and determination to succeed is the man who makes the best classified advertising salesman.

"Classified advertising is a business in itself and in order to promote new business of this kind, must be sold by the best kind of salesman. I believe that you will agree with me in saying that it is harder to interest business firms in classified advertising than it is in display.

"I believe that if the right kind of a young man is obtained, it would be best to employ an inexperienced person and develop his selling ability along lines which would be most profitable for the employer."

E. A. Vincent, classified manager of the Minneapolis Journal, not only prefers inexperienced men but finds young men better than older ones. He says:

"It has been our experience that young men just out of school or with one or two years of office training give us the best service. By taking them green we train them along our own lines and thus avoid the experienced salesmen with bad selling habits that are hard to break. We get grow up with us to become a valuable asset to our organization.

"As a rule if you take on an experienced man or an older man they only stay for a short while and you have another man to break in, with the resultant loss of time and business.

"The above views apply, of course, to an established classified medium where service to the advertiser together with sales ability is necessary. In other words we need a man who 'wears well' in addition to being a salesman."

Older men, however, are the rule on the Detroit News, where W. W. Murdock, the classified manager, has built up a strong selling organization. His opinion is as follows:

"In my experience I have always

MAINTAININC INTEREST IN WANT ADS

BY LEE SMITH

Classified Manager, Omaha Daily Bee

SINCE the discovery of the interest aroused by the publication of items headed "Wanted" and the necessity of arranging them in different classes, to enable the reader to find with ease that which he sought, the paramount problem has been the securing of sufficient individual new wants each day to draw reader attention.

The Want Ad reader has been educated to go directly to the classification containing the information he wishes. This with the reader has become a habit and the psychology of habit must be recognized by any advertiser who would get maximum results.

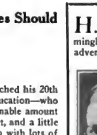
Mr. Stranger has just arrived in a city to make his future home. His first thought is to get his family in a new house. Habit forces him to purchase a newspaper for its Want Ads.

But it happens that he has picked a small issue for home advertising, so he reaches the conclusion that either there are no homes for sale or that the particular paper he bought is not much of a medium—both erroneous conclusions, but nevertheless disastrous to the real estate advertisers as well as the newspaper.

Considering this from the advertiser's point of view, his failure to maintain a continuous ad has cost him the chances of a sale. He would not have had to advertise a long list of homes, but he should have had some mention of the fact that his business was placing Mr. Strangers in new homes. Three purposes would have been served. Mr. Stranger would have had a home, the real estate man would have made a sale and the paper would have added to its prestige.

Everyday advertising solves the problem. Classified advertising contracts are as numerous and varied as the publications back of them, but it is generally admitted that the local business building result getting contract is the one which induces the advertiser to use the Want Ad column daily.

Owing to a universal preference on the part of advertisers for Sunday papers in particular and for the midweek or Friday issues, many increase the size of their copy on those days. This increase is made to include a wider range of offerings or a more detailed description of some specific offering.



However, to insure reaching the reader, who does not realize that some days are busier than others in Want Ads Wants Ads only when a want presents itself, it is necessary to have some copy in every issue. It is absolutely impossible for an advertiser to pick out the day when a reader is going to want what he has to offer.

The proper way for the professional advertisers to maintain maximum results from classified is through running new copy persistently and to add variety by changing copy daily and using different amounts of space.

This will not only gain the advertiser the advantage of larger copy on the preferred days but will break the monotony of the standing advertisement. Much of the power of the Want Ads is lost by advertisers using mere announcements and allowing them to run week after week. The persistent Want Ad reader becomes so accustomed to seeing it that its power is lost.

No contract could be so arranged that it could be universally adopted, but the basic underlying principle of successful classified mediums makes the use of some sort of copy each day an obligation on the part of the contract advertiser and in addition to giving him the best results, gives the paper a foundation on which to build voluntary advertising.

H. I. PARISH, manager of classified advertising of the Birmingham News, started his classified advertising career on the Atlanta Journal in the year 1911, where he worked as inside clerk. From there he went to the Macon (Ga.) News as manager of classified advertising, where he remained for one year when he was offered the same position on the Houston Post.

H. I. Parish

The Atlanta Georgian employed him after about 15 months' service on the Post, from which paper he went to the Greensboro (N. C.) Record as manager of display advertising.

He couldn't be happy out of classified, so when the Birmingham News tendered him a proposition in September, 1918, he accepted, and has made a great record as classified advertising manager of that paper, increasing the "Want Ad" space more than 100 per cent., and the counter ads about 165 per cent.

MEN WHO SPEND $100,000,000 IN ADVERTISING TO CONFER

Annual Convention of Association of National Advertisers in Lakewood, Next Week, Will Be Marked By Several Innovations

THE annual meeting of the Association of National Advertisers, to be held at Lakewood, N. J., December 4, 5 and 6, promises to be the most important ever held by the organization. Although no formal program will be announced in advance, it is certain that the many perplexing and knotty problems that are facing American business today will be thoroughly discussed and plans laid for meeting those of the present and the future. Members of the A. N. A. spend practically $100,000,000 a year in national advertising.

The only outside speaker who, it is definitely known, will address the meeting, is Stanley Clague, managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, who will present an exhibit of an A. B. C. auditor's working papers so that A. N. A. members may visualize the entire auditing procedure.

Will Visualize Auditing of Circulation

To Editor & Publisher, Secretary John Sullivan of the A. N. P. A. said:

"Yes, we have a program, but we are not telling—yet. The only thing we can say at present is that we will work from 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. each day, including the lunch hour. No difficulty about that, because we have been doing the same for nearly ten years and have formed the habit. If we didn't keep A. N. A. men working all the time at annual and semi-annual meetings, they would kick and ask why they had been lured from their offices.

Practice of Advertising and Selling

"This annual meeting program will be like every other program we ever have had,—it will have to do with the practice of advertising and selling. It will enable us to make ourselves better fitted to serve our companies in marketing their products.

"We are not very likely to discuss portentously measures designed to reform overnight a wicked and frolicsome old world. Rather are we concerned about reforming ourselves—making ourselves fitter for our jobs.

"Probably unrest and uncertainty and the many evils from which we are told the world is suffering would be ended or cured immediately if the general slogan were, One man—one Reform, instead of looking so everlastingly outside ourselves for salvation.

"When all the work is done, we expect to play, that is, on Saturday, the three days, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, December 3, 4 and 5, will be given up entirely to business. On Saturday morning we will play golf and indulge in trapshooting, which is the kind of thing that many of us would do at home.

From Labor to Refreshment

"But—Labor first; then refreshment.

"This annual meeting will be distinguished by an innovation in the shape of a newspaper published daily throughout the meeting. There will also be a preliminary issue in which will be announced the general details. The daily issues will either be handed each man as he enters the breakfast room of placed on the tables.

"Each issue will contain information as to the current day's sessions, with notes concerning the previous day's meetings. And there will, without doubt, be a good deal of facetiousness introduced by the large staff of editors and contributors.

"This will be the first occasion of using this method to promote and further general meeting. It will have the advantage of novelty, and it will, incidentally, save a good deal of other printing and a fair amount of multigraphing."

The retiring officers of the Association of National Advertisers are:

retail each of the three daily papers at 6c each and each of the Sunday papers at 5c.

COUNTRY

7. That the delivery price for all papers outside of the City of New Orleans is to be 50c per week, that the individual retail price of all papers to the public outside of the City of New Orleans is to be 5c daily and 7c Sunday.

8. That the wholesale country rate for all three papers in agents and dealers is to be 40c daily and 35c Sunday.

9. That the price to the railroad news companies, including their city stands and newsboys, shall be 2½c daily (retail price 5c); and 3½c Sunday (retail price 7c).

10. That the rates of the Sunday papers shall be:

One year, daily and Sunday	$12.00
6 months, daily and Sunday	6.00
3 months, daily and Sunday	3.00
1 month, daily and Sunday	1.00
One year, Sunday only	3.50
6 months, Sunday only	1.75
3 months, Sunday only	.90
6 months, daily only	4.75
3 months, daily only	2.50
1 month, daily only	.85

GENERAL

11. That the commissions allowed postmasters be 15 per cent.

12. That all commissions and allowances of any and all kinds of newsboys, dealers and carriers in the City of New Orleans be 25 per cent, excepting salaries or commissions, or both, paid to the managers of the regular divisions of the newspapers. It is left to the Circulation Managers to define what is a salesman, but if they fail to agree the matter is to be left to the decision of the Publishers Association.

13. That the practice of accepting returns be abolished absolutely. It is recognized as a matter of practical operation that a little latitude is to be given to circulation managers of all papers. In case of their disagreement the matter is to be referred to the arbitrator to the Publishers' Association.

14. That in the country all salaries and allowances of all kinds, or compensations paid, of any kind whatsoever, be discontinued.

15. That the railway news companies be allowed no returns, effective thirty days from the time this agreement becomes operative.

16. That this arrangement become effective on Sunday, December 5th, 1920, both in the City of New Orleans and adjacent territory.

17. That in maintaining this plan all circulation contests and the offering of all premiums, prizes, theatre tickets, gifts and compensations of all kinds between the offices and the carriers, agents, newsboys or dealers, are prohibited; excepting such money or goods as may, hereinafter, be paid by the delivery of papers to office subscribers, and excepting such minor premiums involved in the transportation problems of the various papers.

18. That the use of office motor trucks, or other vehicles, at the hire of the same for the transportation of newsboys, carriers or agents, be, for the pleasure purpose whatsoever shall be discontinued.

19. That the newspapers will be allowed the use of outside men for canvassing, stops and complaints.

20. That all free distribution of newspapers, by samples or otherwise, excepting those given to legitimate regular advertisers as proof of publication of their copy, shall be absolutely tinued; and that the sale of papers in bulk, at less than the points where the papers maintain agents, shall be discontinued after January 1st, 1921.

21. That for a period of ten days from the date that this arrangement becomes operative, the circulation representatives of each of the newspapers representing the Bulk Association shall meet every day at ten o'clock in the morning in order to note such matters as may result from the putting of this agreement into execution.

22. That losses of circulation by any paper resulting from this arrangement shall not be made the basis of advertising solicitation by the directors and officers of both of the other papers in this field, and that notice to this effect shall be communicated to the advertising department by each paper; and violation of this clause shall be called to the attention of the Bulk Association for such disciplinary action against the offender as they may determine.

23. That all exceptions are to be made by the Bulk Association as to the circulation departments, in writing, and are to be based upon the theory that in the enforcement no paper desires to impose hardships upon the other papers by the extent of asking them to handle any important situation in the way that would put them unnecessarily out of business, but he does any paper party to this plan desire or seek to achieve any advantage over either of its contemporaries in keeping the letter, as well as the spirit of this agreement.

24. That this arrangement shall remain in full force and effect for one year from December 1st, 1916, and that it may be amended from time to time by a two-thirds vote of the publishers at meetings called for that purpose.

The papers co-operating are the Daily States, the Times-Picayune and the Item.

DETROIT.—The Daily News, Journal, Free Press and Times are down to a new low record in the space they become smaller. The Sunday News and Free Press officials are conferring on the size of the Sunday edition, which is already down to about 120 pages. Advertising rate increases of almost 25 per cent. are under consideration. All are turning down quantities of advertising.

Herbert Ponting, business manager of the News, says:

We are leaving out large volumes of advertising four days a week, having determined not to exceed an average of forty pages on week days. The News plans quite drastic curtailment in the size of its Sunday edition. We have squeezed and we are going to squeeze more. We are going to take action because we believe it is the duty of every publisher of the country to cut down the use of newsprint for the benefit of the smaller publisher. Although the News has under contract sufficient tonnage of news print to meet full requirements, we shall not follow this action.

Our advances in advertising rates averaged about 20 per cent. Our new classified rates are fixed competitive conditions make a change of the subscription rates impossible, although the news is at present the only paper which has failed to raise its rate. The News aims to maintain an average of not to exceed 70 columns a day of editorial matter on week days, regardless of advertising; although the size of the paper varies from 24 to 44 pages 8 columns to the page.

James Schermerhorn, publisher Detroit Times, said:

The increase in the price of the Detroit Times was advanced to three cents and the current year made more than any other Detroit paper. We did not change the advertising line rate, because we felt that in the end in circulation, which resulted from the higher subscription rate, we were practically raising our line rate, as compared in one line rate with any other paper in the state holding down to two cents. In the past 10 months we have added 16 pages in six months. A small sized paper would cost us $1,000 per week working on a 50-50 basis with our publishers.

The Free Press averaged 61.7 per cent. advertising during October and the Journal is holding down still tighter.

All approach the subscription question with doubt. It is expected that the Journal, News and Free Press will continue at two cents for some months, possibly going to three cents when the condition of the 1920 newsprint market asserts itself. An increase in the Sunday price of the News and Free Press, now eight cents, is being considered.

WASHINGTON.—Publishers here are working upon a basis of agreement to conserve news print. Fleming Newbold of the Star is the moving spirit in the effort to bring this about, his proposal following very largely the lines urged by the War Industries Board, the regulations of which he had a large part in framing.

Two of the Washington papers, the Star and Herald, have kept within the limitations of the War Industries Board requirements since that organization disbanded, after having requested publishers to continue observance of the conservation rules.

In any agreement for curtailment, Mr. Newbold believes the papers which have observed those rules should have equities. He proposes that the Star, Post and Times shall agree to a horizontal cut in the size of the daily paper and that all shall agree not only to decline new advertising but to endeavor to have advertisers use less space. Only in this way can a proper competitive basis be maintained, he contends, because otherwise it simply would be transfering advertising from one medium to another and no good would be done.

Mr. Newbold has been in frequent communication with other members of the paper committee of the A. N. P. A. One of the results has been an agreement to again start campaigns for school children to collect old newspapers. Mr. Newbold is of the belief that the news print situation is tending toward the point where a national paper administrator may be necessary unless the publishers take hold of the problem with a proper realization of its gravity.

Arthur B. Marks, business manager of the Washington Post, discussing the situation and the steps taken by that publication said:

"The Post realized the difficulties now besetting publishers. We have tried to keep a little ahead of the other fellows, so during the war we advanced subscription rates and have just issued a new advertising rate card. I believe that the publishers will have to pay a higher rate and when our current contracts expire the result will be almost as much as 50 per cent.

"My idea about this necessary conservation program is that it is up to the New York dailies to take the lead. Then the inevitable curtailment papers everywhere will follow them, but so long as the publishers of the big luxury papers as at present, publishers in other cities are likely to follow suit, are not very likely to reject advertising."

HARTFORD, CONN.—The only definite action so far decided upon by Hartford publishers to meet the newsprint shortage is the increase in rates by the Times of one cent a line to take effect January 1.

The Courant has not yet decided to take similar action although something of the sort may be done shortly.

All papers here declare they are running close to the schedule of the War Industries Board and do not see the need of further cutting although they are not soliciting or accepting advertising as they normally would. The prevailing opinion here that the large city publishers have not taken the lead in conservation of newsprint and the small city papers ought not to be expected to lead the way.

—trend

There is a definite tendency among the most prominent advertising agencies and advertisers to recognize newspapers as predominant advertising mediums.

More companies are coming to appreciate the logic of confining advertising to channels of distribution, of creating a demand where the consumer can buy the goods and where the manufacturer can sell them at a profit.

The method of trying to strong-arm the trade with an advertising campaign in national mediums "reaching millions of people" is losing vogue. The jobber and the retailer are learning that the only part of this tremendous advertising program they are interested in is their own local relatively small territory.

Following the trend of right advertising.

CURTIS SEES NO END OF BIG ADVERTISING

Philadelphia Publisher Declares That His Publications Are Going to Require Whole Paper Mill to Supply Them

At the 164th dinner of the Sphinx Club of New York, held at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday evening, the guest of honor, Cyrus H. K. Curtis of Philadelphia, delivered a message that was both encouraging and helpful. His talk was built upon a series of questions, propounded by Chairman George Ethridge calculated to throw light upon advertising of the present day and its future possibilities.

As evidence of his belief in the future, Mr. Curtis recited an experience he had in arranging for his 1920 stock of paper through the mills that have supplied him for many years.

$20,000,000 Paper in 1920

"We expect to use about $20,000,000 worth of paper next year and it is going to require the building of a new mill by the plant now taking care of us," he said. "I insisted upon this program because I can plainly see the possibility of a 3,000,000 circulation for the Post not so very far in the future, and a corresponding increase in the sale of my other publications."

Mr. Curtis believed that increased advertising was sure to follow the activities of our producers in marketing their products at home and abroad and in getting ready for this result more and more advertising will be required. On the other hand, he advocated more serious thought in the preparation of copy and, if need be, curtailment of space to insure room for all and conservation of paper stocks.

The story he told of his career was intimate and interesting. Labor difficulties he disposed of by saying he believed he had the same success as others who cultivated the good will of their employees, took interest in the workers' affairs and mixed and counselled with them at every opportunity.

42 Cents' Worth for 5 Cents

How he succeeded in getting a circulation of millions was practically answered in his description of the character and worth of the material put into the publications, the service and the value of the product. "A paper sold to the public at 5 cents representing a cost of 42 cents was a practical illustration—the public was naturally getting big value for the price paid, the advertisers got value in the circulation and seemed to be willing to provide the difference in cost."

Irvin Cobb expressed astonishment at the news that Ellis Island, instead of being a sieve through which men capable of being good Americans got into the country, was in reality a chute through which undesirables were shot into the United States.

James Montgomery Flagg read a burlesque on how a modern moving picture producer might film a story of Adam and Eve.

PRINTING TIE-UP ENDS IN NEW YORK

Compositors Comply With I. T. U. Order to Return to Work end Pressmen Follow, Ending 2-Month Trouble

The printing tie-up that has existed in New York since October 24 was broken this week when the union printers and pressmen voted to return to work at $6 weekly increase in pay and to arbitrate their 44-hour week demand.

"Big Six" voted only a week before not to return to work, but a reversal was brought about by a mandate from the executive council of the International Typographical Union based upon the complaint of the employers that the vote to remain out on "vacation" was virtually a vote to strike and was illegal without the sanction of the international officers.

After an all-day session with the officers of the local union on Saturday, the executive council issued a mandate to be presented to the men Sunday. The terms were that they should return to work Monday morning and instruct their officers to arbitrate the forty-four-hour week with the employers. The threat of penalization by the international union was held over their heads if the mandate were not obeyed. The union voted 3 to 1 to obey.

J. W. Hayes, secretary of the International Union, said that he was satisfied with the action of "Big Six." He said the council would endeavor to arrange for a speedy arbitration of the differences between the men and the employers, and that he had received assurances that all the compositors who returned to their shops would be put to work.

Pressmen's Union No. 51 and Feeders' Union No. 23 followed the action of "Big Six" Tuesday by deciding to take out new I. P. P. & A. U. cards and return to work immediately on conditions similar to those accepted by the compositors.

Members of the Printers' League reported Wednesday morning that their men were nearly all back and plants prepared to operate 100 per cent.

It will probably be a long time before printing conditions in New York will be normal again, as many publications moved to other cities during the tie-up and it is doubtful how many will return.

The loss in money to all parties involved in the trouble has been tremendous.

Although the union paper handlers are still technically "out," having taken no official action calling off their strike, the employing printers, report enough men are at work to meet all requirements.

At a meeting of the striking Lithographs and Printing Ink Makers' Union Sunday, President John R. Ritchey reported that John J. Bedlon of the State Industrial Commission had stated that he would try to get an arbitration commission appointed to settle the strike. The 150 members present voted to remain out until the Ink Makers' Association, representing the employers, had recognized the union. Ritchey announced that sixteen of the thirty-five shops in the city had signed with the union.

AD BUREAU TO START IN CHICAGO DEC. 1

Three-Year Lease Closed on Suite in Marquette Building—Manager Will Come From the Middle West

The Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association has closed a three-year lease on suite 841-842 Marquette Building, Chicago, and will open its long-planned Middle Western office about December 1. Director William A. Thomson, who spent the last two weeks in Chicago seeking suitable quarters, will return there about December 1 to man and equip the office, which he expects to have in full operation by January 1.

No manager has been selected as yet, but Mr. Thomson said that a Middle Western man would probably be chosen for the post. After his appointment and until he becomes thoroughly familiar with the work of the bureau, Mr. Thomson and Thomas H. Moore, associate director of the bureau, will alternate between the New York and Chicago offices.

"We have been desirous of opening the Chicago office for the past four years," Mr. Thomson told EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "and it has been made possible by the greater support being accorded the bureau by the newspapers. We now have about 459 members, which is an increase of about 60 per cent over the membership on December 1, 1918.

"Our committee is now working for the establishment of a Pacific Coast office and we will get it under way just as soon as the publishers in that section give us the necessary support.

"Just as soon as we can afford it, the bureau intends to employ a statistician to prepare circulation and advertising data on newspaper advertising and the figures prepared during the past year by EDITOR & PUBLISHER will furnish the basis of his work. The data EDITOR & PUBLISHER has collected and printed form the biggest contribution that has ever been made to the cause of newspaper advertising."

CALLITYPE PROVEN PRACTICAL BY LITERARY DIGEST

Printing Text Matter from Photo-Engravings Was Done First in 1898, But Not Really Developed Until Now

PRINTING from plates has been practised since the discovery of photo-engraving, and away back in their heads thinking publishers have cherished a hope—especially when things are running sidewise with printers—that some day a man would come along and show them how to go to press without setting type. Going to press without typesetting has always been possible, but it has never been considered practical.

It remained for Literary Digest to put the much-thought-over system to the big test. During the seven weeks that the printing trade of New York has been tied up by strikes, lockouts and "vacations," that publication has appeared regularly and has steadily improved in typographical appearance, until now it compares very favorably with any printed-from-type product.

First Time on Such a Large Scale

Never before has a publication of anywhere near the circulation of the Literary Digest attempted to issue even one edition without typesetting, and for that reason alone their efforts have attracted wide attention, not only among the publishers who have been caught in the web of labor difficulties in New York City, but by the public in general.

The first effort on a large scale to show what could be done in the way of issuing a publication without typesetting, of record in the United States, was carried out in Chicago in 1898.

Chicago daily newspapers had just passed through one strike that had tied them up for a week, and the indications were that they might have to face another. The second strike never materialized—it was to have been the printers—nevertheless, Chicago publishers were on the alert and were welcoming any suggestion that would make it unnecessary to again suspend publication. About the same time a newspaper over in Paris was having publishing troubles and had resorted to photo engraving. The work was crude, but the publication was saved. Copies of that paper, Petit Bleue, fell into the hands of the editors of the Chicago Journal. The system being used appealed to them and they decided to give it a trial to show what eventualities might bring forth.

The Journal made the trial in one edition, photo engraving the editorial page from type-written sheets, as is followed today by the Literary Digest. While the experiment was in every way a success, it was not followed up at that time, but it attracted wide attention, and for a time stimulated interest in photoengraving of pages and was responsible for numerous efforts to space typewritten lines to give an even right margin.

Willis Hall Turner was then publisher of the Journal; Peter Finley Dunne (Mr. Dooley), was editor; Richard K. Linthicum, now of the New York World, was managing editor, and Fenton Dowling, now circulation manager of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, was private secretary to Mr. Turner and did the actual work on the page. The contributors to the page were Mr. Dunne, Mr. Linthicum, James O'Donnell Bennett and Grace Duffy Boylen. So far as known that was the first effort to reproduce text matter of a regular American publication from a photo-engraving.

The Literary Digest has made no claim of originality. In fact, it has made no claims of any kind excepting that no great difficulty was being experienced in getting out that publication weekly during one of the most complete tie-ups that the printing trade of New York has ever suffered from.

The Literary Digest, like all other New York publications outside of daily newspapers, was facing suspension when a printer suggested "photo-engraving." It was two days until press time, and no time for debate. His suggestion was accepted and followed. The results are public property. The Literary Digest came out as usual. It looked rather ragged the first week because it was a hurry job. Each week since there has been a marked improvement, and now the Literary Digest, without composition, is pleasing to the eye.

To publishers, probably the most interesting thing about the Literary Digest in its typewriter dress is that fact that it has cost less per page than it did before the strike went into effect. The contract price per page for compo-sion on the Literary Digest was $12, and the cost under the photo-engraving system is $8.

The method used by the Literary Digest in the present emergency should be called callitypy, according to the dictionary, and it means "beautiful type." Many other publications followed the lead of the Digest in meeting the recent printing situation, including Nugent's, Paper Mill and the Long Island City Star. The Los Angeles Times also experimented along this line.

The Literary Digest has met its circulation demands and has brought callitype to a nearly perfect method of printing.

The process through which copy passes on the Digest is interesting. The editor's manuscript is written on a typewriter, equipped with a 10-point type, to a width of 4½ inches. This work is done by a corps of nine to twelve girls. Black paper carbon ribbons are used on the typewriters and produce a clear impression, instead of the blurred appearance which comes from using regular inked ribbon.

To secure the proper alignment at the right hand of the column has only been a question of care. A light blue line drawn on each sheet of copy paper has been the guide of the typists and several times it has been necessary to recopy several times to secure the desired results, although a great deal of this has been overcome during the making of the second copy after errors have been corrected by the editors.

When the typists make their final copy of material it is rolled out of the typewriter into a pan of water without being touched. The typewritten sheets are taken from the water and pasted immediately on sheets of cardboard of uniform size, on which the enlarged size of the page has previously been marked. This holds the ink and gives a clear engraving.

MAKING DISPLAY TYPE HEADLINES BY PHOTOGRAPHY BY THE "DESATYPE"

Probably the most remarkable part of the Digest's work is the setting of the heads and initial letters. This is being done with a new machine known as the Desatype. Instantaneous photography is the principal of this new invention. The Desatype is designed to set large art letter advertisements. In fact, photographic art designing is claimed for it.

In other words, you select the art style of letters that you wish to use and the machine operator then places that style on the machine and by the operation of the keyboard throws each in under the powerful lens until your copy is completed. The prints are dropped automatically into a developing bath that is a part of the machine.

All heads and initial letters used in the Digest for the last five weeks have been made on this machine, which is not yet on the market commercially. This part of the work has been done so well that many persons believed it to be regular art work.

In many cases, after the pasting up of articles has started, it has been found necessary to re-edit and rewrite in order to bring matter within the space allotted for it. When the pages are finally finished, they are sent to the engravers, where the column width is photographically reduced from 4½ to 3½ inches.

The work of getting out the Digest under the new system has fallen largely on the art department, under R. E. Leppert, and the editorial department under William S. Woods, for it must be remembered that aside from the saving of $4 a page on composition there has been no proof reading, which is quite an item on a big magazine.

HOW NEWS PRINT IS BEING CONSERVED

OMAHA, NEB.—The print paper situation is serious with some of the publications here. The World-Herald is paying as high as 8 cents per pound for paper, their contract volume of paper for the year having been already consumed.

One of the big dailies here is so short of paper that the general manager has called a conference of all his advertising men and told them instead of seeking to boost a retailer's advertising space from a proposed 50 inches to 60, he wished if they could diplomatically do so they would drag the advertiser down to 40.

CLEVELAND, O.—To date Cleveland daily newspapers have not cut the size of their papers. No move has been made to increase circulation prices. The Plain Dealer and the News and Press still charge 2 cents a copy for their week-day editions, the Sunday News-Leader and Sunday edition of the Plain Dealer retailing for 7 cents.

The Plain Dealer is "cutting to the bone" its news stories and editors of feature and daily news departments have been instructed to "keep everything down." This applies to real estate, financial, market, and dramatic daily departments and all phases of the Sunday editions. The scarcity of print paper is the cause.

Similar economic measures have been adopted by the editors of the Press and the News and Sunday Leader.

Advertising in all of Cleveland daily newspapers is now running abnormally heavy, particularly in the line of national space-buying. The department stores, retail groceries and piano, player piano and talking machine dealers of liberal buyers of newspaper advertising space, holiday announcements being unusually large.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Local newspapers announce the elimination of special departments such as fraternal, Boy Scout, church news, etc. They formerly devoted a page to each one day a week. This is one means of meeting the print paper situation.

Some advertising rates, such as theatrical, concert and all entertainments, were raised on November 1 and new rate cards on all advertising are about to be issued. There is some talk of raising subscription rates, but little likelihood of any immediate step in this direction. Rochester papers raised from one to two cents per copy only a year ago.

Sizes of all issues have been cut for the last two or three weeks. Rochester publishers are following closely the recommendations of the War Industries Board for guidance for the present readjustment of the ratio of reading matter to advertising space.

The largest afternoon paper cut four pages from its usual Saturday size last week.

DALLAS, TEX.—Newspapers in Texas, alarmed at the increasing shortage of news print paper, are taking drastic measures to conserve the supply. Those in Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and other cities are reducing the number of pages at the expense of reading matter where possible, and some are even rejecting advertising matter to conserve paper.

No recent advances in advertising rates have been announced but it is known that such action is being seriously considered.

The greatest conservation of space to be seen so far is in the reduction or elimination altogether of features, such as comics, cartoons, special articles, household hints, etc. There also has been a very noticeable tightening in the use of news matter. Stories are being cut about one-third and matter is being held to strictly A-1.

While Texas papers have never appeared to adhere to any fixed proportion of news matter and advertising, some had boasted that they were fifty-fifty. In actual practice the ratio ranged from 40 per cent advertising and 60 per cent reading, to 60 per cent advertising and 40 per cent reading.

Under the conservation rules, the average ratio seems to be 33 1/3 reading matter to 66 2/3 advertising. Some papers show 25 per cent reading to 75 per cent advertising.

Special instructions to reporters and news writers say, "Make it brief." Instructions have also been sent to correspondents admonishing them to send in no fewer items, but to limit their items to few words.

Advertising contracts are now being written "subject to paper conditions," and where an ad of four or five columns would mean adding ten pages in the old days, the ad now is generally rejected.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram seems to be taking the lead in paper conservation in Fort Worth, while the Dallas Morning News shows the greatest reduction in Dallas.

HOUSTON, TEX.—The Chronicle has increased advertising rates but not subscription rates; size reduced; reading matter down to minimum.

The Press has increased advertising and subscription rates; size reduced and ratio of reading matter to advertising decreased.

The Post is holding to war time conservation.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Newspaper publishers here have been in conference for the past several days relative to necessary steps to meet the impending shortage of news print. No definite conclusions have been reached as yet, it is said, regarding how best to meet the situation. However, all the local publishers are agreed that something must be done and that something will be done in the very near future.

Representatives of Louisville newspapers stated they would attend the conference of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association at Birmingham and that their program will be formulated by that time.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Subscription rates have already been advanced here and advertising rates will be increased to meet increased costs. The size of papers will not be reduced until dailies in other cities printing 28 to 32 pages daily have reduced to 14 or 18 pages the size. The Spokesman Review is holding to the ratio of reading matter to advertising already established.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—This city's daily newspapers have taken no action yet toward meeting the newsprint situation by raising advertising or subscription rates.

PORTLAND, ORE.—With the exception of increased advertising rates, Portland newspapers so far have taken no steps to reduce their size to meet the present news print situation. There have been several advances in advertising charges in the last few months but these have been made to meet rising expenses, especially one of the highest printers' scales in the country, rather than to solve the paper shortage.

However, the Portland papers are holding down their ratio of news as compared with advertising to what they consider a minimum. There has been even a decrease in this respect as compared with the ratio that was in effect when the paper shortage was acute during the war, although advertising has increased greatly the relative amount of news published is even smaller.

The Oregonian is running about 55 per cent advertising and 45 per cent news and the ratio in the Journal is about the same.

In the Telegram, which has no Sunday edition, the proportion of news is somewhat larger.

SCRANTON, PA.—No general agreement has been reached by the two local daily and one Sunday newspapers on any plan of saving news print, but it is known the publishers are preparing to join with the newspapers of the country in reducing the size of their issues. This is to be brought about by increased rates on advertising, which is expected to reduce space of the average advertiser, while news is to be condensed. It is stated that there is not much likelihood of the subscription rates being advanced from 2 to 3 cents by the dailies here.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—All papers here recently increased 15 cents per month on subscription rates and made substantial increase in advertising rates. They are holding newsprint consumption to the minimum in makeup. They contemplate no further radical changes in the near future.

SEATTLE, WASH.—News print shortage has had no effect on size of papers here. There is no immediate indication that they will reduce and no definite plans are yet made by publishers for meeting the crisis. The Times made a general increase in advertising rates when the recent boost in subscription price occurred. An increase by the Post-Intelligencer in ad rates is impending. The Times is publishing unusually big editions, last Friday's issue totaling 40 pages. All dailies giving big space to special features.

DENVER, COLO.—Newspapers here have taken the following action on the print paper situation:

Express increased advertising rates 10 per cent; cut news stories to minimum.

Post increased advertising rates 5 per cent; discontinued one street edition; discontinued returns and exchanges; cut size of Sunday supplement; increased price of street sale copies one cent each.

Ability to Purchase

That's the main essential of a circulation; that it have purchasing ability.

One of the easiest ways of spending money without profit is by advertising better-class goods to a circulation that is financially unable to purchase them.

If you are going to advertise in Denver, and you have a proposition which appeals to a discriminating class of people—

And the success of your proposition depends upon your reaching a class that are capable of appreciating as well as being able to purchase your offering—

SIXTY-DAY ADJUSTMENT BASIS FOR AD RATES

Plan by Which Publishers May Cancel Their Contract If Agreement Cannot Be Reached

By John Budd
(Of the John Budd Company, Newspaper Representatives.)

The tendency in recent years has been toward a newspaper advertising rate for the general advertising field that is flat, or nearly so.

In normal times this works to the advantage of both the advertisers and the publication.

But these are abnormal times, and the phase of that plan which permits an advertiser or his agency to contract for a year at a flat rate and to use space at will, little or much, or omit to use it entirely, and still hold the rate to the expiration of the year, is under present and probably future conditions, most unfair to the newspaper.

The plan proposed in the resolution passed by the A. N. P. A. special meeting committee on November 12, is open to the objection that to restrict the term of all advertising contracts to a three month period involves not only endless labor at a time when detail is enormous, but complications in connection with every well and thoroughly planned advertising campaign that will discourage and restrict desirable development.

Adjustments at their frequent terminations may be necessary and may not, no one surely knows now, but they are all thrown up in the air just the same, and the constant uncertainty is not conducive to good business.

The John Budd Company, which represents a number of publications in the national advertising field, has devised a method which has met with almost unanimous approval by advertisers, advertising agencies, and publishers wherever proposed.

It is that all advertising contracts hereafter be entered into with the proviso that the publication has the right and privilege of cancelling or stopping service thereon, after sixty days' notice, given at any time, unless meanwhile, an equitable rate for its continuance after expiration of the two-month period, is agreed upon.

This proviso is just and fair to the advertiser in that it gives him assurance that snap decisions on rates will not constantly face him. He will have sixty days in which to adjust his campaign at the original rate, if he concludes that continuance at the rate made necessary by new conditions is impractical.

No further rate revision may be necessary, sky-rocketing expenses may have reached their peak, but if they have not the publisher is in a position to readjust his advertising affairs to meet them within a reasonable time, and will not be compelled to carry a lot of space at a loss to himself or to other advertisers who coming later will have to pay enormous rates to make up the deficiency, or by those rates be prohibited entirely from newspaper publicity.

The practice of making yearly advertising contracts at flat rates, or slightly scaled rates, is one which under present conditions is so obviously one-sided, and so manifestly unfair to the publications, that it is today without other justification than precedent.

WILEY SEES WASTE IN FULL PAGE ADS

Business Manager New York Times Urges More Concise and Convincing Copy Instead of Broadsides of Space

HARTFORD, Nov. 25.—Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, addressed the Charter Oak Ad Club tonight on the general newspaper and advertising situation.

He outlined briefly the reasons for the tremendous growth in the volume of advertising in the newspapers since the signing of the armistice, predicting that this volume would continue for some time, due to the enormous increase in American business activity.

Mr. Wiley expressed doubts as to the superior value to advertisers of full page space, particularly in cases where the advertiser's story could be just as forcefully presented in smaller space. This, he contended, was true of a great many page ads. He urged greater care in the preparation of copy, arguing that poor copy gained nothing through being presented in full pages.

He referred to the policies now being adopted by the big papers of limiting, or rationing, the space to be used by advertisers, and believed that this might prove helpful in saving newsprint. He advised caution in the matter of increasing rates, as he believed that this would mean that advertisers would pass on this increase, in some instances, to the public in the form of higher prices for their goods.

Mr. Wiley suggested that the manufacture of wall papers should be discontinued for the period of one year, the machines now used on wall papers to be turned to the production of newsprint. He urged that such a policy would be in the public interest, as newspapers were a greater necessity to the people than wall paper.

LaFETRA RETIRED ON FULL PAY

Advertising Manager Emeritus Is Succeeded by F. C. Hitch

H. A. La Fetra, for thirty-seven years with the Royal Baking Powder Company, New York, during the greater part of which he was advertising manager, has retired because of advancing years and infirm health, with the position of Advertising Manager Emeritus, especially created for him by the board of directors, his compensation continuing as heretofore.

J. W. Gannon, for sixteen years connected with the company as assistant advertising manager, during the last portion of which he performed the duties of advertising manager, has resigned to become president of a new advertising agency bearing his name, as recently noted in EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Frederick C. Hitch became advertising manager on November 20. Mr. Hitch has had extended experience in advertising food and other products, and has for several years occupied a responsible position in the advertising department of a large eastern manufacturing corporation.

A Market of Seven Hundred Million

THE Far East--a market of seven hundred million people—is enjoying undisturbed and unparalleled prosperity. The Far East has been buying from Europe. Europe has not the production necessary even for her own home channels--will not have this production for years to come. In the mean time the Far East turns to America for her goods. Unprecedented opportunity is offered the United States to enter this vast market and solidify the demand for her goods before Europe is ready again.

The business houses of the Far East are financially strong; their buying power and credits have been unimpaired by the war. The time is ripe for American exploitation.

S. N. P. A. WILL SPEND $6,000 IN FIRST 1920 ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Southern Council of A. A. A. A. Will Prepare and Place Trade Paper and Booklet Copy—Specific Market Data Promised

New Orleans, La., Nov. 25.

THE $6,000 advertising budget of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will be spent between January 1 and July 1, 1920, with a view to convincing sales and advertising managers in specific manufacturing groups of the marketing possibilities for their particular product in the 13 Southern States represented in the S. N. P. A., according to the decision of the advertising committee, reached at its New Orleans meeting, a telegraphic report of which was carried in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week.

No copy will be placed until after January 1, due to the holiday season and to the fact that new lists, in the main, will not be compiled until after the first of the year.

Booklet and Trade Paper Campaign Planned

C. F. Gladfelter of Louisville submitted rough text and designs for the booklet which the advertising committee has decided to issue for 1920. This booklet will show by direct comparison the circulation of all the magazines and all the newspapers in the 13 Southern states and will give comparative costs per state and collective costs for the region.

It will also contain a statement of the relative value of concentrated newspaper circulation at the point of distribution with so-called "national circulations" scattered everywhere.

One page in the booklet will also be devoted to each state represented in the association, presenting the circulation and advertising rates of each newspaper subscribing to the advertising fund of the S. N. P. A, together with a comparison of the magazine circulations in that section and other market data, such as the number of wholesalers, jobbers and dealers in the leading lines.

Will Work Through Dealers

The committee will print 1,000 copies of this booklet and distribute them to the subscribers to the fund and to the membership of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and feature it in all advertisements in trade papers. The membership will be urged to distribute these booklets at their own expense, to the wholesalers, jobbers and dealers in their respective communities, with the request that they in turn submit the facts to manufacturers of advertised brands.

Members will also be urged to purchase extra copies of the booklet for the above purpose, these extra copies to carry inserts or imprints of the paper thus distributing them. It is planned to sell these extra copies to the members at a profit to the committee and to apply such profits to the advertising fund.

Sixteen Pages in Trade Press

A total of 16 page advertisements will be placed in publishing and advertising trade journals, the appropriation for this purpose being $1,780.

In the course of a conference between the advertising committee and a committee from the southern council of the A. A. A. A., Chairman A. G. Newmyer presented the S. N. P. A. advertising plan to the agents and stated that it was the desire of the S. N. P. A. to deal with the Southern Council of the A. A. A. A. in the same manner as the Federal Government deals with the Advertising Agencies Corporation, as if they were one agency handling one client.

Mr. Newmyer further explained that the publishers' committee desired to deal with the agencies through President Thomas E. Basham and that any arrangements for handling copy or commissions that the Council made among its membership would be satisfactory to the S. N. P. A. and that the publishers would pay the agents 15 per cent, less 2 per cent cash discount for their services, all commissions from publications to agents to be returned to the association.

S. N. P. A. Will Pay Commissions

President Basham replied that while there was not sufficient profit in this program to justify the effort on a money-making basis of any or all of the Council's members, the Southern agents recognized the need for and mutual benefits from such campaigns and that he therefore accepted the proposal on behalf of his membership. He heartily endorsed the plan.

The committee's final instructions to President Basham were:

To write and print the booklet; to prepare and place trade-paper copy, as ordered; and to prepare copy and lists to reach the sales and advertising managers in the manner prescribed.

Mr. Basham promised to set his machinery in motion at once and to submit copy list of mediums and cost sheets to the advertising committee in time to begin the campaign in January.

Urge 25 Per Cent Raise in Ad Rates

Following a discussion of the news print situation, Mr. Gladfelter introduced the following resolution, seconded by Mr. Newmyer;

"That in view of the present critical paper famine and auction markets, and the further fact that the paper manufacturers will not establish a price basis for next year, nor give any assurance of an increased paper supply; publishers everywhere are urged to immediately increase their advertising rates, both local and foreign, at least 25 per cent, and the advertisers and advertising agents of America are urged to give the publishers of newspapers optional days for the insertion of their copy, in order that the existing print paper emergency may be met to the best advantage of the publishers and their customers."

Copies of this resolution were given to the Associated Press, the United Press, the International News Service, and the trade press of the country. Secretary Johnson was requested to bulletin the resolution to the entire membership of the S. N. P. A. and to send it to the A. N. P. A. with the request that it immediately be transmitted to the entire membership of that body.

Mr. Basham promised that it would be immediately transmitted to all of the agents represented in his association, with his personal recommendation that afternoon newspapers be given the option of inserting copy Mondays, Tuesdays or Wednesdays, and morning newspapers Thursdays, Fridays or Saturdays.

CANADA MAKES 2,775 TONS PAPER DAILY

Dominion Manufacturers Expect to Reach Million Tons Annually If Present Demand from United States Continues

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—The importance which the news print industry has assumed in Canada is shown by the fact that the Dominion is now producing 2,775 tons of news print a day, or a total of about 800,000 tons a year. This estimate is official, being vouched for by the Canadian Pulp & Paper Association. This tonnage is made up as follows:

	TONS
Abitibi Power & Paper Co.	740
Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Co.	200
J. R. Booth	150
Brompton Pulp & Paper Co.	95
Canadian Paper Co.	35
Donnaconna Paper Co.	100
E. B. Eddy Co.	50
Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Co.	150
Laurentide Company, Ltd.	225
News Pulp & Paper Co.	80
Ontario Paper Co.	325
Pacific Mills, Ltd.	200
Powell River Company, Ltd.	375
Price Bros. & Co.	250
Spanish River Pulp & Paper Co.	500
St. Maurice Paper Co.	100
Total	2775

Very ambitious plans for expansion in the industry have recently been announced or are already under way. Price Brothers, Abitibi, Spanish River, and Laurentide are all planning to increase their output by an average of 300 tons a day, or 90,000 tons a year. The maximum production involved in this contemplated expansion will probably not be fully achieved before the beginning of next year.

If the demand keeps up, as it is confidently anticipated it will, Canada will ere long be approximating an annual production of nearly 1,000,000 tons of paper per annum.

There are also other plans for expansion under way, including the projected new mills announced by the International Paper Company at Three Rivers; Price Brothers at Chicoutimi, and by the Great Lakes Pulp & Paper Company at Port Arthur.

Canada's exports of news print paper for the six months ending September 30 were valued at $23,019,380, of which well over twenty million dollars' worth went to the United States.

Optimists in the paper industry predict that within ten years, at the present rate of progress, Canada will be producing 2,000,000 tons of news print a year, which is equivalent to the total consumption of news print in the United States in the year 1918.

The total production of news print in the United States now averages about 3,200 tons per day.

PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania has again proven itself the keystone state. Pennsylvania has been submerged and arisen purified and cleaned. American through and through.

Pennsylvania, because of its tremendous industries, is a great employer of foreign labor---and being the headquarters of the steel and coal industries of the country, has been cursed with long-haired, loud-mouthed, blatant labor agitators---propaganda spreaders, breeders of unrest, discontent and discord.

Two tremendously important strikes have hit Pennsylvania---two strikes which, in reality were not strikes so much as movements toward Anarchy and Bolshevism.

And Pennsylvania has answered---answered in no uncertain way. Pennsylvania is the keystone state of America---of the United States, of progress, of loyalty, of clear thinking---of right.

Pennsylvania has said, and said plainly, that riot, rampage and revolution have no place within the borders of the state; that decency, progress and red, white and blue Americanism, has the call—that it dominates overwhelmingly—and that Pennsylvania shall, in the future, as in the past, continue going ahead.

Such a state, peopled by such folks, is a good state for national advertisers to cultivate in an intensive way---through daily newspapers.

These daily newspapers do great work for many—they can do great work for you.

KEYSTONE PAPERS BAND TO MEET PAPER CRISIS

Form First Regional Body in Western Pennsylvania and Recommend Their Plan to Publishers Throughout Country

(BY TELEGRAPH)

WASHINGTON, Pa., Nov. 26.—Following the suggestion of the American Newspaper Publishers Association made at its recent special convention held in New York, a regional meeting of publishers of Western Pennsylvania was held on November 20 at the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh at the call of E. R. Stoll, secretary of the Pittsburgh Publishers' Association, and John L. Stewart, president of the Western Pennsylvania Associated Dailies.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the news print situation so that all the publishers in this "region" might become acquainted with the action taken at the A. N. P. A. and co-operate in the general movement throughout the country for the conservation of paper and for raising advertising and circulation rates where necessary, to take care of the increased cost of print and to make possible the reduction in the sizes of the papers and circulation.

Smith and Stewart Preside

David B. Smith, treasurer of the Pittsburgh Gazette Times and Chronicle Telegraph and president of the Pittsburgh Publishers' Association presided at the luncheon which was tendered the Western Pennsylvania publishers by the Pittsburgh publishers, later turning it over to Mr. Stewart.

T. R. Williams, business manager of the Pittsburgh Press, member of the newsprint committee of the A. N. P. A. and representative of the Pittsburgh Publishers at the New York convention, made the principal address.

The resolutions passed at the A. N. P. A. convention were adopted by the joint meeting. Practically every publisher present spoke of the trouble they were experiencing in making the supply contracted for carrying them over until January first while many had not been able to secure contracts for their next year's supply or at least for anything near their needs based on their consumption this year.

Seven Cents and Higher Common

Some of the smaller papers who depend upon jobbers for supplies from time to time are now paying 7 cents a pound and being quoted higher rates for future deliveries. Two new papers in the association have already announced an increase in price from 2 to 3 cents and such an increase is now under consideration by the Pittsburgh publishers, as well as other drastic steps to reduce consumption, many of them now being compelled to turn down advertising in order to keep the papers down to a limited output.

The recommendation of John L. Stewart of the Washington Observer and Reporter that each paper ration its own output to meet what supply it had available between now and the first of the year was endorsed.

The following resolutions were adopted upon motion of John O'Donnell, Uniontown News-Standard, with instructions to send copies to all Western Pennsylvania publishers and to every newspaper organization in the country:

"Whereas, It has been determined beyond question that the consumption of white paper is now and for some time has been running from 10 to 20 per cent above the possible supply, and

"Whereas, Some of the leading newspapers of the country, as well as many of the smaller ones, are confronted with a paper famine, and

"Whereas, The paper manufacturers and supply houses of the country refuse their customers and turn a deaf ear to all other requests, and

"Whereas, The lowest quotation for print for 1920, even on an allotment basis, is $4.00 per hundred pounds, while this meeting recommend that same publishers were paying as high as $7 and $8 per hundred for their urgent needs above allotments, and

"Whereas, The entire print situation has brought the business of newspaper making face to face with one of the most serious problems in the history of the U. S. it,

"Resolved, That the newspaper publishers of Western Pennsylvania, under the call of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in convention assembled, back the Association's efforts to impress on the publishers of the country the great importance of practicing conservatism during 1920 or until such time as the emergency ceases, and be it further,

"Resolved, That to effect a sharp reduction in the consumption at print and to meet the steadily increasing cost of paper, all competing publishers throughout Western Pennsylvania be urged to merge their local differences long enough to agree upon a sufficient increase in subscription and advertising rates in bring this reduction about, and be it further,

"Resolved, That the publishers of Western Pennsylvania be both individually and collectively lend their energy in effect such a curtailment of news print in 1920 as will bring the consumption of paper within the available supply, and be it further

"Resolved, That this meeting of Western Pennsylvania publishers be made a permanent organization and every effort made to secure every publisher in the state of the state with a view to meeting this crisis on a fair basis and determining a policy that the action of this body be transmitted to every other association of publishers in the United States."

A committee consisting of Mr. O'Donnell, R. W. Hershey, Greensburg Tribune and Jess Long of the McKeesport News, was named to meet with a representative of the Pittsburgh Publishers' Association to form a permanent organization, having in view the co-organization of a tri-State press association composed of the publishers of Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia.

The following newspaper publishers were in attendance:

E. R. Stoll, secretary Pittsburgh Publishers' Association; T. R. Williams, Pittsburgh Press; C. R. Ralphon, C. A. Rook, jr., Pittsburgh Gazette Times; David B. Smith, Chronicle Telegraph; Pittsburgh; Gazette Times and Chronicle Telegraph; Alex. Moore, Jr., Mc. Hope, Pittsburgh Leader; A. R. Braun, Pittsburgh Post and Sun; Walter Irving Mc. IOWA EDITORS GUESTS OF STATE UNIVERSITY

Annual Conference Disapproves Change in Postage Rates, Hears Successful Merchant Tell Secrets, and Learns About Bolshevism

(BY TELEGRAPH)

IOWA CITY, Ia., Nov. 26.—The fourth annual conference for Iowa newspaper men held here today was a big success. More than sixty editors and publishers came from all parts of the State at the invitation of the extension division of the State University of Iowa.

Among the speakers were Waldo L. Cook, editorial director of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Fred Lamm of Devils Lake, N. D., who does a retail general store business of $600,000 in a country town of 6,000; Gran L. Caswell of the Corn Belt Publisher, Dubuque, Ia.; Lloyd McCutcheon of the Mt. Vernon (Ia.) Record; Walter A. Jessup, president of the university; and William P. Russell, dean of the college of education. Walter Williams, dean of the school of journalism at the University of Missouri, had been expected to speak but was unable to be present.

Most of the newspapermen present for the conference came from the smaller papers of the state. About fifty editors stated before the conference that the scarcity of help would prevent them from attending.

Truth Specially Needed Now

The conference coincided with "homecoming" at the University and so the visiting editors got the benefit of all the decorations including several electric signs, a triumphal arch, a monument made of good old Iowa corn and all sorts of college pennants, pictures of athletic heroes, a sketch of the million dollar hall, for which a drive is now on and incidentally between 10,000 and 15,000 homecomers. Fortunately for the editors, the university had reserved rooms at local hotels a year ago.

President Jessup, in opening the conference, told the assembled newspaper men of the great need for accuracy in times like this when everyone wants to know the truth about the peace treaty, the truth about the coal strike, the truth about Russia, and the truth about many other important movements. He extended a warm welcome to the visitors and told them there was probably no other group of men the university was so glad to welcome.

Income Tax

The only paper presented at the morning session was that of Mr. McCutcheon on "What effect the income tax will have on the country newspaper." Mr.

THE BEAUMONT ENTERPRISE
Member A. B. C.
BEAUMONT, TEXAS

The ENTERPRISE is the only daily paper that has a general circulation in the great rice, lumber and oil fields of Eastern Texas and Southwestern Louisiana.

There is no other newspaper published within 100 miles of Beaumont that really circulates with the ENTERPRISE in its field. We not only cover Beaumont and suburban territory thoroughly, but also have a larger circulation in Orange and Port Arthur than the newspapers published in those towns.

The ENTERPRISE absolutely dominates its field—it has no real competition.

It is the one newspaper that will perform a good work with satisfaction to the advertising business in the Beaumont territory.

McCutcheon held that manufacturers of print paper and other supplies were boosting their prices to the consumer to cover the income tax and more too. The fact that big advertisers were spending a good deal of what would otherwise be their excess profits and so subject to a heavy tax seemed to Mr. McCutcheon to mean that in time country newspapers would reap a benefit although he said they were not reaping much now.

His idea was that this advertising would bring such good results, although country newspapers get little of the actual business now, that advertising would be made even more popular and that later the country newspaper would get its share.

Mr. Caswell presided at a round table on newspaper problems that concluded the morning session. Much interesting information was brought out in regard to various concerns that are offering equipment and service to small newspapers.

Zone Rate Change Not Favored

The bill now before Congress substituting a flat rate of 4 cents for the present zone system for second class matter met with vigorous protests on all sides. A committee consisting of F. E. Taylor of Traer, O. J. Benjamin of Nevada and J. B. Hungerford of Carroll was appointed to write to Iowa Congressmen opposing this bill.

The price and supply of news print and the activity of farm bureau newspapers also were discussed. Dean Russell took the place on the program that had been reserved for Dean Williams and told of his personal experiences with Bolshevism in Siberia during a stay of about six months while he was on a special mission for the United States Government. He said Bolshevism was a mild doctrine that spread rapidly, because the people were ignorant and hungry and never heard any arguments opposing the Bolshevik ideas on their merits. He said that more people were talking and thinking Bolshevism in this country now—more than most people had any idea of—and that to combat it meant effort along various educational lines, encouraging habits of thrift and production and arguing the case on its merits rather than on the grounds that anyone who talked Bolshevism was a traitor to his country. He said that he himself was firmly and unalterably opposed to Bolshevism in any form.

Each Paper Has Own Character

The most scholarly paper of the conference was read by Mr. Cook on "Character in newspaper work." He made the point that each newspaper has a character of its own which is a reflection or embodiment of the character and soul of the man at the head of the paper.

Advertisers have no influence over the editorial page of the better papers, he said. In this connection he pointed out the great advance that had been made in the newspaper profession since the days of Benjamin Franklin when an editor had to be a postmaster or else a rival editor postmaster would not let the post riders deliver his paper.

Mr. Cook illustrated the various points he made with anecdotes of his own career.

Mr. Mann made the unqualified statement that this year he is spending $12,000 for advertising, split about fifty-fifty between the newspapers and all other methods, that he will do a gross business of $600,000 and that if he did not advertise at all this year, even though his store is so well known, he would expect to see his sales drop $300,000. Mr. Mann had a suit case full of the sort of advertisements he is using to beat the mail order concern on its own ground.

The meetings of the conference were presided over by Orrie E. Klingaman, director of the university's extension division, and by William S. Maulsby, assistant professor of journalism.

Pact with A. N. P. A. Sought by New Pressmen's Union

All Agreements Must Receive O. K. of Entire Membership — May Seek A. F. of L. Charter

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 26.—Resolutions favoring an arbitration agreement with the American Newspaper Publishers' Association were adopted at the final day's session of the organization meeting of the United Association of Newspaper Web Pressmen and Juniors of North and South America, which was held in St. Louis last week. These resolutions follow:

Resolved, That the convention go on record as favoring an arbitration agreement with the American Newspaper Publishers Association, and the Board of Directors are hereby instructed to negotiate an agreement with the representatives of the above association, and any agreement arrived at shall be submitted to the popular referendum vote of the members for their approval

Other resolutions include the assurance that all contracts will be adhered to, as stated in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week; declare for "group insurance," covering the entire membership of the association; members to retain their present international number, and the continuation of affiliating locals under their local until the new association receives a charter.

These officers were elected: President, Frank Pyle, Pittsburgh; first vice-president, Hugh J. Gordon, St. Louis; second vice-president, J. W. Addison, Toronto; third vice-president, J. Taylor, Detroit; secretary-treasurer, L. Kreitler, New York.

These officers will serve until a charter is obtained. Failing in obtaining a charter from the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, from which the web pressmen are seceding, they will apply direct to the American Federation of Labor.

(BY TELEGRAPH)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Nov. 24.—In conference Saturday, H. N. Kellogg, labor commissioner of the A. N. P. A., told representatives of the new Web Pressmen's Union that recognition could not be given unless and until new organization came to front with a solid membership of all union web pressmen in the country, so as to avoid conflict with I. P. P. & A. U. Any other course, he said, would be asking publishers to violate contracts with the I. P. P. & A. U. and this would not be done.

Tracy McCracken, editor of the Boomerang for the last two years, has assumed the management and announces that the company's capitalization is to be increased soon to $40,000.

Frank Sheridan, of the Sheridan, Shawhun & Sheridan Company, New York, has gone abroad in connection with the Bethlehem Motors and the American Bosch Magneto Company accounts, which are handled by his agency.

WOMEN MUST SUBMIT TO SAME TRAINING AS MEN TO ATTAIN SUCCESS IN JOURNALISM

Viscount Burnham Tells the British Society of Women Journalists—English Firms Prepare to Advertise In America—Other Overseas News

ABOUT one hundred and fifty women journalists gathered at a Victory Banquet of the British Society of Women Journalists, presided over by Miss M. F. Billingham, the Society's president. Prince Albert was to have been present but his place was taken by Brigadier General, the Earl of Athlone.

Viscount Burnham in an interesting speech, in which he said he felt as if he were addressing the severest critics of the new world, added that as women journalists were now competing on equal terms with men, it was unwise of them to trust altogether and alone to the natural intuition of their sex. They must submit to the same irksome training as the men who were competing with them. Intuition was not everything. It did not provide a livelihood in the world in which we lived.

In his view it would be unwise for them at present to entrust their interests wholly to those professional organizations which were being formed for journalists as well as other people on the trade-union model. Although he did not know that he was altogether in favor of their organizing themselves on the principle of division and distinction of sex, he certainly did not think the time had yet come when they could safely do so without an organization based on that principle.

If they entrusted their interest entirely to mixed bodies he did not think, judging from the trade-union example, they were likely to fare well. When presiding over labor conferences he had been somewhat amused to hear how ardently and hotly the claims of women to equal pay under equal conditions had been pressed by advocates of the men's unions. Of course, one obvious result under present conditions would be that women would be pushed out of their jobs.

It might enable them to make the great sacrifice for a great principle, and their families. Therefore on the whole, he thought they were wise to have such a strong society as this to protect their interests and to see that they had equal opportunities without necessarily claiming to have exactly the same rate of remuneration or exactly the same conditions of work.

This was a time when women had, if they would pardon the phrase, found their manhood as well as their womanhood, and had proved that they could have the fulness of a new dignity without losing the shining qualities of their old dignity.

Two More British Industries to Advertise in U. S. A.

THE Irish Linen Society's plan of a campaign to promote a demand for their products in the United States has aroused wide interest in other British Industries. Now, the lacemakers of Nottingham, and the textile manufacturers of Manchester, are both engaged in serious consideration of the question whether they cannot profitably follow the lead of the Irish linen industry.

The methods of the latter (already described in EDITOR & PUBLISHER) are being investigated, and if they are convinced, as they doubtless will be, that their export trade can be increased by this means, their decision will follow promptly. The Manchester textile houses are said to be prepared to spend $400,000 on publicity in such a campaign. The figure is a little short of the Irish linen appropriation, which was $450,000.

Journalists' War Benevolence Comes Out

IN a report of the National Union of Journalists presented at the Birmingham Conference, is told for the first time some of the work of the Overseas Committee in war-time, under Lord Burnham.

In some instances Belgian journalists with their wives and children, arrived in London, or other towns on the coast or inland, in a state of destitution and exhaustion, having crossed the Channel by such means as they could obtain after having tramped for long distances in the late Autumn rains, among crowds of homeless refugees. With the help of an emergency advance from the Overseas Fund provision was made for the immediate necessities of such cases.

In the early months of the German occupation of Belgium, means were found to send money from the fund to the parent Association, in Brussels, in aid of its measures for the relief of members who were permitted or compelled, temporarily or permanently, to remain in the country, though deprived of their means of livelihood by the control or suspension of their journals.

In the light of correspondence already received from members of the Section Anglaise, their return, and from other communications, the committee anticipate that the whole of the balance will be required in aid of such measures as that of giving necessary help in Belgium, to Belgian journalists many of whom are in severe and continuing need, and delays attending the restoration of their journals to approximately normal conditions of issue

Britain's Advertising M. P.'s Plea for Propaganda

C. F. HIGHAM, M.P., is nothing if not an earnest advocate of the publicity principles he practices, and his writings have all the conviction of knowledge as well as belief. Perhaps nothing he has done—save only his book on Scientific Salesmanship—has created so wide an interest as his plea for a mass education, by advertising, in the responsibilities of the individual to the State. That was published as a two column article in the Morning Post and a leader of the same length devoted to a discussion and an endorsement of the principles expounded.

Mr. Higham claimed that an emotional appeal is necessary to provide the motivation to the people on whether "we are on the verge of either the biggest social cataclysm the world has ever seen or taking part in the accouchement of an era which will show unparalleled accomplishment."

When civilisations have trembled in the past has there ever been any organised effort to harness public opinion to constructive thought and the kind of action such thought brings in its train? asks Mr. Higham. No ancient Empires have had the machinery all ready at hand as we have it today. . . . We can challenge thought and engender an uncommon devotion in the moy through that mighty modern medium the Press.

Then Mr. Higham releases his plan: "We have a method of imparting knowledge which seems to act like magic, simply because it touches and teaches millions of minds at once. When nations in the past have set up national ideals there has been little result for at least a generation, because the teaching was only given through the churches, schools, and universities.

"But if we set up a national ideal today, and deliberately, continuously, and publicly promoted it in the advertising columns of the newspapers, on the hoarding, and through the cinema, a very quick difference could be made in the tone and temper of the whole community.

"In my opinion, this is the most astounding thought of modern time. We can create a new outlook; we can vivify thought; we can move hnman energy in any direction by organised and public persuasion—or, to put it bluntly, by advertising an emotional ideal. . . . What we want is mass education—one stupendous piece of propaganda to teach a fundamental and therefore non-sectarian principle of living—which when assimilated would automatically dispel half our problems and make the way easy for the solution of the rest."

There has probably been no finer or higher purpose suggested for the application of advertising than this of providing an appeal to a nation's emotions to such a lofty end.

Birmingham Helped by Its Press

THERE are few cities in the United Kingdom which can boast so rapid a growth, both in size and influence, as Birmingham. Its development has been remarkable, and today it stands as one of the foremost mannfacturing towns in the country, the metropolis of the Midlands, forming the chief shopping centre for a district in which, it has been computed, there are more than four million inhabitants. Its growth has been steady, its prosperity continuous, and today it is enjoying an industrial activity the beoefits of which will be felt for many years to come.

Owing to the variety of her industries Birmingham escaped anything approaching a slump in trade when the war ceased. During the war many new factories were built to meet the demands and fulfill Government contracts.

All these works have been retained, their organizations adapted to peace time requirements, and they have already proved a great industrial asset, affording the previous much needed opportunity for manufacturers of expansion.

It is signifieant that in spite of the numerons works built during the war, thus increasing factory accommodation in the city tremendously, the demand for factories continues, and advertisements appear daily from manufacturers and captains of industry who require modern works preferably with room to extend."

It is a trite truism that a city is known by the newspapers it keeps, and Birmingham is especially fortunate in this respect. Its leading morning paper is Sir Charles Starmer's Birmingham Gazette, the morning daily with the largest circulation between London and Manchester, and this journal has just taken in hand the development of the local electrical power, lighting and heating services, and is rnnning a special series of page features devoted to the snbject.

News Service by Aeroplane

A NUMBER of English papers are making increasing use of aeroplanes for their news services. The London Daily Express frequently prints French dispatches received by this means, the Weekly Dispatch secures its Paris gossip notes from its correspondent by aeroplane, and the Era, the English stage weekly newspaper has now arranged for its Paris theatre news by the same medium.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A WEEK

John Jones' family and William Smith's and Henry Brown's read one Washington evening paper. But John Robinson's family and Albert Smith's read The Times and don't read the other paper.

That's the Washington circulation situation. The advertiser doesn't and can't cover the city by announcements that only John Jones' family and William Smith's and Henry Brown's see, and there is the same business reason for wanting the trade of John Robinson's family and Albert Smith's, who are each spending $2,000 a year.

Washington is a two-paper town and The Times is one of the two.

Under the head of "The Senate and the League" the New York Globe recently left six inches of blank space, eloquently expressing the Globe's opinion of our reverend political leaders. Even in a period of newsprint shortage this daring expedient seems justified. For if one were to stop and consider, for instance, what might have been said in that space—especially if put in Jason-rogersese—one instinctively shudders. Now and then blank space is, indeed, golden.

Barry Faris, Bide Dudley, Fenton Dowling, Damon Runyon, George Larke, Harry Hazelwood, Roy Hinds, Jack Veiock, Frank Lamb, Ollie Newman, Ira Cribb, H. C. Wareham Smith, director of Lord Northcliffe's Associated Newspapers, Ltd., who is visiting in this country, recently stopped in a Washington, D. C., cigar store to make a purchase.

"Englishman, aren't you?" asked the clerk, after an exchange of ideas on popular brands.

"Yes."

"Well, drop in again," invited the clerk, "I like to talk to Englishmen There was one in here yesterday, too."

The Opera

In these days of newsprint shortage, when pound after pound of the rare material of which newspapers are made is being wasted to tell a public, interested principally in sugar, the color of stockings that Mrs. Over-Moaned wore as she chatted pleasantly with Mrs. Here-Now — smothered in pearls — while Caruso sang, it is refreshing to find Alexander Woolcott's "Second Thoughts of First Nights," in the New York Times, and we are reprinting it for you:

"The opera season in Columbus Circle opened for the week last Monday night, and a gala audience was assembled to hear 'The Women of the Guard.' It was showed of Director Hinshaw to select this gem from the Gilbert and Sullivan diadem, because, despite the ex quisite musical setting which the great Pro fessor has provided for its pensive libretto, it has never been distressingly popular, and out many people could be expected to sit through it patiently.

"The Park parterre and the famous first balcony presented an impressive spectacle for the grand opening of the 'Yeomen.' Of course, not every one was in his place when the conductor's baton was lifted for the opening strains of the overture, a dozen people arriving three or four minutes late, according to the custom of Dame Fashion, which we have always believed deplorable.

"Many notables were glimpsed in the throng. It all seemed very different from the carefree pre war days, when the clothing present on such an occasion would have cost much less. It was estimated, for instance, that the feet which kept time to the 'Whom Do Ye Ward?' melody were shod at an expense of $14,500—footgear which before the war would have cost only $6,872.

"Miss Edna Ferber was a striking figure in gun-metal velveteen, edged with skunk, and carried a large, bright green fan. The Irving Brocks were in the old Brock seats at E 101-063. Mrs. Brock was in warm brown peach bloom, edged with nutria, and carried a pocketbook. Captain Brock wore a simple ante bellum suit of some unobtrusive shade.

"Kelsey Allen wore the conventional black, with a thin, fine, white thread. He wore a stunning scarfpin, rumored to have cost $7.50. The whole effect was crowned by a dome-shaped headdress of stiff black felt. He was the dinosaur of all eyes.

"Robert Wheelwright, a celebrated Gilbertian, was becomingly attired in a tall suit. Captain Franklin P. Adams wore a simple costume of mixed tweeds, a cravet of rosaria mauve, and a pair of old army shoes.

"Mrs. Maximilian Foster wore a maroon broadcloth, edged with mink, and her guest, Margaret Mayo, was in a simple street suit of brocaded curl bloe satin. Frederick Schang, Jr., Herb Rock, and William Slavens McNutt all wore hine serge, with Mr. Schang achieving a modishly diversified effect by the addition of tan spats and tortoise-shell spectacles. Ralph Block was in prominently checked gray, in a sextette of seventy simple design to match. Minor S. McLain, formerly known to the Apollo of the Navy and often famous for having been kissed in public by Mary Garden, also wore hine serge, but was the observed of all observers. In such an assemblage no one noticed Mrs. Harold Manners.

"Mr. and Mrs. Edward Kellogg Baird, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Chandler Christy, Karl Kitchen, Major Cushmee Rice, Suzanne Westford, and Martine Rittenhouse, a cousin of our own Lady Bibliodale, also were present, end, needless to say, all wore clothing."

Elmer Rigdon, whose 14-year-old "Police Court Column" in the Pittsburgh Press, was put out of business by the great drouth, appeared as Si Perkins in the Bellevue, Pa., town hall last Tuesday night.

A Thought for Purists

Richard Harding Davis's best and widest read story "Gallagher," was declined by Richard Watson Gilder, of Century, because it was too slangy.

A certain person, who patronises the same pay window that we do, on his recent return from a tour of Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire received the following free reading notice in the column conducted by H. I. Phillips in the New York Globe:

"Josiah Bruce Keeney, peerless advertising man, while on a tour in New England, noticed this appealing sign on a window in Dover, N. H.:

Every National Advertiser would have his copy running NOW in the Wisconsin Dailies if he had had the RIGHT information brought before him when he could THINK IT OVER!

If he realized how a few CITIES having wholesalers and daily papers cover the country trade; how much this tight little state produces in agriculture; how its cities measure up with other cities in the VALUE they ADD in manufacture; and what a wonderfully few things they MAKE and what a LOT they buy outside—he would make haste to get his goods placed and his advertising started in the DAILIES.

If you haven't this information and are alive and alert and "on the job," as it were, why just pick your spot and your paper and write to the publisher for information. You'll get it, and get it right.

FIGURING HIGHER RATES

THE present crisis will serve at least one useful purpose: Publishers will learn more about their costs than they have ever before known. That knowledge will have enduring value. It will help in solving rate problems in the future as well as for the moment.

What ratio of the total publishing costs does news print represent? What proportion of your increased costs, as compared with the date of your last rate card, is due to the added cost of paper?

It is a natural error to assume that, if the price of news print has increased fifty per cent. in that period, the rates for advertising should be increased fifty per cent. This would be a sound reasoning if the cost of paper represented the total publishing costs. But, while paper cost is perhaps the largest single item of expense, it by no means constitutes the total upon which rate increase—either for subscriptions or advertising—should be based in order that revenues shall keep pace with advancing costs.

The proportion of paper cost to total costs must be taken into account in determining what rate of increase is demanded.

If, for example, within the period under analysis, it is found that labor and other operating costs have not advanced while the price of paper has jumped sixty per cent., it would be manifestly unnecessary and unfair to advance rates sixty per cent. The advance in rates must be based on total average increases in costs. If paper represents one-third of the total costs of production then a twenty per cent. raise in rates will take care of this increase.

What part of the increased costs should be covered by advertising and what part by subscriptions is a matter to be decided judicially, with a real purpose to safeguard the interests of both advertisers and readers.

Out of the present complex situation there should emerge a better standard of cost accounting, upon which may be based all readjustments of rates.

TRADING ON CREDULITY

WHEN will business and professional men learn that "newspaper" influence is not something to be purchased?

In New York a young man has been apprehended and brought to book after having posed as a representative of a leading press association, claiming to be able to secure favorable publicity in the columns of hundreds of newspapers for those who "subscribed" stated sums for the support of a book publishing venture. The astounding feature of the case is the fact that some business men appear to have fallen into the absurd lure and to have donated various sums to this glib peddler.

In Kansas City the newspapers have disclaimed any knowledge of or connection with another enterprise whose sponsors posed as newspaper men speaking in behalf of newspaper men. The effort was made to secure supporting subscriptions from Kansas City business men for meeting the expenses of a "state convention" of editors to be held there.

As has been related in the news columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, this same scheme has been attempted elsewhere in the West, but its promoters have not met with any considerable success.

Business men—all men—should understand that newspapers do not sell editorial immunity or favor on any terms and that the person who offers such a commodity is an imposter. And they should understand that newspaper men are not mendicants or seekers of contributions from those to whom, at some time, it might be possible for them to render a favor.

It should be the task of all newspapermen to run down and place within the clutches of the law all human vultures who attempt to trade on their good name and prestige. The "We Boys" fraud will not die until the newspapermen of the country kill it. And it has lived much too long!

BY WHAT ROAD?

IF national isolation is "Americanism," as the senatorial opponents of the Treaty and League Covenant would have us believe, why not League Covenant would have us believe, why not apply that policy to domestic as well as to international relations?

The states of the Federal Union often chafe under the restraint imposed upon them by our form of super-government at Washington. Would it be good Americanism for these states to claim the right of isolation and to conduct their own affairs without interference by or obligations to the Republic?

Counties sometimes feel like seceding from the states of which they are a part, and asserting the "American" principle of the right of isolation. Should they be encouraged to cut the state and national "entanglements" which sometimes place upon them mandatory duties and responsibilities?

Cities occasionally feel the yoke imposed upon them by county, state and national governments. Have our cities the same right to isolation which the Senate majority claims for the nation? Is there any social order possible, under this spurious doctrine, short of a tribal system?

Happily, we are a nation, one and indivisible. No political division of the Union is permitted to shirk its responsibilities upon the plea of its right of isolation.

As a nation we may cravenly contend for the right to stand aloof from the rest of the world—asserting the "Americanism" as a plea in extenuation—but we cannot alter the fact that isolation for us is utterly impossible. The great war made forever futile the efforts of nations to avoid their international duties and burdens.

Our senatorial majority has amazed and stunned the peoples of the world by proclaiming for the great Republic a policy of seclusion, selfishness and "isolation." This attitude has been assumed in spite of the fact that even in school children, that the vital interests of America are woven inextricably into the fabric of the world's life. The threads cannot be unravelled without destroying the fabric itself.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." That was the conclusion of the wisest of the ancients. The Republic stands at the parting of the road—and that road which has been to school children, that the vital interests of America are woven inextricably into the fabric of the world's life. The threads cannot be unravelled without destroying the fabric itself.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." That was the conclusion of the wisest of the ancients. The Republic stands at the parting of the road—and that road which has been to the abyss has been marked by a stolen signboard, on which is inscribed "Americanism." The other road is Duty and Destiny, the highway of real Americanism. It leads to brotherhood. Following it we shall take our rightful part in the healing of the nations, serve mankind to the measure of our giant strength, abolish war, injustice, anarchy, famine; help restore the joy and beauty of life to sorely stricken peoples and bring once more to the minds and hearts of men the Patmos vision of the City Four Square!

Americanism does not mean selfish isolation—it means unselfish service!

THE ERA OF CO-OPERATION

WHILE but one year old, the National Association of Daily Newspaper Advertising Managers has already taken its place among the substantial craft organizations in this field. The annual meeting in Chicago was marked by a spirit of friendly co-operation, the members discussing frankly the problems they are facing and the policies they are following.

Vital issues confront the advertising managers just now. Not the least of these concerns the adjustment of advertising rates to present-time costs of production. Having, through industry and intiative, created a great volume of advertising for their newspapers it is now their task to curtail to some extent that volume without failure of adequate service to any advertiser and without loss of revenues to their newspapers.

This is not a simple problem, however simply stated; but one which calls for a new phase of effort. For the advertiser must be convinced of the fact that, under this programme for conserving paper, his interests are fully safeguarded. This will call for campaigns of education among advertisers—many of whom have not yet realized the gravity of the paper shortage and its menace to the usefulness and even the existence of the newspapers.

Yes, the advertising managers have a full schedule of work in prospect—but there is no class of American business men better able to measure up to difficult requirements than are these clear-visioned go-getters, with whom achievement is a daily habit.

Congratulations to Messrs. Ahern, Woodward, Parsons and their wide-awake associates who have created, just at the "psychological moment," a greatly needed organization!

NO QUARTER FOR ANARCHY

ATTORNEY-General Palmer says there are 327 radical newspapers now published in the United States, many of them openly advocating the Union of States, many of them openly advocating the overthrow of the Government. He asks for legal authority to deal with them.

In the case of the Union Record, of Seattle, the Federal and local officials did not wait for added authority of law, but closed and locked the doors of the plant.

There should be no delay, pending possible stringent legislation by the Congress, in the process of putting a stop to the preaching of anarchy and rebellion, through newspapers or by word of mouth.

"Red" publications should not be permitted to find a shield in the guarantee of press freedom—for that guarantee is given by the very system of government which they repudiate and seek to destroy. A democracy owes no protection to its enemies.

Not all radical publications advocate anarchy. But the line should be clearly drawn between newspapers which aim to better conditions UNDER OUR DEMOCRATIC SYSTEM and newspapers which aim to promote treason and revolution. That publication which is in opposition to our form of government has no claim to the protection of our laws. It is an alien and hostile force, to be dealt with accordingly.

Let us hope that the Congress may fix adequate penalties for those who thus brave the wrath of a tolerant people—but while awaiting such legislation it should be possible to suppress, under forms of existing law, the activities of a reptile press.

"RATIONING" of advertising space, so that all advertisers may share it is the new policy. A shortage of news print means a shortage of advertising space. It's a brand new condition, but it will be met without disaster.

THE interests of your advertisers and of your readers are bound up with your own in finding the right solution of your newsprint problem—and they will gladly co-operate.

PERSONALS

MELVILLE E. STONE, general manager of the Associated Press, will sail from New York on November 29 on the S. S. Adriatic, to arrange the A. P. European news connections which were interrupted by the war.

Arthur G. Newmyer, associate publisher of the New Orleans Item, is the father of a neweight-and-a-half pound son, born November 16.

E. Lansing Ray, president of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, was in New York on a business trip, leaving for home last Thursday evening.

Abraham Cahan, editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, New York, was a Chicago visitor last week, addressing several large gatherings of his race on alleged Polish persecutions of his race. Mr. Cahan recently returned from a tour of investigation over parts of Europe.

Edwin A. Grozier, who as editor and publisher of the Boston Post, has always been noted for his generous appreciation of other newspapers, illustrated that trait last week by sending his check for $100 to the American Christmas Basket Fund which, like the Post's Santa Claus Fund, is designed to help make Christmas happy.

William E. Moore, former managing editor of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, was greeted with acclaim by many old conferees in the newspaper field when he returned to Chicago for a temporary stay this week. He returned this August from France, where he first served as a captain on the General Staff in charge of the Pictorial History section of the army. He is about to have a Pictorial History of the World War published by Hanson & Co., Chicago.

Frank B. Nichols, publisher of the Bath (Me.) Daily Times, was appointed by Governor Milliken as a delegate to the international convention of the Young People's Men's Christian Association at Detroit this month.

Dr. Henry J. Waters, editor of the Kansas City Weekly Star, received two unusual honors this week. He was selected by President Wilson as one of the members of the conference that will attempt to settle the labor disputes early in December, and Governor Gardner named him as a Missouri delegate to the eleventh annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, which meets in Savannah, Ga.

Senator Arthur Capper of Topeka, head of the Capper Publications, has announced his acceptance of the post of a director of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People.

F. J. B. Livesay, western manager of Canadian Press Limited, who acted as correspondent in France during the latter part of the war, is now in Toronto passing the proofs of his book, "The Last Hundred Days," which tells the story of Canada's effort in the final push for victory.

Capt. Charles A. Bonfils, former managing editor of the Kansas City Post and the first American Red Cross officer to enter Hungary to aid in the work of rescuing wounded soldiers on the battlefield, during the recent war between Rumania and Hungary, has been commended by the commanding general of the Sixth Rumanian army, to which his unit was attached.

W. B. Sullivan, whose ill health a few days ago caused him to relinquish his duties as president of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, has gone to New York for an extended stay. He is accompanied by his wife and little daughter, and they have leased an apartment at 1078 Madison avenue.

Thomas J. Flaherty, editor of the Portland (Me.) Sunday Telegram, has returned from a vacation passed in Boston and New York.

E. T. Meredith, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will visit the clubs of the Pacific Northwest early next Summer, according to a letter received from him by Governor Olcott of Oregon.

A. O. Moreaux, publisher of the Rock County Herald, at Luverne, Minn., and former president of the Minnesota Editorial Association, is enjoying a double felicity. He has just been married and is one of thirty-two men acquitted at Mankato on charges of conspiracy to tar and feather John Meinitz of Luverne, who got in bad with the community by disloyal utterances.

A. E. Bass, publisher of the Bangor (Me.) Daily Commercial, has been elected a director of the Eastern Maine State Fair Association at Bangor.

T. B. Eldridge has been elected mayor of Raleigh, N. C., succeeding the late James I. Johnson. Mr. Eldridge is a former newspaper man, having been editor of the Lexington (N. C.) Dispatch, which he founded, also the Greensboro News, Raleigh Morning Post and Raleigh News and Observer.

Lester W. Humphreys, who took up the practice of law a few years ago after serving as a reporter on several Portland newspapers, has just been appointed United States Attorney for Oregon.

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Major R. Moore, late of the Canadian army, and a former Edmonton newspaper man, is now writing editorials for the Winnipeg Telegram.

C. V. Combe has resigned as editor of the Manitoba Veteran, published at Winnipeg, and has become interested in mining. F. H. Williams, who saw three years service overseas and a former reporter on the Winnipeg Free Press, is acting editor.

Rev. W. B. Norton, for 11 years past religious editor of the Chicago Tribune, has been granted a 12-month leave of absence in order to spend it doing community work for the Inter-Church World Movement of North America. Dr. Norton will, however, continue to despatch to the Tribune stories of affairs and conditions in the lands he is to visit.

William C. Firebaugh, for the past five years assistant librarian of the Chicago Public Library, has been engaged by the Chicago Tribune to manage its office library and expand the scope of its contents.

John L. Spellman, veteran City Hall reporter and for years past on the local run of the Chicago Tribune, has succeeded Shepard Butler as automobile editor, writing "Exhaust Echoes" on the daily sporting page, and "News and Comment of Motordom" in the Sunday edition. Mr. Butler has become assistant Sunday editor.

Sidney Smith, feature cartoonist for the Chicago Tribune, is a proud man nowadays. His comic characters, The Gumps, are shortly to make their debut in animated movies, and there is a popular farce playing in southern Illinois the characters of which are Smith's Andy, Min, Chester, Mother and Uncle Bim.

James McGovern, recently discharged from the Navy after two years transport duty, has joined the editorial staff of the Philadelphia Press.

Sporting Editor J. Wolfe, otherwise known as Jim Nasium, has forsaken the Philadelphia Inquirer for the winter only and has gone to Havana, Cuba, with what he considers a fine team of professional baseball players. The team has engagements lasting until the beginning of the rainy season, when Wolfe will return to Philadelphia.

Miss Jeanne MacConathy, fashion artist of the Philadelphia Inquirer, has sailed for Paris to get fresh ideas about gowns.

Burke H. Sinclair, former city editor of the Omaha World-Herald and later editor of the Sheridan (Wyo.) Enterprise and the Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Leader, is making a conspicuous success as director of industrial relations for the Midwest Refining Company, a big Wyoming concern.

Lieut. Alfred E. Baker, a Kansas City newspaper man, and Miss Frances E. Abernathy were married recently in Coldwater, Kan.

HUBBARD PINS FAITH ON NEWSPAPERS

"WE use about eighty per cent newspaper advertising in our business," said F. G. Hubbard, manager, assistant treasurer and space buyer for Barton, Durstine & Osborn Agency of New York, in talking to a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "and among our clients who are using newspapers in their campaigns at the present time are the General Baking Company, and Upson Company, makers of H.-O. Breakfast Food. Newspapers are being more widely used every day as a national advertising medium."

F. G. HUBBARD

Mr. Hubbard's native state is Minnesota, and his home, Duluth, though for ten or twelve years he has resided in New York, wheer he has been actively identified with the advertising field. From 1909 to 1915 he was with the Lesan Agency in the capacity of assistant treasurer, and has been with Barton, Durstine & Osborn for just about a year.

Mr. Hubbard also lived in Detroit for several years, and there was connected with the Van Patten Company and the Cheltenham Agency, besides handling the national advertising for Chalmers' automobiles.

Mr. Hubbard first started his career with a country newspaper, the South Norwalk (Conn.) Sentinel, where he set type, acted as a reporter, solicited advertising, and did everything, in fact, that came to hand. He says he found it excellent training, which in after years was most helpful. During the period of the war, Mr. Hubbard served his country as a military instructor at Stephens Institute, Hoboken, N. J.

THE BUSINESS OFFICE

William H. Roper, business manager of the Regina (Sask.) Daily Post, has resigned. He was presented with a gold watch by his confreres. Mr. Roper had been connected with the Post since its foundation.

H. B. Williams, for the past six and one-half years with Printers' Ink, has resigned as advertising manager to become vice-president and advertising director of Advertising & Selling Company, Inc. Before joining Printers' Ink Mr. Williams was with the Red Book magazine.

Hugh M. Miller has returned as advertising manager of the Hickory (N. C.) Daily Record. He left the Record at the outbreak of the war and entered service, being stationed nearly all the time at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., where he had charge of the camp printing office. Since his discharge he has been connected with papers in Greenville and Cincinnati.

Charles D. Gibson, former advertising manager of the Great Bend (Kan.) Tribune, and now connected with the Newton Kansan, has been notified of the award of a pension, following the loss of a hand in a grenade explosion at Camp Funston, Kan., in October, 1918. Gibson, drilling a squad, saw that the pin of a hand grenade in the hands of a recruit had been drawn accidentally. Knowing it was about to explode, he took it and attempted to hurl it from the trench, and the grenade went off as it left his hand. He also lost the sight of one eye and was otherwise injured.

NEED OF APPRENTICES IN ADVERTISING

President of A. A. C. W. Calls for "Brass Tacks" Convention in 1920—Executive Committee Meets in Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 25.—While the details have not yet been worked out, it was announced at a dinner in Indianapolis last week that the 1920 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World would be a "brass tacks" affair, and that the program would be confined strictly to the subject of advertising in all of its phases. The dinner was given by the Indianapolis Advertisers' Club to the executive officers of the association and the members of the executive committee, and there were present as guests many of the contributors to the $50,000 convention fund which was raised in Indianapolis. The dinner followed the meeting of the executive board, a telegraph report of which was carried in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of November 20.

Must Train Apprentices

C. D. Murta, president of the Indianapolis Advertisers' Club, called the meeting to order and introduced Felix T. McWhirter, president of the People's State Bank, as toastmaster. Mr. McWhirter assured the visitors that Indianapolis was proud of the fact that the convention was to be held in that city, and that everything that can possibly be done to make it a success will be done by the people of Indianapolis.

E. T. Meredith, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs, the first speaker, said:

"The Associated Advertising Clubs also is an institution for education in advertising. It is to train advertising men and to make new ones. It is to train apprentices in advertising, just as apprentices are trained in other lines of work. If no more apprentices entered the printing trade there would not be a printer alive in this country in thirty-five years. This statement is based on authentic statistics.

"It is the same with advertising. We must train apprentices and make more and better advertising men for the good of advertising and of business. Otherwise, where will the advertising men of the future come from?

"We must tell the boys what to do and how to meet and solve their problems. The young man who spends five years in the advertising business not only gains the benefit of his five years of experience, but he is trained by men who have had ten or twenty years of experience. Therefore, the young man gets not only his own five years, but he also has the benefit of ten or twenty years more of experience, making in all fifteen or twenty-five years. We must not fail to do this, for it means everything to the young man and to advertising in general.

What Sold the Powder?

"It is because we all want to give and take advice that we have decided that the program for the convention shall be of the 'brass tacks' kind.

"That there is much to be learned in advertising is shown by the incident of the man who wished to advertise talcum powder. He went to an advertising agent and told him he wished to spend $20,000 to advertise his powder. The advertising man asked him for copy, but the manufacturer told him he had none—that that was the business of the advertising man.

"'What shall we say about your talcum powder?'" the advertising man asked.

"'Tell them it is pure, and something like that,' the man said.

"The agent refused to do this. Instead, he first decided to ascertain why women bought talcum powder, and he would then appeal to that reason. So he put girls behind the toilet goods counters in stores to ask women why they bought talcum powder. A large majority of the women said they bought it for its odor. They did not care about its purity. Purity, therefore, was not a selling point, and the agent knew it. He had the girls again ask the women why they bought certain brands of talcum powder, and they said they bought it because they liked the box. It looked well on their dressers in their bedrooms. They did not think of purity.

"On comparison being made, the agent found that this manufacturer's powder stood seventh in the list of preferred odors, and that his box was not attractive. He found out all of these things before he started his advertising campaign.

"These are some of the points that we must teach the boys who go in the advertising business.

"Men who study advertising are real students. They are coming here to study advertising and how to sell and move merchandise."

Mayor Jewett of Indianapolis delivered an address of welcome to the coming convention. Other addresses were made by P. S. Florea, secretary; Miss Jane Martin of New York, the only woman who ever was a member of the executive board; Rowe Stewart, of Philadelphia; C. L. Guntz, of Baltimore; John Ring, of St. Louis, and Carl Hunt, extension secretary. Messrs. Rowe, Guntz and Ring told of the value of the conventions to their cities.

PEORIA, Ill., Nov. 25.—The Star has purchased for $70,000 a site on Madison avenue, and has started work on plans for a new building, which when completed will be equipped with practically an entire new outfit of machinery.

"BUTCHERS" OF ENGLISH LISTED BY SUN CHIEF

Head Writers' "Multum in Parvo" Effort Leading Them to Bolshevism—Other Writers Condemned

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 24.—"Butchers" of the English language, as listed by Edward P. Mitchell, editor of the New York Sun, are headline writers, reporters and editorial writers. The head writer is classed as the worst offender, with the reporter running second.

English, as employed in the writing of headlines, has become the "yellow peril to English speech," according to Mr. Mitchell. The use of short words, irrespective of their accuracy, seems to be universal, he said.

Mr. Mitchell read a paper the other evening at Houston Hall, University of Pennsylvania, before the Philadelphia Society for the Promotion of Liberal Studies.

"We used to scan the headlines to glean the news of the day," declared the editor. "But today we are obliged to read the story under the headline to find out what the headline is trying to convey.

Headwriters the Press Bolsheviki

"These harassed, hard-working men who write the headlines are, despite their better selves, rapidly becoming the 'Bolsheviks' one of the greatest and noblest mediums of human expression—the newspaper.

"These architects of anarchy, with their small stock of short words, have suffered a paralysis of straight thinking, and day after day and night after night resort to their slender supply of arbitrary symbols in a topsy-turvy effort to express every shade of meaning in the English language.

"From their small storehouse of lean nouns, slender verbs and slim adjectives they are prostituting the English of that class whose principal source of edification is the modern newspaper.

"In their frenzied search for words short enough to fit into the arbitrary limits of the newspaper column they employ such words as 'probe,' 'grill,' 'vice,' 'nab,' etc., to cover almost every range of human activity, and the results are often startling and grotesque to the lover of accurate English.

"Their atrocious jargon is indeed a yellow peril to the English language."

The speaker compared the headlines on the front pages of modern newspapers with those of forty or fifty years ago, giving statistics.

How Headlines Have Grown

When the New York Times was first published, headlines took up 3½ per cent of the front page, as compared to 36 per cent now; the New York Sun, 1¼ per cent in 1833 to 38 per cent now, and the Tribune ¾ per cent to 30 per cent today.

"The demand of the modern reader and the fierce competition between newspapers of today, have led to the use of even larger and larger, blacker and blacker type in the headline," he continued. "But the newspaper column, which is inelastic, has remained the same width. Hence the headline artist is forced by the circumstances of his calling to maim, mangle, stultify and prostitute the English language in his search for words short enough to fit into the newspaper column."

Mr. Mitchell also paid his respects to the writers who, he said, invented and meaningless sentences and otherwise distorted the English language.

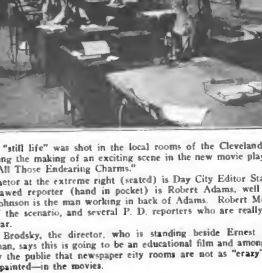
GERMAN DAILIES MERGE ON DECEMBER 1

Staats-Zeitung Will Publish Morning and Sunday, Herold Evening and Sunday, from Herold's Plant

The consolidation that has been pending for several weeks between the New York Staats-Zeitung and the New Yorker Herold, both of which have published evening and Sunday newspapers, will become effective on December 1. The Staats-Zeitung will publish a morning and Sunday paper, and the Herold will publish an evening and Sunday paper.

Both papers will be issued from the Herold plant, and the more valuable location of the Staats-Zeitung, at the corner of William and Spruce streets, will be sold. The Staats-Zeitung will move all its machinery with the exception of some presses to the new publication home, and new exteuple and octuple presses will be ordered to provide for the increased demands of the combined newspapers.

While both publishing corporations will maintain their identities, because they hold other interests not included in the merger, the affairs of the combination will be directed by the following committee: Julius Holz and Felix Arnold of the Herold, and Bernard Ridder, Victor Ridder and Joseph Rieder of the Staats-Zeitung.



Hermann Alexander will remain as editor-in-chief of the Herold and Reinald Schroeder will continue in the same position on the Staats-Zeitung. The editorial and business staffs of the four present papers will be merged and the best men chosen to conduct the new papers. In the merger of mechanical staffs, the union rule of priority will govern the new organization.

Financial details of the merger were not made public.

Agency Opens Omaha Branch

OMAHA, NEB., Nov. 25.—The Potts-Turnbull Advertising Company of Kansas City has opened a branch office here.

Public To See What a City Room Is Really Like

THIS "still life" was shot in the local rooms of the Cleveland Plain Dealer during the making of an exciting scene in the new movie play "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Charms."

The actor at the extreme right (seated) is Day City Editor Stanley Knisely; the over-awed reporter (hand in pocket) is Robert Adams, well known actor. Selmar Johnson is the man working in back of Adams. Robert McLaughlin, the author of the scenario, and several P. D. reporters who are really working, are in the rear.

Sam Brodsky, the director, who is standing beside Ernest Reynolds, the camera man, says this is going to be an educational film and among other things will show the public that newspaper city rooms are not as "crazy" and dirty as they are painted—in the movies.

ELLIS INTRODUCED IN TRUE CRISTY STYLE

Worcester Telegram's New Owner, a Graduate of Its Founder's School, Is Called a Worthy Successor

Some characteristic "hail and farewell" editorial comment appeared in the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, following its sale last week by Austin P. Cristy to Theodore T. Ellis, a brief report of which was given in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of November 20. The leading editorial was entitled "One Work-Day 35 Years Long" and was as follows:

"In the first number of the Daily Telegram, November 30, 1884, there appeared this editorial statement:

The Telegram skips the salutatory. It aims at a salutatory in every line.

"In the first number of the Daily Telegram, May 19, 1886, its owner, who had never been in any newspaper office except his own—and who never has been in any other since, except to call for a minute—had become somewhat more communicative, writing this editorial:

We are here. We come for a specific purpose, to print a newspaper. A newspaper that shall contain all the news; as possible to pack into the columns of the Telegram. This comprehensive program will be strictly followed, without fear of enemies or favor to friends; without truckling to party or creed or cringing before the great of the earth. The truly great are those who read the Telegram and subscribe to its frank and fair statement of facts as they occur. Be truly great.

35 Days Out of 35 Years

"During the 35 years since the first announcement, the writer thereof has been absent less than 35 days. Something less than 24 hours each day has been given to the endeavor to perfect the purposes proposed. He now announces that at the very crest, thus far, of its success, he has sold the Telegram."

Under the title of "The New Owner of the Only," Mr. Ellis was introduced as follows:

"The former owner of the Telegram knows its new owner, emphasizing the declaration 'know.' In spite of the years ing which the former owner administered for years to the young man who now succeeds him, the new owner not only lived, but in a few years after escaping from the 'Old Man', built up a great business of his own and also accumulated a large fortune, though starting with practically no money.

"Far more important than that is the high standing which the new owner has established in the confidence of the business world. Nor will he ever fail reasonable public expectation in his conduct of the Telegram. He takes 'The Only' when it is doing a larger business, probably, than any other newspaper in the United States, published in a city of size similar to Worcester. He will, in the opinion of the former owner, develop and extend the Telegram's great possibilities to their full limit."

Paper Sold for Spot Cash

Mr. Ellis paid spot cash for the Telegram and organized a new company under the laws of Massachusetts, known as the Worcester Telegram Publishing Company. The capital of the new company is $1,000,000, of which $600,000 was issued for cash. The common non-voting stock, valued at $400,000, is held by Dr. Homer Gage, Frank A. Drury, Charles L. Allen, Lucius J. Knowles, Paul B. Morgan and George L. Rockwood. Mr. Ellis holds the voting common stock, valued at $300,000. The directors of the corporation are: President, treasurer and publisher, Mr. Ellis; directors, Mr. Ellis, Dr. Gage, Mr. Drury, Mr. Rockwood and Frank C. Smith, Jr.

When a Boston Sunday Post reporter interviewed Mr. Cristy the other day, one of the details that the reporter secured was the newspaper creed of this well known New England editor—a creed which the men in his office have called Cristy's Rubaiyat. It was this:

"Get the news—get all the news!
Get it in full detail. Get all sides quickly, and above all else correctly! Let there be no favoritism.
Serve the public absolutely!
Be sure you have all the facts, that you have them right; then hustle them into copy, into early copy.
Written in the clear, quick language of the living. Get the news—get all the news."

WARNS AGAINST I. E. A.

Wisconsin Newspaper Men Do Not Support Begging Campaign

WAUSAU, WIS., Nov. 21.—As a result of solicitation here by a representative of the International Editorial Association, the Daily Record-Herald last week ran the following at the head of its editorial columns under the caption "Warning":

"If any reader of the Record-Herald is approached by a man claiming to be a representative of the International Editorial association, or any other organization with a similar name, with a request for contributions for the payment of the expenses of a state convention to be held at Milwaukee this month, or for the support of a national home for disabled newspaper men to be built at Basic, Va., please refuse his request and telephone this office. The newspaper men of Wisconsin are not asking for donations for either purpose."

SAY RADICALS OWN UNION

Reporters on Regular Dailies Withdraw Their Names.

SEATTLE, Nov. 21.—On the ground that the Seattle Newspaper Writers' Union is dominated by "Red" radicals employed on the Daily Union Record, Seattle newspaper men generally have refused to recognize the organization or to treat with it in any way. The few members of the staffs of the Seattle Star and Post-Intelligencer who joined the union at its organization have withdrawn their membership and only employes of the Union Record now compose the membership.

At the meeting held for the election of officers this week, S. P. Donihoe, formerly on the copy desk of the Post-Intelligencer, who resigned to join the Union Record staff, was elected president of the news writers' union. All other officers were members of the Union Record staff.

HOPKINS AGENCY STAFF DINES

Advertising Men Celebrate Firm's Second Anniversary

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Nov. 25.—Celebrating the second anniversary of the Hopkins Advertising Agency, George W. Hopkins, head of that organization, recently entertained the members of his staff at a dinner held in the Cafe Metropolitan.

At the dinner were George W. Hopkins, president; Waldo P. Hourihn, head of the copy department; William J. Shaver, head of the publicity department; Adolphe L. G. Barreaux, head of the art department; Mrs. Anne Burdick, office manager, and Mrs. W. P. Houchins.

WHY NOT A LESSON FROM THE PAST?

Far Ecocomy's Sake, Compare the Newspaper of Today With That of Some Years Ago

By Frank D. McLain.

Proprietors and publishers of daily newspapers who are confronted with vexatious problems on account of the high cost of labor and of white paper might learn a few facts for their guidance if they would compare the newspapers of today with the product of the press some years back.

Such a comparison will reveal that while publishers have advanced the price of newspapers to the readers, the price having been generally doubled, they are giving to the readers nearly three times as much reading matter as in the olden days, and if one well-known paper may be taken as a criterion the paper itself is more than five times as large as in former years.

One Cent's Worth in 1877

When the Philadelphia Record first sold for one cent on June 1, 1877, the newspaper consisted of only four pages and each page had eight columns, the length of the column being 22 inches. A copy of the same paper, dated November 21, 1919, selling for two cents, consists of 20 pages of eight columns each, the length of the column being 24 inches.

Thus, while the price of the newspaper has doubled, the size of the publication has increased from 32 columns to 160 columns of greater length.

The price of the newspapers has increased 100 per cent; the size of the newspaper has increased 400 per cent.

In quantity therefore, the reader today is getting more than twice as much for his money as he did 42 years ago.

Careful examination of the issue of June 1, 1877, shows that the 32 columns comprising the paper were divided into 13 columns and 4 inches of advertisements and 18 columns and 18 inches of reading matter. The excess of reading matter over advertisements was 5 columns and 14 inches.

Taking up the issue of November 21, 1919, it is seen that the 160 columns are divided into 108 columns of advertisements and 52 columns of reading matter, an increase of 33½ columns of reading matter and an increase of 94 colnmns and 20 inches of advertising, the excess of advertising over reading matter being 56 columns.

Departments Cause Growth

One great cause for the growth of reading matter in the newspapers is the establishment of departments. The issue of 1877 had but one department, financial and commercial, in which the reading matter was longer than in current issues, but far more space is devoted today to quotations, chiefly because of the increased number of active stocks and bonds which are traded in daily.

Forty years ago the sports department, now calling for pages of detailed reports of games, was unknown. Society and fashion departments did not exist. here weer no cartoons or strips of "funnies." The lack of departments did not mean that news of importance was overlooked, but no space was given to trivial events.

Publishers of today must take notice of the space now devoted to "heads." Men on the copy desk work with the idea of selling the paper and to achieve this purpose make use of long display heads extending across the columns, sometimes with a long binder line. In the issue of 1877 no display head was over one column in width nor more than 1½ inches in depth.

In the issue of 1877 no display advertisement was over two columns wide and six inches was the greatest depth, all save one of the display advertisements running from 3½ to 5 inches. Current advertising includes offerings of six department stores, each covering from 5 to 7 columns in width and being nearly one column in length.

From a position where the reading matter exceeded the advertising in 1877 the newspaper has changed so that the space devoted to advertising is more than double the reading matter.

Copy Desk Must Cut News

During recent years foreign and domestic news service has wonderfully improved. The world now has educated itself to an interest in a larger territory and the cables are filling this requirement. All news may be edited down. All display heads may be curtailed. Here is a great work for the copy editors and head writers and the quality of the batteries of such employes should be keyed up to the highest pitch to effect economy.

There is much room for curtailment of such departments as are not direct produeers of revenue.

Instead of increasing the price of newspapers to readers, would it not be well for publishers to check up every column of their publications to ascertain where economy may be prudently practiced?

Competition may have made them too profligate with their space!

Sunday Edition During Winter

Daytona, Fla., Nov. 23.—Commencing December 14, the Daily News will inaugurate a Sunday morning edition for four months of the year, during the tourist season, when the News, which is a year-round afternoon paper, branches out by adding the full leased wire service of the Associated Press. For the Sunday morning edition the Universal Service will be used. T. E. Fitzgerald, president of the Associated Dailies of Florida, and also president of the Florida Press Association, is editor and general manager of the Daily News.

"WE BOYS" STEAL U. P. NAME; GO TO JAIL

Lautman Had Victimized Many Bankers, Exporters and Steel Man Under Title of "United Press Service"

A new get-rich-quick graft, numbering big bankers, exporters and steel company officials as victims, was revealed in New York on November 21 in the arrest and indictment of A. Albert Lautman, masquerading under the name of the "United Press Service"—a play upon the name of the United Press Associations. The indictment contained two counts: Obtaining $250 under false pretenses from the Liberty National Bank of New York and attempting to obtain $500 by false pretenses from the Liberty Steel Products Company.

Evidence was secured indicating that in the last six months Lautman got large sums from his victims by trading on the name of the United Press Associations, the telegraphic news service generally known as the "United Press" or the "U. P." During this time he handled approximately $50,000 through his account in the Guaranty Trust Company.

The Man Who Won the War

Lautman operated by obtaining subscription to a chimerical book known as "The Scribes Review of America, 1914-1919," which he represented to be a sort of Blue Book of the biggest coerns in New York and which was to be sent to newspapers throughout the country. It was to comprise a record, he said, of the achievements of the captains of industry in their work in aiding to win the war.

Lautman created the "United Press Service" on April 18 last, with a small office at 115 Broadway, New York. Shortly afterward "The Scribes Review of America, 1914-1919," was evolved.

Lautman's practice was to phone for an appointment with the head of a big bank, exporting concern or steel corporation, representing himself as "city editor of the United Press."

Lautman would appear in person at the appointed hour and offer the prospective victim the privilege of having his concern "written up" in the "Scribes Review of America, 1914-1919"—"not as an advertisement, my dear sir, but as an opportunity." He offered a contract stating that it would be sent to "all papers receiving the Associated Press service and the United Press service." The names of the Associated Press and United Press were printed in heavy black type so as to catch the eye. In his conversation, however, he dwelt upon the wide publicity to be given in "our papers." For this the victim was asked to pay only from $250 to $1,000, the average being about $500.

He Got Away With This, Too

Lautman scraped acquaintance with one of his victims by attending the recent dinner to Judge Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation at the Hotel Commodore. Carefully avoiding the real newspaper men, he protested that he had not received the "United Press tickets," within the hearing of his victim. The steel man was convinced that Lautman must have some important connection with the United Press. A few days later Lautman called at his office, referred to the incident, and obtained a check for $500.

Lautman attempted to victimize several other big corporations, but the United Press Associations learned of his operations, warned them and they, in turn, assisted in obtaining the evidence which resulted in the indictment.

SELECTING SALESMEN FOR CLASSIFIED

found that the older man makes the best producer for Classified Advertising. Of course, there are exceptions and you will find, that some young men are very apt.

"In regard to boys just out of high school being successful in selling classified advertising, will say that I have found that class not very good. I always prefer the married man, because he is more dependable," W. A. Smith, advertising manager of the Spokane Press, wants experienced men and finds older men just as good producers as youngsters. He says:

"It is necessary to have a man of newspaper experience to sell classified advertising. This does not necessarily mean an experienced advertising solicitor, but a man who understands a newspaper.

"In my experience I have found old men just as good producers as men much younger in years. It is all in the man, not in his age that brings in results for this department. An advertising manager to select capable classified solicitors must, first of all, understand men."

Young married men are the choice of John A. Priddy, advertising manager of the Worcester Telegram. He writes:

"My experience both as classified advertising manager and advertising manager convinces me that in the classified department the best solicitors are young married men, preferably under twenty-six.

"Young men who are married have the incentive to work that the unmarried man lacks—also the young married classified solicitor has ever before him the hope of landing in the display department at an increase in salary.

"It is a mistake to keep a man constantly on classified. My best results came from a turnover of entire staff every two years, releasing men to the display department on our own or other newspapers at the end of about two years' service. High school boys are, as a rule, very poor solicitors."

The Excelsior Springs (Mo.) Call has increased to 40 cents per month because of increased labor costs and paper.

SPACE BUYERS TOLD OF PAPER SHORTAGE

Jason Rogers Tells Advertisers in Three Cities That Smaller Space at Higher Rates Is Good Business Insurance

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, has just returned from a trip through the Middle West in an endeavor to have advertisers co-operate with local newspapers in reducing the consumption of print paper.

"I sincerely believe that if the daily newspapers of the country would follow up the lead made by me in Aurora, St. Louis and Cincinnati that it would more effectively curtail the use of print paper than by much conference and conciliation between the newspaper publishers in the various cities," said Mr. Rogers.

"In each of the cities I addressed the advertising club with presumably representatives of both retail and manufacturing concerns," continued Mr. Rogers, "and I frankly told them among other things about the print paper shortage and how it was going to be good business for them to co-operate.

"I told my audiences that unless advertisers were willing to temporarily use less space and pay a higher rate for it, they would force rates to a much higher basis from which it would be a very difficult and long range effort to reduce them.

Do Not Pass Costs On

"Without gloves my audiences were told regarding the superiority of localized national advertising in daily newspapers as compared with other publications. They were shown that of all mediums the newspapers had made the least advance in rates and passed none of the increased cost to the buying public.

"I showed them that the average of all advances in advertising rates by newspapers was between 15 and 20 per cent with 100 per cent or more to the reader, while most other mediums had advanced advertising rates from 50 to 150 per cent and very slightly or none at all to the reader.

"It was a great pleasure to be able to thus address these hundreds of smart and aggressive business men on newspaper and advertising topics of vital interest to them, and I am sure that after I was through with them it was much easier for the local newspaper men to get them to act reasonably.

Should Be Missionaries

"I have been asked to visit other cities for the same purpose and will be kept fairly busy for all the open dates I have until January 1st. I suggest that other metropolitan publishers render the same sort of service in the general cause.

"In my talks I suggested that local retailers temporarily reduce their use of space at least 50 per cent and in increased rate of 25 to 50 per cent as the best sort of business insurance. I suggested a limit of 16 columns from any advertiser and not over 6 columns in any issue.

"From my contact with the local newspapers in the cities visited and in letters received from them since my return, I am confident that such strong and direct personal message from an outside source will make it all the easier for them to produce the saving they must make.

Favors 3-Cent Daily

"I am strongly in favor of 3 cent daily and 10 cent Sunday newspapers with stated fixed maximum standards of reading matter for both as the sane process for getting out of the blind alley in which many newspapers without any print paper supply now find themselves.

"Unless the big users in our large cities are willing to make the sacrifice by the most rigid sort of economics in use I can see little hope in the situation. The enormous Sunday waste and daily newspapers over 24 pages should be discouraged by public opinion.

"A survey of the hoardings of some of the big fellows and exposure would do much to show where much tonnage has been removed from use by those seeking to play safe regardless of the rights and demands of the situation.

"To be perfectly frank I do not expect anything worth-while to come from the A. N. P. A. any more than in 1917 and 1918. Those who direct its activities through hand picked committees occasionally make some noise but really accomplish very little.

"Instead of discussing and deciding upon a definite policy at the recent meeting every suggestion offered was referred to a "committee to be appointed." Not one of the great New York newspapers had anything definite to say at the meeting except one which stated that it owned its own mill and was not interested."

"Unless the big users and big wasters will make sacrifice nothing will be accomplished. I presented figures showing how many of the New York newspapers declined to comply with the War Industry Board's conservation order and what they were doing today."

Agency Enlarges Quarters

Calkins & Holden of New York, with handsome offices at 250 Fifth Avenue, have become so overcrowded as to require additional room to the extent of the entire fourth floor of the building. The purchasing, financial, art and manufacturing departments are now located there.

James Cooper, former political editor of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, is now on the staff of the Inquirer.

THREAT OF CENSORSHIP BY SEATTLE UNIONS

Post-Intelligencer Employes Condemn Advertising and Editorial Policy on Labor—"P. I." Prints Full Resolution

SEATTLE, Nov. 21. — Action that verges on the invocation of a censorship of news and advertisements accepted by their employers, together with a veiled threat to desert their posts unless their wishes are obeyed, was taken by members of the mechanical department of the Post-Intelligencer this week at a meeting held in the composing room of the paper during the lunch period in the night shift.

The meeting and adoption of resolutions condemning the policy of the paper followed the publication of several front-page editorials severely scoring organized labor for permitting itself to fall under "red" leadership, also acceptance of, an advertisement paid for by Edwin Selvin, publisher of a local financial trade paper, which, in the view of the union employes, tended to incite trouble.

The advertisement appeared only in the "bulldog" edition and was quickly killed by Editor James A. Wood as soon as it came to his attention and without any suggestion from anyone.

The resolutions adopted by the P. I. union employes follows:

"As members of the several trades unions employed in the production of your newspaper, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, we make the following representations:

"We have been patient under misrepresentation, faithful in the face of slander, long suffering under insult; we have upheld our agreements and produced your paper, even though at no advance we were braiding the rope with which you propose to hang us; day after day we have printed type, reprinted, printed and mailed calumny after calumny, lie after lie, insult after insult.

"Little by little, as our patience seemed to be unbounded, your editorial business policy has encroached upon and further and further overstepped the bounds, not only of fairness and truth, but decency and Americanism itself. We have seen meekly witnessed your unfair and unbelievable campaign of falsehood and rein result in the suppression of the last medium of honest expression for our cause in Seattle (referring to Daily Union Record), not only denying our brothers the means of livelihood but denying us a fair press.

"So long as these things appeared to be a part of your unfair fight against organization —our patience endured and others—we have been able to endure them in the hope that at last truth must prevail.

"But there must be a limit to all things.

"In the page advertisement in the Post-Intelligencer, Nov. 18, 1919, purporting, to have been written and paid for by one Selvin, but which had as well have occupied the position in your paper usually taken up by your editorial page, your utter depravity as a newspaper, your shameless disregard of the laws of the land, your hatred of opposition, your cowardly pulling of apart to the passion of citizenry, reached depths of malice and moral gangrene hitherto unbelievable, of which nothing less than excition in violence, stark and naked intimidation.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the whole committee of your mechanical employes in meeting assembled, that if your business manager shall demand reinstatement of its organized agency, if your editorial directing heads must remain blind to the things they are being asked to, if together you cannot see the abyss to which you are leading us and all of you, that we no more love for our common country than is manifested in your efforts to plunge us and every clearly proved our faith in America and its institutions—we must, not because we are unionists, but because we are Americans, find means to protect ourselves from the stigma of having aided and abetted your campaign of destruction.

The resolutions were published in full on the front page of the paper, as requested by the employes. The only comment added by the publishers was the following:

"Although the fact is not included in the foregoing resolutions, the Post-Intelligencer confidently refers to any member of the committee or any of its mechanical departments for confirmation of the statement that the Selvin advertisement was 'killed' on Monday evening by the editor of the Post-Intelligencer of his own volition and as quickly as it came to his attention. The fact that it escaped for his attention by any objection from the mechanical department of the paper had already been made up to the time the order was given to exclude the advertisement from later editions.

"The Post-Intelligencer as confidently expects similar confirmation of the fact that the editorial expulsion of the advertisement was applauded by Webster Jones, the labor representation of protest having been made by any of the employes of the paper until the adoption of the foregoing resolutions.

The controversy between the publishers and their unionized employes, being of a peculiarly unusual nature, is being widely watched.

F. W. HALSEY, EDITOR AND AUTHOR, DEAD

Served New York Times 22 Years and Was Prominent as Lecturer and Writer of Many Good Books

Francis Whiting Halsey, aged 68, newspaper editor, author, historian and lecturer, died on November 24. Mr. Halsey's latest work was the editing of a two-volume history of the European war, and it is said that overwork on this undertaking contributed to the illness which caused his death.

Mr. Halsey, for twenty-two years prior to 1902 a member of the editorial staff of the New York Times, and the first editor of the New York Times Saturday Review, was born at Unadilla, N. Y., October 15, 1851. He was a brother of Frederick Arthur Halsey, also a well known author.

Prepared for college in his native village, where his father for fifty years practiced medicine, Mr. Halsey graduated from Cornell University. In his senior year he took one of the prizes for an essay in English literature.

About two months after his graduation, in 1873, Mr. Halsey went to Binghamton, where he edited the Times. He remained there for two years, when he obtained a position on the New York Tribune, where he prepared obituaries of famous men, wrote letters from the World's Fair in Paris, and contributed book reviews and news articles to the literary department, until 1880, when he became a member of the staff of the New York Times. He was for several years foreign editor and writer of book reviews and was later made literary editor, succeeding Charles de Kay, whom President Cleveland appointed Consul General to Berlin.

When the Saturday Review was established in 1896, Mr. Halsey was placed in charge and remained in this position until 1902, when he became literary adviser of the publishing house of D. Appleton & Company. Three years later he went with Funk & Wagnalls Company in a similar capacity and continued his connection with that house until his death.

Mr. Halsey was well known as a lecturer, having lectured before New York and New Jersey historical societies, students of Columbia and Princeton, on the Chautauqua platform and before many other bodies.

He was the author of a number of book.

Obituary

Hon. F. L. Carter-Cotton, founder of the Vancouver News-Advertiser, died in Vancouver on November 20, aged seventy-six. Born in England, he settled in Vancouver in 1886 and in 1887 established the News-Advertiser, which he conducted until 1910. In 1890 he entered the legislature of British Columbia, was for a time Minister of Finance and later Commissioner of Works. He has also held various other public offices and was first Chancellor of the University of British Columbia. As editor of the News-Advertiser, he was regarded as one of the ablest writers in Western Canada.

Mrs. Nellie M. Manson, mother of Frank W. Manson, editor and general manager of the Waterville (Me.) Sentinel, died last week at her home in Waterville.

Charles E. Walton, for several years connected with the circulation department of the Cleveland Press, died November 17 from acute indigestion. Lately he was employed by the Cleveland Board of Education

Reuben V. Jacobs, aged 53, head of the proof-reading department of the Philadelphia Press for ten years, died suddenly November 23 in the Jewish Hospital. Mr. Jacobs was suffering from double-pneumonia, and was sent to the hospital the day before he died. Before going to the Press, he read proof on the Evening Bulletin.

William B. Fitzpatrick, aged 55, for the last 17 years in the composing room of the Philadelphia Ledger and the Evening Ledger, died November 22 of pneumonia in the Presbyterian Hospital, Philadelphia.

John Edward Flaherty, four-day-old son of Lieut. and Mrs. Thomas F. Flaherty, died in the Norwalk (Conn.) hospital November 29. The father has been a newspaper man for eight years and at present is in New York trade journal work.

B. R. Blankenship, well known Texas newspaper man, died recently at El Paso, where he had gone for his health. Mr. Blankenship was for a time connected with the Clarendon (Texas) College and later was editor and publisher of newspapers in various parts of the state.

Shikao Shiraishi, aged 31, a Japanese student at Westminister College at Fulton, Mo., who was preparing himself for editorial work in Japan, died this week.

Conover Heads New England Agents

Boston, Nov. 25.—S. A. Conover of the S. A. Conover Company, Boston, has been elected chairman of the New England council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. John J. Morgan of the Morgan Advertising Agency is the new vice-chairman.

Prizes for Want Ad Stories

Wichita, Kan., Nov. 18.—The Eagle began a contest last week offering cash prizes amounting to $70, for the best letters on what its want ads have done for the readers of the paper. The contest closes November 22.

JAPANESE JOURNALIST HERE FOR IDEAS

R. Onishi, of the Jiji Shimpo, of Tokyo, Has Covered Two Peace Conferences, Portsmouth and Paris

R. Onishi, who represented the Jiji Shimpo, of Tokyo, at the Peace Conference, is in New York for a short stay before returning to Japan. Mr. Onishi is investigating American newspaper methods—particularly accounting systems—with a view to adapting these to Japanese needs.

He is also conferring with exporters and with advertising authorities with the purpose of developing American advertising for the Jiji, believing that just now there is an unprecedented opportunity for the introduction of American goods in Japan.

Mr. Onishi joined the staff of Jiji in 1900, and was later assigned to cover the Portsmouth Peace Conference for that newspaper. At that time he was honored by an invitation to discuss with President Roosevelt various aspects of the Far Eastern question. While of course the subject matter of this interview was not for publication, Mr. Onishi recalls the occasion as one of the outstanding events in his career as a journalist.

"Naturally I was deeply impressed with your great President," he says. "His intimate understanding of Far Eastern problems surprised me. While it was not possible for me to quote the President I gained the impression that this interview gave me a new appreciation of American friendship for Japan, and of the need for cordial relations between our peoples to assure the mutual welfare."

After reporting the Portsmouth Peace Conference Mr. Onishi remained in the United States for many years, purchasing a ranch in Texas. He still owns property there. Having returned to Tokyo and resumed his old connection with Jiji, Mr. Onishi was assigned to report the Paris Conference for that newspaper.

The Jiji Shimpo is perhaps the most influential Japanese newspaper. It was established in 1882 by Yukichi Fukuzawa, one of the great figures in modern Japanese life. Through his newspaper Mr. Fukuzawa contributed greatly to the intellectual development of the people, on the principles of Western civilization. After his death, in 1901, he was succeeded by his son, Stejiro Fukuzawa, a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who directs the policy of the Jiji on the same progressive and liberal policies as established by his father. The newspaper is thoroughly independent, as Mr. Fukuzawa has always declined political honors and devotes himself solely to the conduct of the Jiji.

The Jiji Shimpo has both morning and evening editions in Tokyo and in Osaka, with circulations corresponding closely to those of metropolitan newspapers in the United States. The exact figures are not given for publication, as old conditions still rule in these matters in Japan, and it is argued that publicity for the circulation figures of a truth-telling newspaper would merely afford a standard on which papers of the "claim-everything" kind could base false comparisons.

WANTED AND FOR SALE

HARTFORD GLOBE IS SOLD TO COURANT

Suspended As a Result of Struggle for Associated Press Sunday Franchise Between Local Dailies

HARTFORD, CONN., Nov. 25.—On November 23 the Sunday Globe published its final issue after a continuous career since 1876. The stock of the Globe Publishing Company has been acquired by the Hartford Courant, and John E. Dennis, publisher of the Globe, has been engaged by the Courant in an editorial capacity.

It is understood by Hartford newspaper men that the deal is a phase of the struggle between the Courant and C. L. Sherman, who left the Courant some months ago to become managing editor of the Times. The Times, it is said, has been negotiating for the purchase of the Globe in order to secure a morning franchise for the Associated Press service, with which the Times could enter the Sunday field in competition with the Courant.

Had Many Owners

The Sunday Globe was founded in 1876, when there was a good deal of opposition to Sunday newspapers. The first publisher was C. W. Griswold, who was also engaged in a mercantile business as his main activity. Two years later the property was purchased by Charles C. Hubbard of Middletown; in 1883 it was acquired by Allen Willey, and in 1895 was sold to Emil and William Lanke and Edward J. Andrews, who retained their interest until last April, when a syndicate composed of Thomas J. Spellacy, Alexander Troup and John E. Gray acquired the property, retaining John E. Dennis as editor and publisher. From 1907 to 1918 Frank G. McCumber was managing editor of the Globe.

Among those well known in newspaper, magazine and advertising circles who have been connected with the Globe are: Philip Curtiss, author of 'The Ladder'; Richardson Wright, editor of the House Beautiful; Thomas Flanagan, vice-president of the Allen Advertising Service; J. McClure Bellows, dramatic editor of the St. Paul Pioneer-Press; William Rich Cross, vice-president of the Wales Agency; Francis T. Miller, editor of the Journal of American History; John Rodemeyer, editor of the Rural New Yorker.

NEW BUILDING FOR GLOBE

Toronto Paper Starts Construction of Long Planned Addition

TORONTO, Nov. 26.—Work has commenced on the enlargement of the Globe office on Young street. A year ago the Globe Printing Company acquired the building adjoining its present office. This is now being virtually demolished and a new structure uniform in appearance with the existing building will be erected. Its construction will give 27½ feet additional frontage and will provide much needed floor space in all departments.

The basement will be utilized for paper storage; the ground floor for extension of the business offices and mailing department, and the first and second floors for enlargement of the editorial offices and composing room, respectively. In the basement, foundations are now in for the new high speed press recently ordered to replace one of the older machines in the Globe's battery.

RETURN SEIZED LABOR PAPER

Search Warrant Quashed, Owners Reopen Union-Record Plant

(BY TELEGRAPH)

SEATTLE, Nov. 26.—After being in possession of government officers for a week the plant of the Daily Union Record was returned to its owners, the search warrant being quashed by the local United States Commissioner. The paper resumed publication after being out of the field during the term of seizure, except for a few small sized editions printed at a job plant. The search warrant was quashed on the ground that it was used to make the seizure in the second raid when the United States officers, after the first raid, returned the plant to its owners following the removal of all files and records. It was held that the warrant was exhausted after the first raid.

The paper was still prohibited from the use of the mails. Editor E. B. Ault and Directors G. P. Listman and F. P. Rust are out on bail on charges of publishing inflammatory editorials, following the Centralia outrage, and the Federal grand jury now is considering evidence in use.

Union newsboys of Seattle, at a special meeting held following the seizure of the Record plant and the arrests of its publishers on charges of publishing inflammatory statements, voted to refuse to handle the Record on their "corners" until that publication "became Americanized."

Enlarging Johnstown Plant

JOHNSTOWN, PA., Nov. 26.—The addition to the building of the Daily Democrat is nearing completion. It is of fireproof construction, having not a stick of wood or other inflammable material in it except for the wood block floor of the new press room, in which a 24-page tubular press is to be installed about the first of the year. The building when completed will be seven stories in height, with a frontage on Main street of 40 and a depth of 132. It is the intention eventually to build around and over the present structure and to add 5 stories to the new building, now not far from completion. A waterproof basement will add to the available floor space.

MANY STAFF CHANGES IN SYRACUSE

Herald, Journal and Post-Standard Get New Blood and Establish Universal Copy Desk

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 25.—The personnel of the local newspaper forces, particularly the editorial end, has undergone extensive changes during the last few weeks. This applies most to the Herald and Journal, evening newspapers, although the Post-Standard, morning sheet of the city, has made a few changes.

All three papers have recently abandoned the various desk departments and have installed the universal copy system.

With the resignation of James E. Boyd, Associate assistant superintendent of public works for the state, Frank W. Clark became managing editor of the Herald with W. P. Plummer as news editor and Thomas A. Power as city editor. George W. O'Hara, returned veteran of the 27th division, is now Sunday editor.

Charles McTigue, formerly Sunday editor of the Albany Knickerbocker Press and more recently managing editor of the Albany Argus, took the seat at the head of the copy desk. Other new blood on the desk includes Charles F. Kernan, formerly of the New York American and just honorably discharged after long service in France with an American Ambulance unit, C. F. Kinney, formerly of the News, Evening News and the Knickerbocker Press, Russell Owen, who came here from the New York Sun.

Fred Spalding last Saturday left the Herald copy desk to return to Cleveland, where he will again enter the employ of the News.

The Herald reporting staff has made several additions. C. Fred Betts, of Fremont Hadley, Robert Chryst and Frank Early are back after service in the army. Miss Marion Deuther, who had long service in Buffalo, and John Wanhope, a former New York writer and more recently with the Journal here, were added to the force.

B. G. Phillips, formerly of the New York Herald, after receiving his discharge from the army, reported to the Syracuse Herald as photographer, replacing William Dunham, resigned.

The Syracuse Journal practically made a swap of sporting editors. Robert Kenefick, long in charge of sports for the Herald, went over to the Journal, while James Leahy is now with the Herald.

Changes at the Journal plant have been nearly as numerous as at the Herald. Sidney Whipple, former Boston special writer, is now managing editor, having sueceeded Frank Chase, who gave up the desk after a serious illness, but who is now back on duty as a contributor to the editorial page.

Louis Burrill, discharged after two years service in the Navy, is the Journal city editor. Harry Stearns, long telegraph editor for the Herald, is now on the Journal copy desk.

J. Burr Bell, financial writer of 15 years' local experience, is among the new names added to the Journal payroll and Charles Feldman is another newspaper man of long standing here who is now drawing a weekly envelope from the Journal.

R. W. Parker and Stanton Jennings, both discharged as lieutenants after war service of more than a year, are back on the street as reporters.

Frank Redmond, for several years photographer for the Journal, is leaving newspaper work, having secured a position with the Semet-Solvay Company.

Clyde Wagener, formerly managing editor of the Schenectady Union-Star, has reported for copy desk duty to the Post-Standard staff.

J. Fenton Pheips, who resigned as Post-Standard sporting editor, is in the publishing department of the H. H. Franklin company. His place was taken by Birney P. Lynch who held the position for several years before entering the army two years ago. J. Stevenson of Ithaca is serving as Mr. Lyneh's assistant.

Phillip Perkins, with the Journal for several years before war was declared and who has recently been discharged from army service, has been added to the Post-Standard's reporting staff, as has Marjorie Tooke, a Y. M. C. A. canteen worker in France, who was formerly with the Herald.

Demand End of Alien Press

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 25.—The local chapter of the American Officers of the Great War has this week passed a resolution calling for the immediate adoption by the Senate of a law to "deport all traitorous publishers and scrap all printing plants which are now disease nests to Americanism." Copies of the resolution are to be sent to Congress, the Attorney General, Senators and Representatives from Philadelphia, and the Governor and Attorney General of Pennsylvania.

Have buyer for an eastern daily newspaper property to cost $50,000 or less. Preferably a property susceptible of considerable development. Politics immaterial. Proposition T. P.

Consolidation

is the recognized route to large returns in nearly every line of commercial industry.

We believe that publishing properties offer one of the most attractive of all the fields for merger and consolidation.

We have a record of results in this difficult work that you should investigate.

HOW NEWS PRINT IS BEING CONSERVED

News increased advertising rates 10 per cent; still following war time regulations; reduced size first edition from 12 to 8 pages; increased circulation rates 5 cents per month.

Times increased advertising rates 20 per cent; discontinued one street edition; cut size of sporting extra four pages; increased price of circulation 5 cents per month and street sale copies one cent each.

Denver weeklies have increased advertising rates approximately seven and one-half per cent. Colorado dailies outside of Denver are still following wartime regulations and have cut off exchanges and deadheads. Colorado weeklies have increased advertising rates approximately ten per cent.; have cut off exchanges and deadheads.

S. S. Sherman, managing editor of the Denver News, has been appointed A. N. P. A. regional director on news print situation for Colorado and will soon call a meeting of publishers to take further steps in matter.

WICHITA, KAN.—The Eagle had to lock its doors and refuse to answer the telephones on November 18 because the advertising facilities were so overcrowded that they were unable to handle more. The office of the Eagle was closed at 6 o'clock at night, instead of 8, as usual. No telephone advertising was accepted, and in addition the paper, while increasing its size, was unable to handle all the business in hand.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—A score or more of the leading newspapers of the middle west will raise their advertising rates from 10 to 50 cents an inch, following a conference of advertising managers of the various papers at the meeting of the Mid-west Newspaper Advertising Managers' Association here this week. The increase is due largely, it is said, to the scarcity of white news print.

In addition to the increase in rates, the larger advertisers of the papers will have their space needs cut in order to take care of the smaller accounts. The increase, whenever necessary, will be advanced without notice to advertisers, it was agreed.

Some of the newspapers, it was reported to the meeting, have had to cut down their type from 8 point to 6 point, in order to conserve news print. Other papers have increased their columns from 7 to 8, cut down margins, and in other ways conserved space. Some papers have cut down the length of local and telegraph stories, it was reported, while others are eliminating comics, features, and even cutting down the editorial page and other regular features.

The increased rates, it was said, will be put into effect before January 1, next. Six states, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Nebraska and Iowa, are represented in the membership.

The following were present: H. E. Dreier, Oklahoma City Times; J. J. McClellan, Joplin Globe; A. L. Shuman, Ft. Worth Star-Telegram; L. R. Boosinger, W. B. Flowers, Topeka Capital and Capper Publications; H. A. Sprague, St. Joseph News-Press; E. E. Hardwick, Wichita Eagle, and C. C. Rosewater, K. C. Journal. Mr. Dreier is president.

The next session will be held in Fort Worth in February, 1920.

TULSA, OKLA.—Until relief from the print paper shortage is evident, the Democrat has announced that news stories will be ent in quantity only and the stories told in the fewest possible words. The comic and features sections of the Democrat will be temporarily abandoned until the shortage is over. With the number of pages restricted, advertising space and news space also were cut down. The editorial page was omitted on several occasions and the type was of smaller face, so as to get in more words per column. The Democrat announces that it has been unable to carry more than 40 per cent of the advertising offered during the past few months.

PHILADELPHIA.—Nothing has been done in Philadelphia to meet the news print situation. No increase in subscription rates is expected, although it is considered likely that advertising rates will be advanced the first of the year. No one with authority to make a statement on plans being considered by publishers here will discuss the question at this time.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Newspapers here are still observing all the war-time regulations regarding print paper; no returns are allowed nor no free exchanges.

The News and Times have abolished night extra editions to save paper.

The news recently reduced the size of issues to save six pages a week and is rejecting advertising every day, one day recently omitting 118 columns.

The News announced last Saturday an increase of two cents a line on all foreign advertising and an increase for local business is under consideration. Amount of reading matter has been reduced to the lowest possible ratio.

The Star will, on December 1st, increase the price of the Sunday Star from eight to ten cents a copy and it is also considering an increase in the local and foreign advertising rates, but has not definitely decided.

All the local papers are using the pyramid make-up and say it saves much space and paper.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Publishers here are taking no concerted action to retrench on their use of news print. There were several discussions recently on the question of increased subscriptions rate, but the proposal of one of the afternoon papers advancing the rate a cent is remote. A year and a half ago the Times-Leader went up to two cents, and a year ago this month, the Union followed suit. The Register has been a two-cent paper.

While rates for display advertisements have increased the volume is even greater than before the war.

The Reporter, New Haven's fifth paper, which will appear as a two-cent morning daily and three cents on Sunday as soon as its press is installed, will be run as an eight or twelve page paper. John T. Flynn, instrumental in the creation of the News Writers' Equity Association, will be the publisher. Mr. Flynn claims to have enough news print on hand to last three months.

The Connecticut Daily Newspaper Publishers Association met here November 26 to discuss the newsprint situation and a vote urging economy in the use of newsprint was passed.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—There is no local general plan to increase advertising rates.

The Evening Times only recently increased its rates and Norman E. Mack, proprietor, states his subscription price may be lowered in the near future. Reduction of size and ratio of reading matter to advertising has not been taken up.

The Evening News last Friday refused 860 inches of advertising because it did not want to exceed a 40-page paper.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—An increase in advertising rates will be put in execution here within the next two weeks, but nothing has been done toward increasing subscription rates nor for a reduction of sizes.

The Times-Star has established a new ratio of reading matter to advertising reducing the latter, but the other newspapers have not as yet followed this lead.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The Journal is taking following action to meet newsprint situation: consistent policy of declining to accept returns from dealers; cutting off unnecessary issues; advertising agencies; saving of waste by careful handling of rolls in warehouse and press room; insistence on brevity in all news stories and telegraph matter; reading all free copies to advertisers and employees to a minimum.

Advertising rate increases are to go into effect December 1. The policy of restricting size of issues to the lowest possible point, established at the beginning of the war, has been maintained and ratio of reading matter to advertising, established at that time, is still in effect.

Garrett Quits the Tribune

Garet Garrett has resigned as assistant editor of the New York Tribune after two years' service in that position. The editorial page of the Tribune will be directed by Ogden Reid, its editor and publisher, and the news pages will be under the supervision of George Smith, whose appointment as managing editor was recently announced.

Demand for Space
So large a volume of advertising is offered for publication in The New York Times that owing to the limit on pages preferred by The Times, and due also to the shortage of newsprint paper, announcements frequently are crowded out.
A temporary reduction of space by all advertisers, especially those wishing bill pages, The Times suggests, would be better than the omission of advertising

"There is still a Dixie"

From Louisville to New Orleans, from Norfolk to Memphis, the Southland is the new land of this United States of ours.

Resources and possibilities, long existent and long lying dormant, are developing faster in the South than anywhere else.

The greatest per cent. increase in business of every kind is to be found in the South.

Northern people---rich people, who, a few years ago went South on pleasure trips, now live in the South, where they have invested money in development.

Southern people, natives, have been stirred out of their easy-going ways and have entered into competition with their Northern competitors ---and the South, from one end to the other is one vast hive of industry, progress, prosperity and promise.

With the coming of winter Southern population is materially increased---social activities are very pronounced and business hums.

Daily newspapers have risen to meet every demand, and, with their metropolitan appearance, full news service and standard features, carry prestige and pulling power.

National advertisers, co-operating with local merchants, increase sales through daily newspaper advertising in the South.

These are the daily newspapers:

The World's Greatest Discoveries

Have Been Made by Those Who Have Had the Inspiration to Try to Make Dreams Come True.

Folks laughed at Fulton's steamboat.
Bell's telephone was thought a toy.
Automobiles were considered impracticable.
Wireless seemed an impossibility.
Submarines were a Jules Verne imagination.
The flying machine was ridiculed and derided.

Just so with newspaper advertising. It took the necessities of winning a world's war to show its full power and usefulness.

It has turned little business into big business.
It can turn dead stock into cash over night.
It can be used by telephone or telegraph everywhere to-morrow.
It is the only appeal reaching all worth-while homes every day.
It can be used in exact accord with distribution or desire for trade stimulation.
It can be used without any possible duplication.

May We Turn a City Inside Out For You?

Mr. Advertiser, there are many things you should know about a city in which you proposed to seek a market for your goods.

Not alone perhaps because of the influence it may have on your plans for that particular city, but because that city may represent a type duplicated many times throughout the country.

And you cannot analyze the mass until you have first analyzed the unit.

If it is one of the cities where we represent a newspaper ask us about it.

Analyzing and reporting on merchandising conditions and possibilities in those cities is a part of the service we render to manufacturers and to their advertising agents without expense or obligation to them. It is done in behalf of the progressive and predominating newspapers represented by The John Budd Company in the national advertising field, and located in those important industrial and commercial centers.

If you are not already thoroughly satisfied that a wisely planned newspaper advertising campaign is the most efficient way to introduce and maintain a sale of your goods in one of these centers—pick the city and put us to the test.

We have a world of information about habits, customs, usages, likes and some dislikes and prejudices of the people, which has come with years of experience in and acquaintance with the field.

We know the leaders in the various lines of retail trade and can head you toward the live ones.

"We are at your service, any time, anywhere"

SEMI-ANNUAL REPORTS SHOW ABOUT 2 P. C. DECREASE IN AVERAGE CIRCULATIONS

General Increases in Ad Rates as Compared With April 1--Corrected List English-Language Dailies of U. S. to November 15, 1919, With Their Ad Rates as of November 1 and Circulations for 6-Months' Period Ending September 30.

AN analysis of the semi-annual newspaper data as to net paid circulations for morning, evening and Sundays and rates presented in the following pages—5 to 19 inclusive—indicates very clearly that newspaper advertising space is still, as it always has been, the cheapest as well as the best form of printed publicity.

Whilst rates have advanced, circulations as a whole have slightly decreased, due to the constant tightening of the newsprint supply, and it is of little wonder that publishers of today are confining their circulations to net paid sales when it is necessary for them to leave out day by day and week by week a volume of advertising that a few years ago would have represented velvet, praetically.

The difference in circulations, as shown in the accompanying pages, representing publishers' sworn statements of the net in the Audit Bureau of Circulations and the Government for the six months' period ending September 30, 1919, and the period ending March 31, 1919, is very small—an approximate loss between April 1st and October 1st on the aggregate of all daily and Sunday newspapers of about 2½%. October 1st, 1919 as compared with October 1, 1918 —the peak of the abnormal war demand—would show a loss in the aggregate of approximately 4%, or one million copies per day.

The outstanding feature of this compilation is undoubtedly the fact that for the first time in the history of newspaper publishing in the United States, the run of paper rate of an individual newspaper has reached the $1.00 per agate line mark, this being the rate of the New York Evening Journal, announced a short time ago. At the same time the rate of a Sunday paper has not only reached this level but exceeds it by 5 cents per line. The new rate of the New York Sunday American being $1.05 per agate line or $14.70 per inch.

Rate Increases Forced

Though the summary of this data, giving the number of dailies with circulations and rates by States and Market groups and nationally, has not been completed (this will appear in early issues of EDITOR & PUBLISHER) it is evident that rates as a whole have materially advanced during the past sixty days. Publishers face to face with continual increasing costs of every commodity and labor, and many of them not knowing where their net year's paper stock is to come from, have realized that they, too, must increase their line rate, especially the big store rates, to provide for present costs, plus profits, replacements and ample reserves with which to serve the public interest in this reconstruction period in a constructive way.

Originally this list was prepared primarily for space-buyers and, while it serves that purpose with increasing value to the benefit of daily newspaper advertising, it is not evident to many that its greatest service is to publishers, in that it is the base of the semi-annual analysis giving by States and for the nation the totals of rates and circulations.

For years the big American industries have had complete and accurate charts and data for comparative purposes in determining their laws of Supply and Demand; but it was not until EDITOR & PUBLISHER, in co-operation with BARBOUR'S ADVERTISING RATE SHEETS, presented the first complete analysis on January 18 of this year, that the newspaper industry has been able to present its claims to national business and to standardize rates and accurately appraise conditions.

Many publishers would like to compare the figures of today with those of five and ten years ago. Were such comparisons of the papers, their rates and circulation as a whole at that time available, they would be of inestimable value in guiding publishers today.

Now that this list has become a prominent and exclusive feature with EDITOR & PUBLISHER, advertisers and publishers will have always available complete facts, figures and analysis of rates and circulations from every angle.

A Basis for Rate Comparisons

To the publisher who is undetermined as to what his rate should be, who desires to compare his rate and circulation with those of his competitors at home and in other cities, this list is of especial value. In but a few moments it is possible for any one to compare rates and circulations in any cities.

Leadership in volume of circulation among American newspapers is to be accorded to William R. Hearst's New York Evening Journal and New York Sunday American as shown in the adjoining box.

Morning newspapers of largest circulation are the Chicago Daily Tribune with a net paid average as of October first last of 424,588, and the Boston Post with 407,787.

Sunday papers of largest circulations are the New York American, 876,094; the Chicago Tribune, 666,496; the Chicago Herald-Examiner, 593,170, and the New York Times, 501,650.

Evening newspapers of largest circulations are: New York Journal, 685,428; Philadelphia Bulletin, 446,311, and Chicago Daily News, 377,769.

Decreases in Big Cities

It may be interesting to note that the combined morning, evening and Sunday newspaper circulations of Chicago, Boston, New York City, Philadelphia and all of the daily newspapers of Alabama show a net decrease of 208,966 copies per day as between the net paid average as of April first and October first. This seems to be proof conclusive of the substantial quality of newspaper circulation value.

Boston dailies show a net paid daily average as October first of 1,208,908 copies per day, and a Sunday average of 1,150,054. This is a decrease over April first of 110,264 copies per day and a decrease on Sunday of 38,967.

New York City dailies show a net paid daily average at October first of 3,246,287 copies per day and a Sunday average paid of 2,317,222. This is an increase of 58,350 copies daily and a decrease of 84,819 on Sunday.

Philadelphia dailies show a net paid average at October first last of 1,120,954, and a Sunday average of 877,080. This is a decrease of 1,803 copies daily and a decrease of 20,871 copies per Sunday.

Chicago dailies show a net paid October first average of 1,621,168 and a Sunday average of 1,259,066. This is an increase of 23,504 copies daily and a decrease Sunday of 31,080.

This list emphasizes probably more than the preceeding one the unsatisfactory results obtained through Government circulation figures, and strongly emphasizes the value of A. B. C. statements.

As to Government Statements

There seems to be no uniform basis under which the individual publishers file their Government circulation statements. Some publishers will file statements covering seven-day averages, some others will file statements covering six-day averages without giving the Sunday figures, while others will file six-day figures and will also file a separate statement covering the Sunday figures. In the latter case the government figure is of some value.

However, where seven-day averages are filed in a majority of cases the results are misleading.

Without going into detail and enumerating case after case where these examples are apt to create a false idea in the minds of the advertiser or agent, a paper with say two hundred and fifty thousand net paid circulation Sunday and one hundred and thirty thousand net paid circulation daily will file a seven-day average statement showing an average circulation of one hundred and fifty thousand. This is twenty thousand greater than a paper will actually have on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday and one hundred thousand less than it has on Snnday.

Nor is this fact the only defect of the Government statements.

To prepare the accurate statistics of the daily and Sunday circulations, the actual daily average circulation should be available on all papers, and the actual net circulation should likewise be available.

What Is Meant by "Daily"?

It is only in A. B. C. reports, where the daily and Sunday figures are shown separately, and also in cases where the Friday or Saturday issue of a paper might be more or less than the average of others days, that it is possible to get the proper perspective of the circulation.

The best solution to this problem, of course, would lie in every paper filing statements similar to those of the A. B. C. If, however, this cannot be accomplished and it is hardly to be expected that it would be possible to at any time get all papers to join this Bureau, it does mean that the Government law requiring the filing of statements of ownership and circulation should be so applied that there can be no question as to what circulation figures actually represent, and there should be a separation between daily and Sunday.

Another point wherein the Government figures are misleading is the fact that in many cases the word "daily" is used. Even in referring to the dictionary it is difficult to determine in the case of a seven-day paper whether or not that particular statement covers six week-days, or seven days, which is the dictionary's interpretation of the word "daily."

We saw The Opportunity.

National advertisers wanted complete, up-to-date information about daily newspapers.

We sensed the need and supplied it. This is another evidence of EDITOR & PUBLISHER's way of making itself indispensable to both buyers and sellers of daily newspaper advertising space.

Digitized by Google

To All Advertising Agents:--

THE unlimited use of both the Telephone and Telegraph systems is hereby extended to you by without any cost to you whatever, in order that the Information Service Department of this newspaper shall be at your disposal immediately, and at all times.

THE STANDARD UNION

This is your authority to send to us all telegrams collect and to reverse all telephone charges when seeking Commercial, Industrial or Business information concerning Brooklyn, N.Y.

R. F. R. HUNTSMAN,
President

It is now possible to cover the Zanesville, Ohio, field of 140,000 people or 33,000 families with one daily newspaper combination

The Times Recorder

In the Morning and

The Signal

In the Evening

With a combined circulation of 30,000, proven by A. B. C. audit. The cost is only six cents per line.

THE SUNDAY

Times-Signal

With 10,000 Circulation

—can be added to this combination for an additional two cents per line. It can be bought separately at three and one-half cents per line flat.

This greatly simplifies covering this wonderfully productive industrial field for which the advertiser or agent will be obliged to make only one contract, one order, one schedule, one copy and the entire bill can be paid with one check.

This Zanesville combination makes it one of the easiest fields to cover and covering is as complete as any advertiser could desire because it takes his announcement into every home that can afford to buy a daily newspaper.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER furnishes vital statistics and is the only trade paper in the daily newspaper field furnishing important information to national advertisers.

Service is the keynote of every feature in EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

It pays daily newspaper publishers.

It pays National Advertisers.

It pays us.

Subscription rate, $3 per year.

Since 1817---
Connecticut's Greatest Newspaper

The Hartford Times

36,000 three-cent circulation to sell and 'way oversold in October and November.

Looks like standing-room only for December and 1920.

Doing our best to provide news for the readers, service and results for the advertisers, and paper for the presses.

We seem to have something to sell that's a little better than the other fellow's and our problem just now is to deal it out in an equitable manner.

You interests and our interests are mutual, so let's give and take!

A Territory Worth While

This news item from a recent issue of the Star-Telegram means much to discriminating national advertisers and agencies in making up their lists for 1920

NEW WEALTH PRODUCTION OF WEST TEXAS THIS YEAR WILL TOTAL $600 FOR EACH PERSON

According to the most conservative data now available, West Texas shall have produced new wealth during the year 1919 to the following staggering total:

45,000,000 bushels of wheat at $2 per bushel	$ 90,000,000
10,000,000 bushels of oats, at $1.14 per bushel	11,400,000
55,000,000 bushels of kaffir-milo, at 85c per bushel	46,750,000
1,300,000 bales of cotton, with seed, at $230 per bale, with seed	450,000,000
4,000,000 bushels of corn, at $1.45	5,800,000
146,000,000 barrels of oil, at $2.09 per barrel	305,140,000
8,600,000,000 cubic feet of salable gas at 45c per 1,000 cubic feet at well	387,000
100,000 tons of alfalfa and other hay at $45	4,500,000
20,000 tons of beef cattle	20,000,000
27,000 tons of sheep and goats	13,467,000
50,000 pounds of pecans	130,000
90,000 tons of peanuts	4,095,000
30,000 tons of vegetables	2,350,000
15,000 tons of manufactured gypsum	580,000
Value of manufactured outputs in leading towns and cities, not including refined oils, estimated at	$0,000,000
20,000 head horses and mules	2,135,000
Other crops, including fruits	1,930,000
Total	$1,019,529,000

This vast total of new wealth, the greatest ever produced in the history of West Texas, represents a total new wealth of more than $600 per capita, or more than $2,400 per family, figuring the present population of West Texas at approximately 1,680,000 persons, which is conservative.

The above figures were compiled by the Service and Research Department of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, who claim that no other region of the United States has such a large per capita production of new wealth.

So far during 1919 EDITOR & PUBLISHER has spent over two thousand dollars for statistical data proving daily newspaper advertising to be superior to and less expensive than any other form of advertising. It costs money to be of real service, but it pays, for national advertisers have found EDITOR & PUBLISHER an absolute necessity.

For explanation of key letters and markings see footnote on page 18.

FIRST IN SERVICE

How The Milwaukee Journal Helps Advertisers Secure Distribution

If The JOURNAL is "First in Circulation," First in Advertising, and First in the Hearts of Milwaukeans, it is also first in service to its advertisers.

In its Promotion Department The JOURNAL has what we are told is one of the most helpful and thoroughly equipped organizations of its kind maintained by any newspaper.

Journal Service to Advertisers includes:

Preliminary Investigation and Report of the Market without charge, for any commodity which it is proposed to advertise.

Route Lists showing name and address of every Milwaukee dealer in nearly every line of business.

Personal introductions by the members of The JOURNAL staff to selling agents, jobbers, and dealers and other assistance in making the proper local connections.

Direct Promotion Consisting of:

Portfolios containing proofs of proposed campaign. Circulars and letters to selected local list.

The JOURNAL does not undertake to sell an advertiser's goods by personal solicitation, but so far as we are able to learn, it goes farther than any newspaper in co-operating with sales crews personally and by mail.

The JOURNAL'S Promotion Department has made an intensive study of Milwaukee merchandising conditions; is conversant with every angle of this market, and is constantly in touch with developments. It is always ready to supply without charge, such information as may be needed to assist the advertiser in an intelligent analysis and handling of his appropriation in this field, and welcomes an opportunity to do this. Confer with us on your individual problems.

"(D)"—Morning except Saturday and Sunday and Sunday morning.

"(E)"—Saturday exclusively.

The asterisk (), preceding the name of a paper indicates membership in the A. B. C.; following a rate, the asterisk () indicates that the rate is flat and not subject to time or space discounts.

All figures represent the average net paid circulation for the six months' period ending September 30, 1919, except where otherwise stated.

As a further service, four characters are used with the rate figures to indicate the rate basis.

Where the minimum space rate is the 5,000-line rate no character is used.

If the rate is flat, the asterisk (*) so indicates the fact.

Where the minimum rate is based on less than 5,000 lines the ditto (") indicates the fact.

Where the minimum rate is based on more than 5,000 lines, the number character (‡) indicates the fact.

Where the publisher's card does not give space rates but does give insertion rates the rate is used and the fact that insertion rates may be earned is indicated by the double dagger (‡‡).

Two double daggers (‡‡) indicate that the rate has been estimated.

Because there is no question as to what the A.B.C. figures actually represent, A.B.C. figures are used in preference to Government figures whenever available.

The dagger (†) indicates that the figures have been taken from A.B.C. statements.

EXPLANATION OF KEY-LETTERS AND MARKINGS IN FOREGOING LISTS

THE list of papers is corrected to November 15, 1919. The circulation figures are the average net paid for the 6 months' period ending September 30, 1919, as reported to the Audit Bureau of Circulations or to the Government under the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912. The agate line rates (14 agate lines equal 1 inch) are the 5,000-line space rates applying to general "foreign" advertising in effect November 15, 1919, and include all changes in rates received by Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets up to that date.

"(A)"—Every morning.
"(B)"—Morning except Sunday.
"(C)"—Morning except Monday.
"(D)"—Morning except Sunday and Monday.
"(E)"—Morning and evening weekdays.
"(F)"—Morning and evening weekdays and Sunday morning.
"(G)"—Morning except Monday and evening except Sunday.
"(H)"—Morning except Monday and evening except Saturday and Sunday.
"(I)"—Morning except Sunday and Monday and evening except Sunday.
"(M)"—Sunday exclusively.
"(O)"—Every evening.
"(K)"—Evening except Sunday.
"(S)"—Evening ex. Sunday and Sunday morning.
"(T)"—Evening except Saturday and Sunday.

Keeping Up With the Times

Bits of information illustrating the development of The Washington Times — Selected from recent issues of The Times and here reprinted

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

An auditor whose newspaper experience covers a good many years and a good many cities is making the customary periodical examination of The Times' books, including the circulation records.

"One of the things that surprises me about The Times," he says, "is the unusually large number of back copies that you sell. I don't know any other newspaper that sells so many."

Naturally, that comment is particularly gratifying. A paper that is in demand after date of publication for copies that have been missed and for copies to send to friends must have a pretty substantial character.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

Random comment on The Times across the business office counter in the past few days:

"No trust owns it."

"I like the Heard and Seen."

"Brisbane is not afraid to say what he thinks. I don't always agree with him, but I believe he is honest."

"My kids like the comics."

"It's the only paper that has the nerve to fight the street car companies."

"I want to read the continued story."

"It stands up for the poor man."

"The Washington page is the best thing of its kind in the city."

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

Would you believe it if you were told that

One Washington newspaper, in its most recent Automotive Section—not a special issue, just the regular day of the week for news and advertising of that sort—printed 45 separate display advertisements and 106 separate advertisements on the directory page.

A year ago, up to this time in November, the same paper had published 3,128 lines of automotive advertising—a bit more than 11 columns; so far in November this year it has published 46,326 lines of automotive advertising—more than 165 columns.

It's true—and the paper is The Times.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

"Your advertising rates are too low." That was the comment of a visiting metropolitan newspaper publisher in The Times office yesterday.

"Your volume of circulation warrants higher rates; the character of your circulation justifies them; your relative position in the field makes it possible to get them; the results to the advertisers from a concentrated circulation like yours—more than 90 per cent within shopping distance—are bound to be big; your recent marked increase in circulation alone would support increased rates; your inevitable mounting expense of publication, including the jump in wood paper cost, demands them."

Nevertheless, The Times has no present intention of raising its advertising rates. It prefers the big volume, small margin business policy.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

Yesterday the story was on the subject of the development of The Times as an automotive advertising medium. Today—and deservedly—it is on the growth of The Times during the past year as an advertising medium for real estate.

In ONE issue—last Saturday—a regular issue of the paper, by the way—The Washington Times carried MORE Real Estate advertising than it did during the entire month of November, 1918!

During November, 1918, The Times carried 3,670 lines of real estate classified advertising and 1,660 lines of real estate display advertising, or a total of 5,330 lines—19 columns.

Last Saturday The Times carried 3,100 lines of real estate classified advertising and 3,925 lines of display real estate advertising, or a total of 7,115 lines—more than 25 columns.

ON THIS ONE DAY The Times carried 1,785 lines MORE advertising (real estate) than it did during the whole month of November, 1918.

So far this November (1919), up to and including November 22, The Times has carried 48,560 lines of real estate classified advertising and 14,715 lines of real estate display advertising, or a total of 63,275 lines of real estate advertising for 22 days—226 columns.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

It's too bad that the name of the store cannot be printed with this statement, but the proprietor prefers to remain unidentified when relative merits of newspapers are involved. At any rate, here are the circumstances:

One of Washington's most prominent stores, which sells sewing machines, among other things, set out to determine which newspaper would give the best results to the advertising of this article. All papers were tried out carefully and thoroughly.

A greater number of sales of sewing machines were made through the advertisements in The Times than through any other paper.

When it is kept in mind that sewing machines particularly interest the housewife and home dressmaker, the special value of Times circulation is emphasized.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

In one of the desirable sections of the city a new manager of Times' home delivery has recently been appointed to fill a vacancy—a man who has had much similar newspaper experience elsewhere.

He is surprised to find on his list so large a number of women who subscribe to The Times in their own names and have it delivered at the house every day.

As a matter of fact, the Times' records show that it is a rapidly growing custom in Washington for the woman of the family to have her own newspaper, ordered by her and brought to her regularly at a time of day when she has uninterrupted leisure to read it.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

To the Editor of The Times:

If what I hear among my friends is an index of the whole city, you must have thousands of subscribers to whom your special presentation of music news appeals most gratefully.

But I wonder how many of them have told you so.

At any rate, here's one, who is appreciative and says so. I look forward to your Thursday issue and now your Sunday issue also with keen anticipation. I know I am sure to get all the news of the music world of Washington intelligently told, and in addition, columns of general musical information of value and interest.

Sincerely,

(Miss) A. T. C——

Washington, Nov. 5, 1919.

Keeping Up With The Times

A FACT A DAY

On the subject of characteristic Times co-operation with its clients, let Mr. Edelbrock, president of the Security Signal Sales Corporation, testify. It is in a letter from him to Mr. Faulkner, The Times Automotive Editor, Mr. Edelbrock says:

"We wish at this time to express our appreciation of the manner in which you have been, and are, handling our advertising campaign.

"Your service is exceptional. Many things you do are individual and original. We have been able to check up conditions and results through you, that we could not have done any other way. You are getting us results, more than we anticipated.

"We now fully realize your statement 'that you buy advertising instead of sell it.'"
